"In this, God's world, with its wide whirling eddies and mad foam oceans, where men and nations perish as if without law, and judgment for an unjust thing is sternly delayed, dost thou think that there is therefore no justice? It is what the fool hath said in his heart. It is what the wise, in all times, were wise because they denied, and knew forever not to be. I tell thee again, there is nothing else but justice. One strong thing I find here below; the just thing, the true thing. My friend, if thou hadst all the artillery of Woolwich thundering at thy back in support of an unjust thing, and infinite bonfires invisibly waiting ahead of thee, to blaze centuries long for the victory on behalf of it, I would advise thee to call halt; to fling down thy baton, and say, 'In God's name, No!' Thy 'success?' What will thy success amount to? If the thing is unjust, thou hast not succeeded; no, though bonfires blaze from North to South, and bells ring, and editors write leading articles, and the just thing lay trampled out of sight, to all mortal eyes an abolished and annihilated thing. Success! In a few years thou wilt be dead and dark—all cold, eyeless, deaf; no blaze of bonfires, ding-dong of bells, or leading articles visible or audible to thee again to all forever. What kind of success is that!"

BEAUTIFUL IGNORANCE.—A gentleman was once riding in Scotland by a bleaching-ground, where a poor woman was at work watering her webs of linen cloth. He asked her where she went to church, what she had heard on the preceding day, and how much she remembered. She could not even tell the text of the last sermon.

"And what good can the preaching do you," said he, "if you forget it all?"

"Ah, sir," replied the poor woman, "if you look at this web on the grass, you will see that as fast as ever I put the water on it the sun dries it all up; and yet, sir, I see it gets whiter and whiter."

Richard Baxter said to his brethren, who were comforting him in his last moments—"I have pains; there is no arguing against sense; but I have peace—I have peace." "You are now drawing near your long-desired home," said one. "I believe, I believe," was his reply. When the question was put to him, "How are you?"—he promptly replied, "Almost well." To a friend who entered the chamber, he said—"I thank you for coming." Then, fixing his eyes on him, he muttered his last words, "The Lord teach you how to die."

Wesley says, "When I was young I was sure of every thing; in a few years, having been mistaken a thousand times, I was not so sure of most things as I was before; at present, I am hardly sure of any thing but what God has revealed to man."

The Sabbath Reco[illegible]er.

New York, April 4, 1850.

BEGIN THE SABBATH IN SEASON.

We are not about to call up the question, for discussion, whether the evening immediately following the sixth day of the week is a part of the weekly rest; we assume the affirmative, without stopping to prove it. Our object, at this time, is to insist upon greater strictness in sanctifying it. With some, it is no very uncommon thing for the evening to be half spent, before they are ready to enter upon the duties of the Sabbath. A farmer, for example, continues at work till the sun is nearly set. Then he must attend to many little chores, such as feeding his swine, foddering his cattle, (if it be the winter season,) collecting his fuel, milking his cows, &c. After all this, supper is to be eaten, the table to be cleared, the dishes washed, the room swept, and a variety of other little things attended to, so that it gets to be almost bedtime, before there is the least semblance of a Sabbath in his family. Wearied with the labors of the day, they all wish to retire early, and thus it happens, that no portion of the evening whatever is set apart for meditation and prayer. With the mechanic, of the city or village, the case is similar. He toils till the last moment; perhaps it is quite dark before his hammer ceases; then he stops half an hour, it may be, to talk to some one who has just happened in, and long after the holy rest has begun, he comes home to eat his evening meal. As with the farmer's family, so with his own; the work, which ought to have been done before the Sabbath began, has been kept back, and all has to be attended to late in the evening. We are persuaded, that there is no necessity for such looseness. The mechanic may just as well come home, and take his evening repast, so as to begin the Sabbath without delay. The farmer may just as well unharness his team an hour or more before sunset, have his cows milked, his cattle fed, his fuel collected, his boots cleaned, and the numerous little items of work which tend to keep the family busy, all disposed of, and be ready, at the drawing on of darkness, to enter upon such exercises as are in consonance with the sacred character of the Sabbath, as to delay the matter, and keep the family in confusion half the evening. And we think, that a man who looks forward to the return of the holy rest with eager and longing anticipations, will do so. If he remembers the Sabbath-day, as required by the commandment, he will not only think of it during the time set apart for resting, but through all the week, and in the midst of all his business, he will keep in mind that such a season is approaching, and will arrange his business with reference to it. He will be careful about getting so much work on his hands for the sixth day, that he cannot dispose of it so as to be ready for Sabbath duties when the time arrives. He will look ahead, and make his calculations anxiously, and even make it a matter of special prayer to the God, who controls all his affairs, beseeching Him so to order matters, that he shall not be hindered from entering, with calm and undisturbed mind, upon devotional exercises, at the very commencement of holy time. When it is proposed to him to make a visit, or to receive company, or to attend to any special undertaking, on the sixth day of the week, he does not heedlessly, and without thought, agree to the proposition. He first considers how it will affect his Sabbath duties. He turns it over and over in his own mind, and if he considers it likely that a compliance would intrench upon the Sabbath, he rejects it at once. He would no more think of involving himself in engagements that would stand in the way of his duty to God, than he would of so involving himself that he could not show kindness to his sick wife. In this manner he remembers the Sabbath; not only celebrates it when it comes, but anticipates it in his thoughts and affections.

Let us consider this matter in the light of a familiar illustration. A beloved friend proposes to visit you. He appoints a day for the purpose; he even sets the hour. Your desire is to treat him well; you love him too fondly to slight him. What, then, do you do? You look forward to his visit with feelings of delight. You arrange to have your work out of the way, so that you may sit down and enjoy his company. You would not treat him with such indignity as to say, upon his arrival, "I have work to attend to, and you must excuse me." He would, very naturally, think that you might have done that before. The visit was appointed, that you might enjoy one another's society; it was with that understanding that you agreed to receive it. If any one, in the mean time, proposed any other business, you said, "No, I cannot attend to it, for I expect a beloved friend to visit me that day." A compliance with such a proposition would have been, in your opinion, a downright insult to your friend. The application of all this is very easy. The Lord Jesus Christ is your beloved friend, who has appointed the Sabbath as the season for visiting your soul. By entering into covenant with Him, you have agreed to meet Him at that time, and entertain Him in your heart. True to the appointment, He comes down, but finds you otherwise occupied. He would meet you in your closet, but you are not there; you have not done your work. He would meet you in the reading of His word, but you are not ready. He would meet you in religious exercises with your family, but they are all busy. Ah, Christian, is this the way you treat your Lord? Why do you not make preparation to receive Him at the time appointed? Why do you not look forward, with eager anticipation, to the season which He has set apart for visiting your soul? You would, if you "counted the Sabbath a delight." You would, if you prized communion with Him above all the enjoyments which the world can afford.

We cannot help insisting, with earnestness, upon the strict sanctification of the evening which ushers in the holy Sabbath. We do this, not only because we regard it as a necessary part of the Sabbath, but also because of the influence which it has in preparing the mind for the public exercises of the day following. It is most important that Christians should seek some preparation of heart, before going to the sanctuary. The Word will do them but little good, if they go with their hearts full of worldliness. Let them first go to their closets, and beseech God to prepare them for listening to and profiting by his Word. Let them, by reading the Scriptures, devout meditation, and close examination of themselves, seek to expel all unholy thoughts, and get themselves into a heavenly frame of mind. Then they may go to the house of God with profit. But when do they find time for this preparation, if they do not take the evening before? The morning is not always long enough, particularly in the winter season. A person in the country, who lives several miles from the meeting-house, has but very little time in the morning for devotional exercises. After having spent a short season in secret prayer, called together his family for worship, taken his breakfast, and attended to a few other things absolutely necessary to be done, he needs all the time that is left for getting to his place of worship. Hence, if the previous evening has not been improved, it is not too much to say, that he goes to meeting without that preparation of heart which is necessary to make the exercises of the sanctuary profitable to him. This argument may not appear so strong with regard to those who live in cities, and in compact villages, though even such need more time for preparation than can well be secured in the morning, during the short days of winter. But the Sabbath was designed for the world—for all classes of men, and for men in all conditions of life. It was designed for the country, as well as for the city. And it strikes us, that the appointment of the Sabbath to begin with the going down of the sun on the sixth day of the week, was a most wise one, inasmuch as the great object of preparation for the public exercises of the sanctuary could not so well be secured by any other arrangement. No doubt the great Author of the instititution had this in view. We do, then, insist, most strenuously, that [illegible] should be diligently improved in cultivating communion with God, and in preparing the heart for the exercises of the "holy convocation."

GLIMPSES OF DOMESTIC LIFE IN CHINA—No. I.

SHANGHAI, June 4, 1849.

DEAR BROTHER UTTER,—In your last, you express a wish to know more of the every-day life of the people among whom we dwell. You complain of the "paucity of information on the subject of their domestic habits and social arrangements." You say, "We have books about their laws, religion, face of the country, &c., but nothing about those minor, and yet most interesting questions, of how they live—nothing, in short, which shows us the kitchen, sitting-room and dormitory life of the Chinese. Something of the kind is needed," &c.

Your complaint is a very just as well as a very natural one; but the cause of the deficiency, in the department you mention, can no longer be a mystery to you, who have so often followed the writers and lecturers on China as far as they could penetrate, who have only been stayed in their course of investigation by the "triple gate-way," which might not be unbarred by a mere touch from without, nor the inner sanctuary invaded and profaned through curiosity by the unbidden intrusion of "outside barbarians." The sojourners in and around Canton, whence most of the writers and lecturers on China have issued their notes, as from a central, but rather gloomy post of observation, have fully explained to you the causes, as well as the results, of this exclusiveness on the part of the "Children of the Sun." It is well known, that in these northern ports foreigners are much more kindly welcomed, and more civilly treated. Still, the customs of the Chinese are every where the same, and custom is every thing to them. It is their last appeal, in cases of controversy or doubt—their refuge from the aggressor, their strong hold in the combat, their shelter from the attack. But, like all general rules, even these have their exceptions; and these exceptions are the opportunities which must be seized upon as they present themselves, or be lost forever. These are the loop-holes through which we must peep, if we would catch a hasty glimpse of the scenes behind the curtain. I speak now of general society, for there are exceptions even greater than these; and I should do injustice to the privileges which have been granted me, should I withhold my acknowledgments for the much-desired opportunities which are often mine. Friendship—perhaps I should say, female friendship—is the only real "open sesame" to these domestic haunts—these quiet retreats of home-born love. How joyfully I welcome the talisman thus thrown to me, by the hand of that Being who placed me here, I will not attempt to say; but I am quite sure, that even the excluded Jew, as he has stood praying with his face towards the devoted but much-desired city of his love, or has placed his supplicating lips against the crevices of that wall beyond which he might not himself pass, would gladly drop from his liturgy the accustomed clause, "Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who hath not made me a woman," if he might thereby win the coveted privilege, to enter within the gates, to rebuild the temple of his God, and to aid in preparing a sanctuary for the Most High.

The outer world in China, as every where else, may be easily learned. For, as some writer has said, "whoever has seen one city, may be said to have seen the whole." I think it is the same writer, who, in speaking of Chinese hospitality, says, it is every where extended to you, but only in the shops—into their houses you are never invited to enter. This he says as a man, among the better classes of men, among merchants and scholars, and among whom are found the exceptions I first mentioned.

Very small indeed is the proportion of females who can read in China; and their almost entire seclusion from all but female society, effectually bars against them the only remaining avenue to information, cuts off the stream of knowledge, and closes the only channel through which their prisoned spirits might receive the waters of instruction. And these are the secluded occupants of those houses about which you inquire, and which are made thus inaccessible for their sakes. Has not, then, the wife of the missionary cause to rejoice, when, as a woman and a friend, she finds herself at all times welcome to the hearts and homes thus hermetically sealed from general observation—when she may lay before them the errand of mercy on which she comes, may sympathize in all their little sorrows, may sit by the bed-side of the sick, or look upon the corpse of their departed—when she may safely ask them any question, and feel that nothing is withheld from her through fear?

As such are the circumstances under which I must write, and such the opportunities from which I must draw my descriptions of domestic life in China, you will hardly expect mere abstract descriptions of general scenes. I must give them to you as I find them in their combinations. If I represent a house, it will probably be full of people, and those people my particular friends. If I describe a kitchen, it will very likely contain a "cook-rice-man," with his tea-pot, chop-sticks, and tobacco-pipe. If I show you a bed, it will perhaps be tenanted by some infirm old woman, or some sick or dying youth. But I promise you faithfulness in that which I attempt, however irrelevant many of the characters or events may seem, which I shall introduce. If any eye but your own shall peep beneath these wrappers, I only ask that they may, for the time being, stand as your substitute, the recipients of a correspondence which nothing but the sincerest friendship could have won from me, and that from the most persuasive of all considerations, "it may do good."

If I shall sometimes express myself with a zeal not according to knowledge, let at least the knowledge that does appear be accredited to experience and personal observation, and that zeal to a love for the poor perishing objects of my exertions, which will not allow me to be untrue to them, and, more than all, to a faith in the promises of God, which will not let me doubt, that even my poor labors shall not be in vain.

That the dawning of a better day has already opened upon China, no one can question. That clouds and thick darkness are yet to overcast her morning sky—that desolating storms may sweep over her, before that sun looks down from his meridian altitude—few seem to doubt. That she is destined to arise and shine, when her light is come, and the glory of the Lord risen upon her, is as certain as that the heathen shall be given to the Son for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession.

At present, I cannot promise you aught like method in my arrangement, nor, indeed, that there will be aught like arrangement in the method even of my letters to you. I can hardly consent to make you wiser than myself; and my own knowledge comes so by piecemeal, and those fragments are so diluted—the ore is so mixed with the dross and rubbish of many surroundings—that I cannot send it to you in pure, solid masses, as you get the California gold; and, as crucibles must by this time be nearly obsolete at home, why not dispense with them at once on all sides of the globe? Why not let the wealth-diggers go, gather up their treasures, and let the greedy usurers make gain each in his own way? Perhaps they will find some coins for which they did not bargain; none the less welcome, I could hope, on that account. If aught expected is not realized, at least believe that the golden streams are not all cut off. Other mines will yet be explored, and other treasures brought to light, richer and brighter than any the sun has yet shone upon.

You are already in possession of many little facts, which I have gleaned by the wayside, and which I may hereafter need to illustrate principles as they shall present themselves to my notice. Let this be my apology for what might otherwise seem a needless repetition. I mention this now, as at another time I may forget to do so.

Excuse this long prefatory letter.

Yours truly, L. M. C.

SUNDAY TRAVELING IN PENNSYLVANIA.

The recent action of the Directors of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in stopping Sunday Trains, has called forth numerous remonstrances, and led many people to examine the subject who would not otherwise have done so. The result, we doubt not, will be favorable to the cause of religious freedom. It requires but little investigation to see, that such movements, though they have the semblance of piety, may, after all, endanger interests which are dear to every liberal-minded and intelligent Christian. The doctrine that the majority have a right to dictate to the minority in matters of religion, is fraught with evil, and only evil. So far as the movements in Pennsylvania are based upon this doctrine, and calculated to establish it, they ought to be resisted. To excite and aid inquiry upon the subject, we copied from the Philadelphia Ledger, several weeks ago, an article designed to show that railroad directors have no more right to shut up their roads on one day of the week than the directors of turnpike companies have to order the closing of their gates. With the same view, we copy the following from a Philadelphia paper, and commend it to the attention of any who may have been tempted to sanction a measure which sacrifices the rights of many to the opinions of a few.

"The directors of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company have, it seems, constituted themselves conscience-keepers for the people of the State. Elected for the mere purpose of carrying on the affairs of the corporation, intrusted with the management of its business, so far as the interests of the stockholders were concerned, they have nevertheless taken upon themselves the character of Censors of Morals, and Promoters of Piety in general. They have gone out of the line of their duty as managers of a railroad, and constituted themselves a general board for the promotion of sanctity. They have taken upon themselves the responsibility of obstructing a great thoroughfare, and decided that strangers and citizens shall only travel through Pennsylvania when the bigotry of the directors of the board shall permit.

"The present board are professing Christians—they decide that we shall not travel on Sunday. The managers of the next board may be Jews—they will have a right to decide that we shall not travel on Saturday. It may be well to inquire what authority the directors of this company have to interfere with the opinions of citizens, and decide that we shall observe the day that they mark out for us. They were elected for no such purpose, and the stockholders delegated them no such power. They have usurped authority not given to them, endeavored to make themselves directors in ecclesiastical as well as railroad affairs, and directly violated the trust confided to them.

"The Pennsylvania Railroad is, by the act of incorporation, made 'a public highway,' and, as such, it should be open to all persons, at all times. The managers of the company have no right to shut it up one day in the week. simply because on that day they do not wish to travel themselves. There are people of all shades of opinion in this commonwealth, whose conscientious views are guarantied them by the constitution. There are Jews and Seventh-day Baptists among us, whose opinions, in regard to what day is the Sabbath, differ from those of the directors of the railroad company. There are thousands of people, who are not professing Christians, neither are they infidels, who believe that it is no more sinful to travel on Sunday than it is to cook a dinner. They have rights, which are to them as valuable as the bigoted opinions of the railroad company. They have as good a right to the exercise of their belief as the church-going directors. It is tyranny to restrain them. It is as arbitrary to deny them the right to travel, as it would be on the other hand to attempt to prevent pious people from attending church.

"There is no Christian Sabbath in Pennsylvania. The last decision of the Supreme Court of the State establishes that the Sunday laws are mere civil regulations, intended for the benefit of society at large, and they must in some instances yield to necessity and expediency. The Judges repudiate the idea of Christianity having anything to do with the present Sunday laws. It would be unconstitutional so to hold. No railroad, turnpike or plank road company, has a right to close its gates on the first or seventh day, and say, 'On this day our directors go to church; nobody shall travel over the road—it is against our religion for them to do so.'

"We protest against the doctrine that Christianity is to be enforced by law. It cannot be done. Men are not to be forced into religion; they must be led gently, by appeals which touch the heart; they are not to be coerced by tyranny, which stirs up opposition. When will our well-meaning pietists discover, that the Christian religion is ~~neither to be~~ advanced by sword or edict? If we lived in Turkey, the followers of Mahomet might have a right to convert us to Islamism by force. But here, Conscience is sacred. A law, directing that Christians should not worship according to the dictates of their consciences, would be atrocious tyranny—one which directs that all shall conform to the opinions of those piously inclined, is no less arbitrary. The Saviour promulgated the gospel by precept, not command; his followers at this day can expect success through no other policy.

"The directors of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, by their resolution to suspend all traveling upon their road on Sunday, have greatly exceeded their authority. A great public highway is entrusted to them. It is a business medium which, if properly conducted, will yield to the State great wealth and prosperity. It founds its claims to confidence upon the fact that it will be a business corporation, managed by business men, in a business manner. If, however, it is to be turned into a religious affair—if the traffic upon it is to be regulated by a concise attention to the saintdays, holidays, feasts and fasts of the church, it will become an injury instead of a benefit to community."

DEATH OF A GOOD MAN.—The English papers announce the death of Rev. Edward Bickersteth as having occurred on the 28th of February. His numerous publications of a religious character have been widely circulated in the United States. On his medical adviser announcing to him that there was no hope, "Yes," he replied, "there is every reason to hope;" adding other expressions indicative of his consciousness of the approaching change, and of his preparation for it.

THE WESLEYAN AGITATION IN ENGLAND.—A correspondent of the Independent says that the Wesleyan agitation continues, and gives occasion to fearful displays of evil temper and of shameless tyranny on the part of the Conference party. The preachers in many districts have been attempting to expel and degrade those who express opinions opposed to Conference tyranny. In some cases the movement has recoiled upon themselves. Mr. Bromley, a highly esteemed preacher, at Bath, has been "suspended," on account of his letters on Christian Discipline. He has been sustained by the affections and the prayers of the Christians of Bath, and preaches to large congregations in the pulpits of the nonconformist ministers there. The Methodists of York have purchased an annuity for Mr. Everett and his wife, equal in amount to the income of which he was deprived by the unrighteous doings of the Conference. At Bristol, the President of the Conference, who went down to vindicate its doings, could not get a hearing; because permission to attend was refused to the expelled preachers.

BAPTISMAL REGENERATION IN ENGLAND.—The long-pending case of Mr. Gorham and the Bishop of Exeter, has at length been decided, and decided favorably for the evangelical portion of the Church of England. Judgment was pronounced on the 8th of March, by the Master of the Rolls, Lord Langdale. The court was of opinion, that the doctrine of baptismal regeneration had been so taught and laid down in the formularies of the Church of England as to enable persons holding different views on the subject to officiate as ministers. The judgment of the court below was accordingly reversed, on the ground that the respondent, the Bishop of Exeter, had not shown sufficient cause for refusal to induct Mr. Gorham to the living to which he had been appointed. The judgment of the court was concurred in by all the judges who were present during the argument, with the exception of Vice Chancellor Knight Bruce.

MARRYING THE SISTER OF A DECEASED WIFE.—The question in regard to the Scriptural lawfulness of marrying the sister of a deceased wife, has been taken up in England by the "General Body of Protestant Dissenting Ministers of the Three Denominations," and the following opinion pronounced unanimously:—

"That this body, while partially admitting the force of those considerations which appear to some to render it inexpedient to legalize marriage with a deceased wife's sister, is yet of opinion, that it is not contrary to anything contained in the Word of God; that such marriage is not only in itself perfectly allowable, but may often be the best which an individual can contract; and that while no human law, secular or ecclesiastical, ought to forbid it—such enactments being violations of civil or religious liberty—this body believes that the abrogation of all such unnecessary and unjust obstructions to individual freedom of action, would at once promote happiness and virtue, by affording relief to the conscientious and moral, and by preventing clandestine and criminal connections."

ASSOCIATION UPON A FIRM FOUNDATION.—The Anti-State-Church Association (England) is founded upon the principle, "That all legislation by secular governments in affairs of religion is an encroachment upon the rights of conscience, and a usurpation of the Divine authority; and that the application of the resources of the State to the maintenance of any form of religious worship or instruction, is unsound in principle, hostile to liberty, and opposed to the Word of God." A triennial Conference of Delegates of this Association, is to meet in London on the 30th of April.

REBUKE OF THE WAR SPIRIT.—Lord Gough, the late Commander-in-chief of the English forces in India, recently returned to his native country, landing at Southampton. The Town Council, contrary to the usual custom in such cases, resolved not to address the returning warrior. They also passed a resolution, to the effect that war generally, and the war in India particularly, is anti-Christian, thus placing their refusal on the high ground of Christian principle. But Southampton swarms with naval and military men; and these, with the nobility and clergy, got up an address to Lord Gough.

PREACHING AND FARMING.—The Glasgow Examiner mentions that a clergyman near Marnoch wished to add a vacant farm to his glebe land, and applied to Lord Fife, the landlord: "Oh, certainly," replied his lordship, "you shall have the farm. Hand in your resignation, and my factor will settle the matter." Confounded by the unexpected reply, the young aspirant was silenced, when his lordship continued: "Preaching and farming is a bad combination; you can, therefore, make up your mind which of the livings you prefer." The reader may infer the minister's decision.

LETTERS FROM OUR MISSIONARIES.—By the ship Panama, which arrived at New-York last Sabbath, we have letters from our brethren in China up to Dec. 1, 1849, at which time they were in good health, and cheerfully prosecuting their arduous work. Mr. and Mrs. Tobey, missionaries of the Southern Baptist Board, came passengers in the Panama.

THE GREAT TRIAL IN BOSTON.

The trial of Prof. John W. Webster for the murder of Dr. George Parkman, was brought to a close, on Sabbath night last, by a verdict of "Guilty." The examination of witnesses lasted ten days, and resulted in establishing the main facts which were published at the time of Prof. Webster's arrest, viz: that the victim was decoyed to a laboratory in the Medical College, under pretence of paying him money which had long been due; that the bloody deed was there committed, at an hour when noises would not be likely to excite surprise; and that the dead body was cut up into fragments, and a part of it burnt, with a view to prevent its identification. The testimony for the prosecution went to prove that the dismembered body found secreted in Dr. Webster's private apartments was that of Dr. Parkman, and the chain of circumstantial evidence left little doubt on any mind, that the remains were placed there by Webster, and that he had been engaged in the peacemeal destruction of them by burning them in his furnace. The defense labored to show, from the past character of the accused, and from his course between the time of Dr. Parkman's disappearance and the discovery of the remains, that he could not have committed the deed. They also produced three or four witnesses to testify that they saw Dr. Parkman after the time when the indictment charges that he was killed; but these witnesses were confused, and their testimony was in some respects so inconsistent with well-known facts, that it had but little weight. Previous to the case being submitted to the Jury, Prof. Webster made a short speech, in which he attempted to explain some of the circumstances which appeared so dark against him, and even went so far as to blame his counsel for not bringing forward all the evidence with which he had furnished them. The Jury retired at eight o'clock in the evening, and at eleven returned with a verdict of "guilty." The sentence subsequently pronounced by the Judge is as follows:—

"That you, John W. Webster, be removed from this place, and detained in close custody in the prison of this county, and thence taken, at such time as the Executive Government of this Commonwealth may by their warrant appoint, to the place of execution, and there be hung by the neck until you are dead—And may God, in his infinite goodness, have mercy on your soul."

JOHN CALDWELL CALHOUN.—This eminent statesman died at Washington on Sunday morning last, aged sixty-eight years and fourteen days. He was born in Abbeville District, South Carolina, in 1782, of an Irish father and a Virginian mother. In 1804 he graduated from Yale College, and immediately began the study of law in the school of Judge Reeves at Litchfield. Afterward he removed to Charleston, where he was admitted to the bar in 1807, and very soon attained a large and lucrative practice. In 1811 he first entered Congress, and his movements since that time have been familiar to every reader. He filled the office of Secretary of War in 1817, and was elected Vice President of the United States in 1825.

ANOTHER AWFUL ACCIDENT ON THE SABBATH.—We last week placed together about a dozen railroad accidents which had recently occurred on the Sabbath. Another and more destructive accident is now to be added to the list. At 2½ P. M., Saturday, March 22d, the steamer Troy, Capt. Williams, from Sandusky, attempted to enter Buffalo harbor, but ice preventing steered for Black Rock. When just entering Niagara River, off the head of Black Rock pier, her boiler exploded with a terrible report, blowing a part of her upper machinery and sundry of her passengers, overboard. The whole forward part of the boat above the boiler was made a mass of ruins. There were about forty passengers on board; those in the cabin at the moment were not injured, but none of those above or near the boiler escaped. Up to the present time, thirteen persons are known to have died from the effects of the explosion. It is feared that some were drowned, and carried over the Falls, whose names will never be known.

REVIVAL AT ESSEX, CT.—The Christian Secretary learns, by a letter from a friend at Essex, that the churches there have been favored with a most gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit for the past six or eight weeks. Baptists, Congregationalists and Methodists have shared in the work. "It may be reasonably computed," says the writer, "that not less than two hundred hopeful conversions have been the result of this glorious revival, up to the present time. Forty-two have already followed their blessed Master in the ordinance of baptism, and several more are expected soon to follow, while others are still anxious to know what they shall do to be saved."

NEW YORK STATE NORMAL SCHOOL.—The Annual Report of the Executive Committee of the State Normal School of New York has been published. The following table will show the number of pupils in each term, and also the number and sex of the graduates:—

General Intelligence.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. SECOND-DAY, March 25.

The early part of the session was occupied by Messrs. Webster and Hale in a discussion whether the recent speech of the former on the slavery question was consistent with the sentiments expressed in his speeches years ago in relation to Texas.

Mr. Douglass, from the Committee on Territories, reported a bill to admit California into the Union, and a bill organizing the Governments of Utah and New Mexico.

[Utah is said to be the country between New Mexico and California. Its appellation is derived from the Utah Indians, a fierce and warlike tribe, living on the Great Basin and about the head waters of the Rio Grande; they have already given their appellation to Utah Lake, about a hundred miles south of the Salt Lake. The proposed territory, we presume, includes the Mormon community of Deseret.]

Mr. Hunter having the floor, addressed the Senate at length upon the question of slavery, maintaining the right of the South to take their slaves into the territories, and picturing the evils which would result from emancipation.

Mr. Upham obtained the floor, and the subject was postponed until Second-day next.

House of Representatives.

The bill to supply deficiences in the appropriations of the present fiscal year, was taken up, and, after some amendments, passed.

The California question then came up, and Mr. Thurston, of Oregon, defended California against the charge of having formed her State Constitution under the influence of the Federal Government. Mr. Breck, of Kentucky, followed in a southern speech.

In Senate. THIRD-DAY, March 26.

Mr. Clemens presented petitions from citizens of Alabama, praying that the blessings of slavery might be extended to every State in the Union.

Mr. Foote moved that the bill organizing the Territorial Governments of Utah and New Mexico be taken up, for the purpose of making it the special order of an early day. This motion led to an exciting dispute between Messrs. Benton and Foote. Mr. Benton, as the friend of California, gave notice to those who desired her admission, that they must stand by her. California was entitled to the consideration of the Senate, and her right was not to be postponed. Her bill was first reported, and as her friend he gave notice that from this time henceforth he intended to have the subject pressed and urged upon the Senate until it was definitely acted upon. He objected to giving the territorial bill precedence. Mr. Foote replied with much warmth, indulging in a personal attack upon Mr. Benton's course, impugning the motives of his action, and intimating that his new-born friendship for California was not for the sake of her people, but because of the presence here of her Senators, whose admission to back him up and sustain him in the Senate, he was looking for with most feverish anxiety. He also contended that California had no precedence by right. Mr. Benton replied, and characterized the attacks which had been made upon his motives as false and cowardly. This brought up Mr. Foote, who denied the charge of cowardice, and concluded by saying, that whenever Mr. Benton was prepared to hold himself amenable to the laws which govern gentlemen, he was prepared to meet him on that footing. By this time the excitement was so great that the Vice-President was obliged to call the gentlemen to order in the midst of their colloquy. The motion pending was laid on the table.

Mr. Clay's Compromise Resolutions then came up, and Mr. Chase spoke in vindication of the course pursued by the great body of anti-slavery agitators.

House of Representatives.

An exciting scene occurred in the House soon after it was opened. Preston King charged the Speaker with causing an Assistant Clerk to mutilate the journal by erasing a motion he made on the 13th instant, and substituting one that he did not make. Mr. King desired to stop debate on the California bill on a certain day. The resolution incorporated with the bill the California Message, which Mr. King did not incorporate. Speaker Cobb called on ex-Speaker Winthrop to take the chair, and then explained very clearly his actions. A clerk, he said, had filled up the blank under his direction. After some very warm remarks, and a refusal, on the part of Mr. King, to withdraw his charge, a committee of nine was appointed to investigate the matter.

The California question was then taken up, and Mr. Harris, of Illinois, advocated the admission of California, and denounced the Nashville Convention.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, March 27.

After the reception of petitions and reports from committees, Mr. Benton complained that Mr. Foote, in revising the report of his remarks in the passage between them on the previous day, had left out what he did say, and substituted what he did not, thereby sending forth to the country an entirely false statement of the matter. Mr. Foote admitted that he had changed the report, but maintained that he had not varied its sense, and had made no alterations which he had not a right to make. He ended his explanation with a direct provocation to Mr. Benton to settle the difference by a duel, to which the latter replied by a scornful laugh.

When these explanations were concluded, Mr. Chase completed his able speech on the California slavery question.

House of Representatives.

Mr. Winthrop presided, by request of Mr. Cobb.

The vote passing the bill for the extension of the Woodworth Planing Machine Patent, was re-considered, and the bill laid on the table.

The California question was then taken up, and George Ashmun, of Massachusetts, made a strong speech in favor of admission.

In Senate. [illegible]-DAY, March 28.

Mr. Benton gave notice of a [illegible] providing for the construction of a rail[illegible] from St. Louis to San Francisco.

Mr. Clay's resolution, discountenancing the practice according funeral honors to the memory of members of Congress dying during the recess of Congress, was taken up, and adopted.

The Senate resumed the consideration of Mr. Foote's motion for a Select Committee on the slavery question, and Mr. Baldwin spoke in favor of the admission of California, and the exclusion of slavery from the territories. Before his speech was finished, a motion prevailed to adjourn over to Second-day.

House of Representatives.

Mr. Winthrop retained the chair.

Mr. Miller, of Ohio, introduced a resolution calling upon the President for information relative to the Puget's Sound Company, to the Hudson Bay Company in Oregon, and to individual British subjects in that territory. The resolution lies over.

The California question was discussed at length by Mr. Averett, of Va., and Mr. Chandler, of Pa.

House of Representatives. SIXTH-DAY, March 29.

Much time was spent in considering a bill appropriating one hundred thousand dollars to the captors of the frigate Philadelphia in the harbor of Tripoli—the design of the appriation being to encourage acts of gallantry in the navy. The bill was laid on the table; yeas 104, nays 58.

Mr. Holmes, from the Committee to investigate the charge against the Speaker of mutilating the journal of the House, made their report. In the opinion of the Committee, there was no mutilation of the journal, but a proper correction, under the authority of the Speaker, imposed by the rules of the House. The report was adopted and ordered printed; after which the House adjourned to Second-day.

THE CLIMATE OF CALIFORNIA.—Ex-Gov. Shannon, in a letter written to a friend in St. Clairsville, dated San Francisco, Jan. 29, 1850, says :—

"I regret that my letter that was published in the Gazette influenced any one to come to this country—it was not so intended. This is not the country for any citizen to come to. Except the gold, which is all it has been represented to be, the country is worthless; and the climate is a bad one. The time will come when this opinion will be entertained by all. I wish, therefore, to express the opinion to all who may feel a desire to come here, that they had better remain at home; that the chances for doing any thing in this country, taking into consideration the probability, nay, the certainty of being sick, is greatly against them. This being my opinion, I desire no one to come here on the strength of what I have said. It is a country of gold; when that is said, all is said."

STATISTICS OF MEMBERS OF ASSEMBLY.—By the New-York statistical table of the Members of Assembly, we learn that there are in that body, 17 bachelors; 2 widowers; 104 married; 13 whose ancestors came from Ireland; 8 from Scotland; 78 from England; 1 from France; 14 from Holland and Germany; 8 from Wales. 11 are under 30 years of age. John J. Townsend of New-York is the youngest member—his age being 24. Thomas Truslow, also of New-York, is the oldest member—being set down at 63. John P. Davis of Ulster, is the heaviest man, weighing 264. As is proper, his paternal ancestor is from Holland. There are but two others weighing over 220. The lightest men are Messrs. Raymond and Wing, each weighing 120. Fifteen of the members are six feet in hight; three 6 feet 1 inch; and one (Calvin Pease of Washington, born in Vermont, of course) 6 feet 2 inches. The hight of the smallest man is 5 feet 5 inches.

* * *

INCOME OF NEW-JERSEY.—The receipts into the State Treasury of New-Jersey, for the year ending January 1, 1851, are thus estimated by the Treasurer :—

Transit duties from Camden and Amboy Co.	$35,301 68
From the Delaware and Raritan Canal	22,122 32
New-Jersey Railroad	11,875 65
Tax on capital stock	12,500 00
Dividends on stock (Railroad)	20,000 00
Balances from the Railroad Companies	10,694 63
From other sources	6,300 00
Balance in the Treasury, Jan. 1, 1850	9,961 20
Total	$128,755 28

The expenditures during the present year are estimated at $128,050. It will be seen from the above, that with the exception of the very small sum of $6,300, the whole revenue of New-Jersey is derived from Railroad and Canal Companies; so that, instead of the citizens of that State being called upon to contribute to the expenses of their own Government, those expenses are in a great measure borne by the citizens of other States.

A LARGE REWARD.—Through the vigilance of officer A. M. C. Smith, Walter R. Jones, President of the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company, and Joseph Walker, President of the Mercantile Insurance Company, about three months since recovered nearly $10,000 in gold dust, which was consigned to them from California, and which was being conveyed to this city on board the steamer Oregon. It was abstracted from the boxes containing it by boring holes in the bottom. After the robbery was known in this city, a reward of $4,000 was offered for its recovery. Mr. Smith went to work, and by rigid perseverence ascertained that the dust was deposited at the Mint in Philadelphia, and at once took measures to arrest the parties making the deposit, and soon succeeded in recovering nearly all the stolen property, which service entitled him to the reward.

DREADFUL SUICIDE NEAR PRINCETON.—On the 18th inst., Mrs. Alice Wickoff, of Millstone, cut her throat with a razor in a temporary fit of insanity. Mr. Wickoff had been sitting with her a short time previously to the commission of the fatal deed; but left the room a few minutes to attend to something in the yard, and on his return found his wife lying on the floor, dead, with her throat cut from ear to ear. Her babe, which was only a few weeks old, lay by her side, literally drenched with its mother's blood. Twice, a few days before, she had jumped into a well, from which she had been rescued by her husband, who kept a watchful eye on her movements. She was young, beautiful, and highly esteemed, and leaves two children. Several of her ancestors committed suicide.

The steamer Cora has been sunk in the Missouri river near Brunswick.

FRUITS IN CHINA.—The November number of the London Missionary Magazine says: "At Hongkong our missionary brethren are receiving, in connection with their ministry, fresh proofs of the power and grace of their divine Master. The Spirit of Life has continued to move upon the hearts of the people, and three more converts have been added to the native church—the immediate precursors, we may hope, of a much larger addition to that little flock of Christian believers. The eldest of these new disciples is a man in the prime of life, possessing excellent natural gifts, and well versed in the literature of his country. He appears to have made an unreserved surrender of himself to the Lord Jesus, and promises to be a burning and a shining light among his countrymen. His fellow converts, though less advanced in years, have displayed remarkable decision of character, and great boldness in the faith; and, constrained by the love of Christ, they are preparing to devote themselves, in an active course of public service, to the extension of his kingdom."

* * *

PRUSSIC ACID IN CHOLERA.—In the London Medical Times (allopathic) of Nov. 12, 1849, Dr. Downing mentions his having used Prussic Acid "in extreme collapse with manifest advantage." Mr. Shea, at Dr. D.'s suggestion, "tried it in more than one hundred cases of Cholera, and stated his conviction that it was superior to anything that he had ever before employed. He had given it to children as young as nine months old with excellent effect, and he had never in any case found prejudicial effects follow its use." Both of these gentlemen are of the allopathic or regular practice.

* * *

ORNAMENTAL TREES.—The young men of Haverhill, Mass., have formed themselves into a society under the name of "The Shenstones," for the purpose of ornamenting their village with trees and shrubbery. At a levee, held the other day for the benefit of the society, addresses were made by several gentlemen, and the handsome sum of $265 received in aid of the funds. An original "Song of the Shenstones," was sung by the large company of six hundred persons, to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne," with fine effect. Two or three hundred dollars would go a good way in beautifying any village in the country.

SUMMARY.

The Courrier des Etats Unis alledges that Mr. Collier, the Collector at San Francisco, has seized four French vessels for having on board brandy in bottles instead of in casks of not less than five gallons each. The utmost leniency appears to have been shown to the violators of the Customs law, inasmuch as the Collector contented himself with declaring the brandy confiscated, and gave over the vessels and their cargoes to the consignees. Four vessels from Bordeaux had been seized for breaches of the Customs laws.

A tornado occurred in Milledgeville, Ga., on the 15th inst. The gale, or whirlwind, was terrific for 25 or 30 minutes, during which time there was a great destruction of trees, fences, &c., in the country. In Milledgeville, the copper on the roof of the Government House was entirely blown off, rolled up, and carried a distance of 200 yards. The metal roof of the cotton factory was also blown off. The State House, Penitentiary, and several other buildings, were considerably injured.

The greatest event of recent occurrence in England is the experimental opening of the great tubular bridge; it was the triumph of modern skill. An aggregate weight of three hundred tons was slowly drawn through without any sensible deflection being observed. Finally, a train of two hundred tons of coal was allowed to rest for two hours on the centre of the tube. The result of this severe test was a deflection of $\frac{4}{10}$ths of an inch!

A letter in the Boston Post, from South Weymouth, relates that a resident of that place, happening to take a ramble through a piece of woods, on Sunday, found inextricably entangled amid some trees, a vehicle called a buggy—the horse alive, but emaciated, and almost frantic with hunger. The horse and buggy had been missing four weeks, the animal having strayed away, as is supposed, from Abington.

Wm. Cobb, Esq., was chosen Treasurer of Warwick, Mass., in the year 1802, and has held that office ever since, with the exception of one year, and that year the papers were not removed from his office. He is now in his 80th year, is Postmaster, and on declining a re-election to the office of Treasurer, the town passed a vote of thanks for past services.

Land warrants are changing hands at about the following prices :—

	Bought.	Sold.
Regular—assigned on the back	$128	$135
Regular—with attached papers	125	132

The risk on warrants is so great that responsible brokers will not guarantee them without making five to seven dollars each. Some few forty-acre warrants are in the market—they are bought by the brokers at $42, and sold at $45.

The Seneca Observer says that Mr. Alpheus Miller, liquor merchant of Auburn, came to his death at Waterloo, on Saturday last, in consequence of drinking too much liquor. He was challenged by an individual to test their respective powers of drinking, and Miller fell a victim to his folly. His competitor escaped by vomiting the liquor from his stomach ere it had taken effect.

A writer in the Railway Times estimates the depreciation of railroads at about fourteen per cent. on their cost, and says that the depreciation on a new road is as rapid as on an old one. He complains that the annual reports of the companies make no note of this usually.

A Washington letter writer says: "Every day we notice the most ultra Southerners and the most ultra Northerners cigaring and laughing and talking together in private, thus showing that they love more to crack jokes than heads, and prefer the smoke of a cigar to that of a pistol."

The Legislature of Virginia, at its recent session, made an appropriation of $10,000 for the purpose of testing the efficacy of an invention, whereby locomotives can be made to ascend and descend inclined planes with little difficulty.

The cholera is spreading along the valley of the Mississippi, especially in the lower parts, and appears in many places with great malignancy. In the town of Trinity, La., thirty miles from Natchez, almost the whole population died or fled, and ten or twelve physicians hardly saved a patient who was seized. Several towns in Mexico are visited. A company of forty-eight emigrants from Georgia to Texas, were attacked near Vicksburg, and in five days ten of them were dead

A Bermuda paper of March 12th says that the steamer Wilson G. Hunt, George J. Spall, master, of and from New York, bound to California, arrived at St. Georges on the previous Sunday in a most deplorable condition; leaky, foremast gone, and her upper works nearly torn to pieces, having narrowly escaped foundering at sea during a violent gale of wind.

The Albany Evening Journal says that Mills, the arrested P. M. of Hogansburgh, escaped from the Whitesboro jail on Monday night by boring off the fastenings of his cell. His wife is supposed to have aided him, as she has exhibited the most heroic devotion for him from the moment of his arrest. She has shared his prison cell most of the time.

Hon. Robert Dale Owen, of Indiana, was robbed a few days since, at Mt. Vernon, in that State, of $510. He had received the sum in bills from a plank road company, to whom he had loaned that amount. On retiring at night he left his clothes containing the bills at his bedside, and on awakening in the morning discovered his loss.

Executive Committee of Eastern Association.

The Executive Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist Eastern Association will hold a session at the house of S. S. Griswold, in Hopkinton, R. I., on the 10th day of April, at 10 o'clock A. M. S. S. GRISWOLD, Cor. Sec.
HOPKINTON, March 27, 1850.

Medical Notice.

DR. T. A. MAXSON, Botanic Physician, takes this method to inform the friends of Medical Reform, that he is located in Watson, N. Y., one mile east from Beach's Landing. Believing that there are vegetable remedies adapted to the cure of all diseases, he consequently uses no other. Calls attended to without delay. [32m3.] JANUARY, 1850.

Christian Psalmody—Pocket Edition.

IN compliance with requests from various quarters, the publisher of the New Hymn Book—Christian Psalmody—has issued a second edition, on lighter paper and with smaller margins, by which the bulk and weight of the books are reduced about one-third, rendering them much more convenient for carrying in the pocket. The price is also reduced 12½ cents per copy. Those wishing books, of either edition, can now be supplied. Price of the larger edition from 75 cents to $1 50, according to the style of binding. Price of the smaller edition from 62½ cents to $1 00. Orders should be addressed to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Factory Establishment for Sale.

THE subscriber will sell the well-known Establishment, called the Bethel Mill, situated in Hopkinton, R. I., consisting of the factory, 60 by 28 feet, two and a half stories high, and a good stone basement room under the whole building; a cloth-house, 16 by 20, one and a half stories; a dye-house, 20 by 30, with suitable kettles; a wash-box, &c.; a small smith-shop for repairing; three dwelling-houses, a barn, and about six acres of land. The buildings are mostly new, the factory and dye-house having been erected in 1848, where one was burnt in that year. A good water privilege of about five feet fall, with a sufficient reservoir to supply the mill through all the drought of summer, being 114 acres, 12 feet deep, averaging from 8 to 10 feet the whole surface.

The present occupants run twenty looms on plaid linseys, and are entitled to its occupancy until the money loaned by them towards its erection (over 3,000 dollars) shall be paid, at a rent of about six hundred and eighty dollars per annum, or otherwise paid in money. It is pleasantly situated, in a good neighborhood, and help easily obtained. About half of the purchase money must be paid within the year, and the purchaser, if he chooses, can let the rest remain to be liquidated by the rent, which will take between six and seven years. It will be a good investment for any one desirous of obtaining such an establishment, or who has money to loan. JACOB D. BABCOCK.
HOPKINTON, Feb. 25th, 1850. 38w3.

Sabbath Tracts.

The American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its Depository, No. 9 Spruce-st., N. Y., viz:—

No. 1—Reasons for introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment to the consideration of the Christian Public. 28 pp.
No. 2—Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 52 pp.
No. 3—Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 28 pp.
No. 4—The Sabbath and Lord's Day—A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 52 pp.
No. 5—A Christian Caveat to the Old and New Sabbatarians. 4 pp.
No. 6—Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.
No. 7—Thirty-six Plain Questions, presenting the main points in the Controversy; A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian; Counterfeit Coin. 8 pp.
No. 8—The Sabbath Controversy—The True Issue. 4 pp.
No. 9—The Fourth Commandment—False Exposition. 4 pp.
No. 10—The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed. 16 pp.
No. 11—Religious Liberty Endangered by Legislative Enactments. 16 pp.
No. 12—Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention is invited:—

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pages.

The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.

An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.

Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to GEORGE B. UTTER, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

History of Romanism.

In a large octavo volume of 750 pages, printed in large type, on the finest paper, and embellished with more than fifty engravings, chiefly from Original Designs, and bound in muslin, extra gilt. Price $3. THE HISTORY OF ROMANISM, from its earliest origin to the present time, by the Rev. John Dowling, D. D. A new and enlarged edition, with the Author's last additions, and a Supplement, containing a Sketch of the Life of Pope Pius IX., &c.

The best evidence of the intrinsic value of this remarkably popular work is to be seen in the fact that within the comparatively recent period of its first publication, the extraordinary number of 17,000 copies have been disposed of.

The following is an extract from a letter from the Rev. Dr. Giustiniani, the converted Roman Catholic priest, who is abundantly qualified by education, observation, and extensive study, to testify to the fidelity and value of a "History of Romanism."

"If the reader wishes to be acquainted with the errors of Romanism, he has only to open the pages of Dowling's History. If the reader is anxious to read an epitome of the history of the popes, their ambition; their intrigues; their avariciousness; their tyranny; their superstitions, and their mummeries, he can here find all proved and authenticated by the most accredited authors of the Church of Rome." L. GIUSTINIANI.

"It reflects much credit on the skill, patience, industry, and judgment of the author; he appears very justly to have conceived the idea of a work, which has long been regarded as a desideratum by a large portion of those interested in the great controversy with the Romanists."—Protestant Churchman.

"We think it an able work, comprising the results of extensive reading and research, and well adapted to fill an important chasm in our literature.—Lutheran Obs.

"We regard it as a most important addition to the historical and religious literature of the age. Its contents form a rich storehouse of historical instruction, which should be placed within the reach of every family."—N. Y. Christian Intelligencer.

"It presents a succienct, but sufficiently full, history of the rise, progress, errors, cruelties, and present condition of the Papacy, authenticated by reference to the most undoubted historic sources, related in a spirited, engaging, and impressive style, and arranged in the most lucid manner. It abounds in facts and incidents, and, with its beautiful illustrations, is better adapted to furnish a vivid and impressive portraiture of Romanism as it is, than any other book we know of."—N. Y. Evang.

"The detached portions of Romish history which were every where to be met with, needed to be brought together and presented in systematic order. The reading of one book thus becomes better and cheaper than the reading of many."—Boston Recorder.

"It is written with the ready, popular eloquence, for which the well-known author is distinguished, and cannot fail to arrest attention to the controversy of which it treats. It is a strongly Protestant work, and exhibits the deformities of Popery with great power."—N. Y. Recorder.

"The author appears to have brought to the execution of this great work, unwearied industry, genuine and thorough scholarship, and scrupulous fidelity."

RUFUS BABCOCK, late Pres. of Waterville College.

Miscellaneous.

THE OLD MAN THINKING.

Of what is the old man thinking,
 As he leans on his oaken staff!
From the May-day pastime shrinking,
 He shares not the merry laugh;
But the tears of the old man flow,
 As he looks on the young and gay—
And his gray head moving slow,
 Keeps time to the air they play;
The elders around him are drinking,
 But not one cup will he quaff—
Oh, of what is the old man thinking,
 As he leans on his oaken staff?

'T is not with a vain repining,
 That the old man sheds a tear;
'T is not for his strength declining—
 He sighs not to linger here.
There's a spell in the air they play,
 And the old man's eyes are dim,
For it calls up a past May-day,
 And the dear friends lost to him.
From the scene before him shrinking,
 From the dance and the merry laugh,
Of their calm repose he is thinking,
 As he leans on his oaken staff.

CULTURE OF THE GRAPE.

It is estimated that over three hundred acres are now planted with the grape vine, within a circuit of twelve miles round Cincinnati; nearly two-thirds of which were in bearing last year, producing, notwithstanding the rot, so injurious to many, about 50,000 to 60,000 gallons of wine. The Catawba is the great wine grape, and principally cultivated. The Cape is next, though but few are planted. The Isabella is not profitable for table use. In answer to inquiries upon the subject, a Mr. Buchanan gives through Cist's Advertiser, the following information relative to the mode of cultivating the vine for wine-making.

SELECTING AND PREPARING THE GROUND.

A hill side, with a southern aspect, is preferred. If the declivity is gentle, it can be drained by sodded, concave avenues; but if too steep for that, it must be benched or terraced, which is more expensive. In the autumn and winter, dig or trench the ground with a spade all over, two feet deep, turning the surface under. The ground will be mellowed by the frosts of winter.

PLANTING.

Bay off the ground in rows, 3 by 6 feet; put down a stick twelve or fifteen inches long, where each vine is to grow. The avenues should be 10 feet wide, dividing the vineyard into squares of 120 feet. Plant at each stick 2 cuttings, separated 5 or 8 inches at the bottom of the hole, but joined at the top; throw a spadefull of rich vegetable mould into each hole, and let the top eye of the cutting be even with the surface of the ground, and if the matter is dry, cover with half an inch of dry earth. The cuttings should be prepared for planting by burying them in the earth immediately after pruned from the vines in the spring; and by the latter end of March, or early in April, which is the right time for planting, the buds will be swelled so as to make them strike root with great certainty. Cut off close to the joint at the lowest end, and about an inch in all above the upper.

PRUNING.

The first year after planting, cut the vine down to a single eye, (some leave two;) the second, leave two or three; and the third three or four. After the first year, a stake 6½ or 7 feet long must be driven down firmly by each plant, to which the vines must be kept neatly tied with willow or straw as they grow. Late in February, or early in March, is the right time for spring pruning in this climate. Summer pruning consists in breaking off the lateral sprouts and shoots, so as to leave two strong and thrifty canes or vines—one of which is to bear fruit the ensuing season, and the other to be cut down in spring pruning to a spur to produce new shoots. These may be let run to the top of the stakes, and trained from one to the other, until the wood is matured, say in August or September, when the green ends may be broken off. One of these vines is selected next spring for bearing fruit, and cut down from four to six joints, and bent over and fastened to the stake in the form of a bow. The other is cut away, as well as the fruit-bearing wood of the last year, leaving spurs to throw out new wood for the next, and thus keeping the vine down to within 1½ to 2 feet of the ground. Nip off the ends of the fruit-bearing branches two or three joints beyond the bunches of grapes, but do not take off any leaves. If both the cuttings grow, take one up, or cut it off under the ground, as but one vine should be left to each stake.

CULTURE.

The vineyard must be kept perfectly clean of weeds and grass, and hoed two or three times during the season. Keep the grass in the avenues around, down close. About every third year put in manure, by a trench the width of a spade, and three or four inches deep, just above and near each row; fill in with two or three inches of manure and cover up with earth.

WINE-MAKING.

Gather the grapes when very ripe, pick off the unsound and unripe berries. The bunches are then washed in a mashing tub, or passed through a small mill, breaking the skin but not the seed, and thrown into the press, and the screw applied until the skins and seed are pressed dry.

FERMENTATION.

This process is very simple. The juice is put into clean casks in a cool cellar, and the casks filled within about four or five inches of the bung, and the bung put on loosely. The gas escapes, but the wine does not run over. In from two to four weeks, generally, the fermentation ceases, and the wine clears; then fill up the casks and tighten the bungs. In February or March, rack off into clear casks. In the spring a moderate fermentation will again take place; after that, the wine fines itself, and is ready for bottling or barreling. Use no brandy or sugar if the grapes are sound and well ripened. Keep bunged or corked tight, and in a cool cellar, and the wine will improve by age for many years.

R. BUCHANAN.

N. B. Some vineyards, in good seasons, have produced at the rate of 600 to 800 gallons to the acre; but this is rare. The usual yield is 300 to 400 gallons, when there is but one rot. A bushel of grapes, if well ripened, will produce three and a half to four gallons of wine.

By proper economy, a man may have a vineyard of several acres in a few years, without feeling the expense to be burdensome. Commence by trenching one acre in the winter, and planting it out in the spring; next year another acre, and so on, for five or six years. After the first year, he will have his own cuttings from the first acre, and also grapes enough to pay for the cost of planting the succeeding additions to his vineyard. If he has suitable timber on his own land, the stakes can be got out in the winter with but little outlay in money.

Some prefer planting in rows, four by five; others, four and a half by four and a half; and, on level land, three and a half by six, or even seven feet.

FRUITS AND FRUIT CULTURE.

From a report in the Albany Evening Journal of a discussion at the Rooms of the New York State Agricultural Society, on the subject of Fruit and Fruit Culture, we copy the following :—

Mr. Johnson stated that he had received from Mr. James Lennon, of Rochester, a parcel of Isabella Grapes, to be distributed among gentlemen present at this meeting. These grapes were represented to have been packed about the 15th of October last, in saw dust from a wood-turner's shop. They were gathered and packed in barrels on the same day, and were then placed in a cool room, where they would not freeze. They kept well, and are now selling at Rochester for twelve and a half cents per pound. They were pronounced of fine quality by all who tasted them.

Judge Miller, of the Senate, had understood that old varieties of grapes produced less seeds than the new ones—that the seeds diminish as the varieties increase in age. He practices letting grape vines grow from seed. He had raised many in this way, some of which had borne fruit, and he should continue the practice in the hope of obtaining valuable native varieties. The Grey Tokay and Miller's Burgundy grow well in his garden at Rochester, and the latter will survive the winter without covering, but the frost injures the buds so that it does not produce half so much fruit as when it is slightly covered. He raises peaches, also, from seed—has a seedling Melocoton, which he prizes highly. He was in favor of giving grapes a strong root, as this increases the productiveness. The roots can be made as long as may be desired, by simply burying the vine a little below the surface of the ground—it will strike root at every joint. He thought the best mode of preserving grapes was to pack them in cork dust. If the dust is not perfectly dry, it should be kiln dried, and the grapes should be dry when packed; if any burst their skins they should be thrown away. He has had grapes keep all winter by spreading them on a garret floor, and covering them with "comforters." Cotton batting would probably do as well, but is not so convenient to handle.

Judge Miller related his experience in the use of salt around plum trees. His object was to prevent the destruction of the fruit by the curculio. It had not much effect in this respect, but he had a great crop of plums, though this fruit generally failed that season. He thought the salt was the chief cause of the unusual product.

Mr. Curtis related his experience in grafting grape vines, in which he had been very successful. He grafts the Isabella on roots of the wild varieties. It is done in the common mode of cleft or "split" grafting. The roots are set in the ground so as to have the junction of the scion with the root fairly below the surface. They grow well, some having borne the same season they were grafted. He takes pieces of roots fifteen to eighteen inches long.

Mr. Johnson read an extract from the report from the Wayne County Agricultural Society, from which it appeared that the quantity of dried fruit exported from Lyons and Palmyra last year was more than 30,000 bushels; that from Palmyra alone, there is annually exported about 60,000 barrels of fine apples; and estimating that Lyons, Newark and Clyde together send off as much more (which it is thought they do) the aggregate amount of green and dried fruit sent from the county annually, is 400,000 to 500,000 bushels. This one example may serve to indicate the great importance of fruit in a commercial view.

Mr. Marks made some statements relative to the mode of raising fruit near Catskill, N. Y. The climate is what would be thought severe for tender fruits—mercury sometimes sinks to 16° below zero. He had found no difficulty in raising apples of fine quality. The Spitzenburgh thrives very well in his grounds. Twelve years since he commenced the cultivation of peaches; has always had an abundance of this fruit, except in 1848. That year the fruit buds were destroyed by the previous winter or fall. He attributes his success in the production of peaches to his somewhat peculiar management. After the ground is firmly frozen in the fall, he puts litter round the trees, four to six inches thick, and treads it down hard. This prevents the buds from starting prematurely. The trees are not so much affected by sudden changes of weather during the winter and early spring, as the covering keeps the roots enveloped in frost, and they remain so till the season is so far advanced that no frost occurs after fruit buds start. In obtaining trees for a northern location, Mr. M. thought it best to take such as were raised in a similar climate.

IMPORTANT DECISION.—The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has made an important decision in relation to the silent partnership business in the California gold digging. An application was made to the Court, by Mr. J. A. Lessig, of Philadelphia, for an injunction to restrain Patrick McLangoin from disposing of some $20,000 worth of gold dust. The plaintiff alledged that he and Patrick entered into partnership, for the purpose of digging gold in California, and that the proceeds, amounting to the above sum, had been taken possession of by the said Patrick, without the slightest attempt to divide spoils. The gold dust was at the United States Mint, and an injunction was prayed to prevent the defendant from taking it from that place. The Court decided that the refusal of a partner to account, is no ground of injunction; and that, even if there was a partnership, the plaintiff not having labored towards that end, and the whole fund having been acquired by the defendant, it was not partnership property. The injunction was refused.

NAVIGATING STEAM VESSELS.

We have had an opportunity of examining says the Edinburg (Scotland) Courier, the new application of steam power in navigation, for which the ingenious inventors, the Messrs. Ruthven, of New Street have secured patents both in this country and the United States of America. The disadvantages of the paddle-wheels in steam vessels are too well known to require enumeration. The attention of the Messrs. Ruthven, of Edinburgh, whose names rank high as engineers, has, it seems, for a long period been directed to this subject. The result has been the discovery or application of a new method of propelling or navigating steam vessels. The arrangement consists in the forcible expulsion of water from a nozzle or bent pipe at each side of the vessel, which is effected by the power of the steam engine. The form and properties of a sailing vessel are preserved, there being no projections on the hull in the form of paddle-boxes or otherwise. Under the engine, which is placed in a horizontal position, is a round iron case, in which there is a wheel, having a shaft through what is termed a stuffing-box, on the upper or outer side. The piston of the steam-engine is attached to the shaft cranks, and the steam-power is applied wholly to revolving the wheel in the iron case, which, being made something like a fan-wheel, carries the water with it in its revolutions. The water, in obedience to the laws of centrifugal motion, presses toward the outer rim of the case with a force proportionate to the speed, and escapes by an aperture and pipe, into the sea. The water is supplied to the iron case by a large flat pipe, which has a free communication with the sea by means of apertures in the bottom of the vessel. The nozzle is above the water line, and can be turned by the seamen on deck with the greatest facility, so as to discharge the water either toward the bow or stern. Discharging the water astern makes the vessel go ahead; when discharged toward the bow, the vessel goes astern; and when discharged downward, the vessel remains stationary. These operations are effected without the engines being altered or stopped—a material improvement on the paddle-wheel; and as the elevation of one nozzle is rapidly altered independently of the other, ample facilities are given for turning the vessel. The absence of obstruction on the hull enables the vessel to use sails with as much effect as a common sailing vessel; while the steam-power may be perfectly combined with the action of the sails—an advantage denied to a steam vessel, except to a limited extent. It is difficult to convey an adequate idea of the improvements without an inspection of the mechanism—an inspection, however, for whoih Messrs. Ruthven are anxious to afford every facility, having constructed a model of a vessel, 12 feet in length, for the illustration of the improved method of propulsion.

THE HORSE KNOWN BY HIS EARS.

The size, position, and motion of the ears of a horse, are important points. Those rather small than large, placed not too far apart, erect and quick in motion, indicate both breeding and spirit; and if a horse is in the frequent habit of carrying one ear forward, and especially if he does so on a journey, he will generally possess both spirit and continuance. The stretching of the ears in contrary directions shows that he is attentive to everything that is passing around him, and while he is doing this he cannot be much fatigued, nor likely soon to become so.

It has been remarked, that few horses sleep without pointing one ear forward and the other backward, in order that they may receive notice of the approach of objects in any direction. When horses or mules march in company at night, those in front direct them backward; and those in the middle of the train turn them laterally or croswise—the whole seeming thus to be actuated by one feeling, which watches their general safety.

The ear of the horse is one of the most beautiful parts about him, and by few things is the temper more surely indicated than by its motion. The ear is more intelligible even than the eye; and a person accustomed to the horse can tell, by the expressive motion of that organ, almost all he thinks or means. When a horse lays his ears flat back on his neck, he most assuredly is meditating mischief, and the bystander should beware of his heels or his teeth. In play, the ears will be laid back, but not so decidedly nor so long. A quick change in their position, and more particularly in the expression of the eye at the time, will distinguish between playfulness and vice.

The hearing of the horse is remarkably acute. A thousand vibrations of the air, too slight to make any impression on the human ear, are readily perceived by him. It is well known to every hunting man, that the cry of hounds will be recognized by the horse, and his ears will be erect, and he will be all spirit and impatience, a considerable time before the rider is conscious of the least sound. [The Horse and his Rider.

WEIGHING IN THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

One of the most interesting and astonishing departments within the whole compass of the Bank of England is the weighing department, in which, with the rapidity of thought, and a precision approaching to the hundredth part of a grain, the weight of the gold coins are determined. There are six weighing measures, kept working by the same agency which supplies all the mechanical power in the Bank, and three weighers attend to these. Rolls of sovereigns, or half-sovereigns, are placed in grooves, and are shaken, one at a time, by the motion of the machine, into the weights. If they are of standard weights, they are thrown by the same mechanical intelligence into the box at the right hand side of the person who watches the operation; if they have lost the hundredth part of a grain, they are cast into a box on the left. Those which stand the test are put into bags of one thousand sovereigns each, and those below par are cut by a machine and sent back to the Mint. Between one and two thousand light sovereigns are thus daily sent out of circulation. The silver is put up into bags each of one hundred pounds value, and the gold into bags of a thousand, and then these bagfuls of bullion are sent through a strongly guarded door, or rather window, into the treasury. The treasury is a dark, gloomy apartment, fitted up with iron presses, which are supplied with huge locks and bolts, and which are perfectly fire proof. Gold, silver, and paper money, ready for circulation, to the amount of twenty-two millions sterling, were in the treasury when we visited it. One of the gentlemen in that department placed one thousand sovereigns in our hand, and at the same time pointed to seventy bags full of gold in the little recess which he had thrown open, making in all the modest sum of seventy thousand pounds. He placed notes to the amount of half a million upon our palm, which no doubt had its own sensations as the precious deposit trembled on its top. The heads of the departments meet in the treasury every evening, and there all the accounts are balanced. [Hogg's Weekly Instructor.

NEW ROTATIVE PRINTING MACHINE.

The Paris correspondent of the London Globe mentions an exhibition of a new rotative printing machine. Several of the first printers of Paris were present and saw the machine work. It consists of a series of lateral cylinders, and occupies little more than half the space of the American machine with which the Patrie is printed, costs less than half the money paid for that, and is free from the cords and tapes which so frequently throw that machine out of action. The number of men employed for each of these new machines is only three. The printing is from stereotype, not from the metallic type, and the number of copies thrown off by one machine per hour is 15,000. Each cylinder carries a continuous sheet equal to 2,000 copies of a journal, and each copy is cut off by the machine and folded. The paper is not damped; the impression is superior to any produced on damped paper. The stereotyping is an almost miraculous process. In the ordinary course of stereotyping, several hours are required; here it is the work of fifteen minutes. A few sheets of tissue paper are placed together, and passed upon the form containing the types. Thus the mold is formed, the metal is poured upon it, and, as soon as it is cold, the stereotypes are ready for the cylinder. Thus the wear and tear of type is avoided, and a fount of type will of course be as perfect at the end of a year as at the commencement of it. M. Emile de Girardin was in treaty for the purchase of the patent right of this invention; but he demanded a monopoly, and this was impossible, for no monopoly can exist where there is a patent. The total cost of one of these machines, ready for action, is $5,000.

FREE LAND IN ARKANSAS.

A writer in the Fort Smith Herald says: "It may not be known to the people of the different States, that the State of Arkansas, by an act of her Legislature, donates, to actual settlers, the right of the State to certain forfeited lands; and, that any person wishing to emigrate to the State is entitled to 160 acres of land for each member of the family, by making application to the Auditor of Public Accounts of the State, who will execute under his hand and official seal a deed, conveying all the right, title, and interest of the State therein, on condition that the person to whom such donation shall be made, will regularly and annually pay, or cause to be paid, the State and county taxes afterward accruing upon such lands; and that if the taxes should not be paid, the lands and improvements thereon shall revert to the State. It is also conditioned in the said deed, that the party receiving such donation shall reside upon, improve, and cultivate, at least three acres of such quarter section or tract of land, or instead of residing thereon, shall within eighteen months after the date of the Auditor's deed, cause to be cleared, fenced, improved, and placed in readiness for cultivation, at least five acres of the tract of land thus donated. After the improvement above mentioned is made, the person to whom the land is deeded may sell or dispose of the same as his own property. The expense of the deed for such quarter section is one dollar and twenty-five cents—the Auditor's fee for executing the same. The lands yet to be donated are rich and convenient to navigation. Many, whose circumstances prevent them from procuring a permanent home for themselves and families in the older States, can procure large tracts of land in Arkansas for comparatively nothing."

CINDERELLA'S SLIPPER.—This story is of French origin. The Dublin University Magazine gives the following account of the glass slipper:

"Two centuries ago, furs were so rare, and therefore so highly valued, that the wearing of them was restricted, by several sumptuary laws, to kings and princes. Sable, in those laws called vair, was the subject of countless regulations. The exact quality permitted to be worn by persons of different grades, and the articles of dress to which it might be applied, were defined most strictly. Perrault's tale of "Cinderella" originally marked the dignity conferred on her by her wearing a slipper of vair, a privilege then confined to the highest rank of princesses. An error of the press, now become inveterate, changed vair into vere, and the slipper of sable was suddenly converted into a glass slipper."

ENGINEERING BY PATENT MACHINERY.—The Cincinnati Times mentions that a Mr. Sellers, of that city, formerly of Philadelphia, has completed an invention which will "simplify and revolutionize the whole science of engineering." The following is the only account of the invention yet published :—

"The machine, we believe, has no name yet, but we learn combines the operation of the perambulator with that of the pentagraph, giving profile lines of plats, surveys, and measuring distances. By trundling it over a tract of country, a more accurate survey for a railroad can be made than by any other method; and at least fifteen miles per day with correctness—altitudes, depressions, and space. It can also be used on our streets, thus dispensing with the services of an engineer."

To allow the entire beard to grow is allowed by numerous medical authorities to be the most effectual safegaurd against sore throat, bronchitis or pulmonary complaints. If some congregations would allow ministers to imitate Peter and Paul in the matter of wearing their beards, they would be saved hundreds of dollars which they now expend in sending their pastors to Europe.

Variety.

Speaking of Dress, the editor of the Scalpel says: So much, in our opinion, is due to an incorrect and servile taste in dress, that it is one of the principal causes of the early decay of our countrywomen. Our climate demands, during one-third of the year, absolute warmth and dry feet; and our fashionable countrywomen would consider themselves disgraced by appearing in public with a dress and shoes that every intelligent English woman wears as a matter of course.

An American lady, writing from Paris, says that she has lately discovered the secret of the many beautiful and brilliant complexions seen in that city. It seems that water is considered by the French ladies as the great spoiler of the skin, so that, unless some untoward circumstance really soils their faces, they are not touched with water from one week's end to another. The owners content themselves with gentle rubbing with a dry coarse towel, and exclude water almost entirely from their toilet.

In this year of scarcity of fruit, it may be desirable to know that a good pie can be made simply of lemon and molasses. Press out the juice of a lemon into two tea-cupsful of molasses, grate in the dried peel of another, cover a plate with a layer of crust, spread over some of the mixture, lay on a thin crust, spread another layer of the mixture, and over that lay a top crust; bake thoroughly, and you will have an excellent and wholesome pie. One lemon will make two pies.

"I am now an old fellow," says Cowper in one of his letters, "but I had once my dancing days, as you have now; yet I could never find that I could learn half so much of a woman's character by dancing with her, as conversing with her at home, when I could observe her behavior at the table, or at the fire-side, and in all the trying scenes of domestic life. We are all good when pleased; but she is a good woman who wants not the fiddle to sweeten her."

It was a saying of Paley, that he who is not a fool half of the time, is a fool all the time. Robert Hall, who held a similar opinion, on being reproached, by a very dull preacher, with the exclamation—"How can a man who preaches like you, talk in so trifling a manner?" replied—"There, brother, is the difference between us; you talk your nonsense in the pulpit—I talk mine out of it."

In Tuscany the Romish priests have commenced prosecutions against two printers of Florence, for having, under the government of the Republic, printed a Translation of the New Testament in Italian, on the express ground of "their having published the gospel in the vulgar tongue, so that every one may be enabled to read it."

The sum paid to fishermen engaged in the cod fishery, in Maine, during the past season, will amount to upwards of eighty-one thousand dollars. Included in this amount is $10,542 33 paid to fishermen engaged in the same business in the Portland district.

A funeral procession, composed principally of females on foot, was seen in New York on Sunday. It was a funeral of one of the Daughters of Temperance, and the ladies, with their regalia, presented a very novel appearance.

The Amherst, (N. H.) Cabinet, in answer to the inquiry of Mr. Webster as to what will become of the American flag in case of a dissolution of the Union, suggests that the No[illegible] will take the Stars, and the South the Stripes.

Massachusetts has about three millions of dollars invested in school-houses. Mr. Everett it was who said so quaintly, "If you reduce the wages of the schoolmaster, you must raise those of the recruiting sergeant."

Mr. W. Carey, of Coleraine, Mass., has a pullet, six and a half months old, a cross of the Dorking and common breeds, which lays eggs upwards of seven inches long. The biddy herself weighs seven and a half pounds.

In the French Assembly, the committee relative to juvenile offenders have prepared a new bill on the subject, tending to reclaim young children who have been led into the commission of a first offense, and to bring them up as agricultural laborers, instead of exposing them to the temptations of large towns.

Throughout the vast empire of Russia, through all Finland, Lapland, Sweden and Norway, there is no cottage so poor, no but so destitute, but it possesses its vapor bath, in which all its inhabitants, every Saturday at least, and every day in case of sickness, experience comfort and salubrity.

Mr. D'Israeli says, on the authority of a London attorney, the amount of the mortgage in England is £400,000,000, producing at 4 per cent, £16,000,000 a year. The landlords of Scotland are at least as deeply mortgaged as those of England; and the Irish squires are in a still worse condition.

The smallest bird of America is the humming-bird; and of Europe, the golden-crested wren. The smallest quadruped in the world is the pigmy mouse of Siberia. The most diminutive plant is the arctic raspberry, which is so small that a six ounce vial will hold the whole, branches, leaves and all.

In 1796 the opium trade of China was prohibited by the Emperor. At that time the annual import was about 1000 chests. At present, it is nearly 50,000 chests, or 7,000,000 pounds! It is estimated to destroy 100,000 lives annually!

"Ah," said a mischievous wag to a lady acquaintance of an aristocratic caste, "I perceive you have been learning a trade." "Learning a trade," replied the lady, indignantly, "you are very much mistaken." "Oh, I thought by the look of your cheeks you had turned painter."

Among all her seaward-looking cliffs, Spain has not a single light-house, from the Pyrenees to point Europa; she has no railroads, no canals, no telegraphs; and till recently there has been no safety for travelers on the highways.

The aggregate number of bushels of salt manufactured at Salina, Syracuse, Liverpool, and Geddes, N. Y., during 1849, amounts to 5,084,389 bushels, being 946,243 bushels more than was inspected the previous year.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

WESTERN VILLAGES.

So far as I am able to judge from my own observation upon different countries with which I have become acquainted, the multiplication and growth of populous villages is a sure indication of the thrift of the resident and surrounding population; and their elegance and wealth are a certain and unmistakable guage of the richness of their resources. New England is beautifully diversified and enriched by a great number of populous villages, made up of manufactories and the residences of manufacturers and artizans. Central and Western New-York is as richly endowed and beautified with flourishing villages, made up of merchants' stores, mechanics' shops, and the pleasant dwellings of their owners and operators, ready to supply any amount of materials and implements suited to the wants of an agricultural population. I believe that no intelligent foreigner, or native traveler, who has visited those parts, has failed to admire that striking feature of the prosperity of the Northern and Eastern States of the great American Confederation. Whatever evidence these things may afford of the thrift and prosperity of the people where they abound, North-western Illinois is as much distinguished by them as any part of the Union, and unmistakable evidences of their rapid growth are daily multiplying at every eligible place where a beginning has been made, but more especially where the surrounding population is chiefly composed of immigrants from the Northern and Eastern States. Not only every favorable place upon the rivers and canals is fixed upon by settlers of foresight, but many central points, at considerable distance from the natural channels of commerce, acquire an adventitious importance from the gathering of an industrious population upon a fertile tract of land. As population increases, and their wants are multiplied, the necessity of a common center in their own midst becomes apparent and important, and leads to the formation of establishments whose accumulating business and profits draw others to the same point, until what began with a single log-cabin for a dwelling, and a shanty for a shop, becomes an elegant, populous, and wealthy village. In Fulton County, we have more than a dozen such places; the principal of which are Lewiston, Canton, and Farmington.

Lewiston is the county seat. It has a well-built Court-House, with the necessary offices for the public business of the county; a number of merchants' stores and mechanics' shops, a steam engine driving a flouring mill and a saw mill, two hotels, two meeting-houses, and many elegant private residences, with a population estimated at seven hundred. Being situated in a district of land with somewhat broken surface, and closely environed with heavy timber, it presents but an indifferent appearance, in comparison with some villages which have a more eligible situation.

Canton is the largest village in the county. It is situated on a beautiful undulating prairie, with a large creek and a belt of timbered land running along its western border. It has a commodious public square, entirely surrounded with stores; on the adjacent streets are plough factories, wagon shops, turners' shops, fulling mills, two steam flouring mills, a printing office, and four meeting-houses. The population is estimated at near two thousand. The Congregationalists have the largest assembly, but the Baptists are enjoying considerable prosperity, under the labors of Elder Simon G. Minors, and they are about to erect a new brick building, to be 70 feet long by 50 feet wide, at an estimated cost of six thousand dollars. Situated as Canton is, in the midst of one of the finest and best-settled agricultural districts in the State, with an industrious and enterprising population, a produce, mercantile and mechanical trade has grown up second to no interior town in the State. During the season just past, the merchants packed 20,438 hogs, made 6,881 barrels of pork, 2,910 barrels of lard, 1,019 tierces of lard, and 1,033,945 lbs. of pork in bulk. This quantity was equal to 2,562 tons weight. The same merchants have exported 130,000 bushels of wheat in a single season, besides large amounts of other agricultural productions. They have imported $200,000 worth of merchandize in a single season. Two plow factories have sold 1500 plows in a season; and the stove dealers sold 900 stoves last year. Two lumber yards sold between one and two millions of feet of lumber. The village is situated ten miles from the Illinois river, and is about to build a plank road to the landing. All this business, at one single point in the county, has grown up within a few years. Deacon Jones, of the Congregational Church, the first settler of the place, is still living in the same town, a witness of all these improvements.

Farmington, ten miles north of Canton, is situated on a beautiful sloping prairie cove, formed by groves of oak timber, standing on three sides of it, and lying open to the main prairie on the east. It is laid off in streets at right angles, running east and west, north and south, and has quite a number of stores on the main thoroughfares, with mechanics' shops of all descriptions common to an agricultural country; and, on the adjacent streets, a fulling-mill and steam saw-mill. Many eligible sites for building lots are still for sale, although the population is increasing with considerable rapidity. The present number of inhabitants is estimated at nine or ten hundred. It has four meeting-houses—a Universalist, a Presbyterian, a Wesleyan, and an Episcopal Methodist. The Presbyterians and the Episcopalians have each a project on foot for building a new church edifice of considerable magnitude. Our brethren, James and John Hill, have rented a large brick building, and opened an academy that meets with liberal patronage from the inhabitants of the village and the surrounding country. During the last term, their school list was increased to eighty students. At present the Seventh-day Baptist church assembles in their school room. The First-day Baptists have held their meetings a part of the time in the Wesleyan meeting-house. The original settlers of this place are yet living, and reside upon the lands they first occupied. For some time after they settled in these parts, their nearest neighbors on the north and the west were thirty miles distant.

The adjoining counties have each a number of flourishing villages, whose origin and progress are interesting to the immigrant and the settler; but I have not room for more than one brief notice of the kind, and that I cannot withold on account of the circumstances of its origin, and the eminence it has attained. It is deeply interesting to me as the fruit of an early and well-planned church colony.

Galesburg is, I think, the most beautiful village I have seen in the West. It is situated about twenty-seven miles north-west of Farmington, in Knox county, on a high prairie, near Henderson Grove. Its plan, the style of its buildings, the arrangement of its gardens, out-houses, stores, and factories; its printing press, public cemetery, its church edifice, its school houses, academy and college, with all the manners and customs of its inhabitants, bespeak it a New York or a New England village; and never have I seen a village in any Eastern State, that I admired more for its neatness, comfort and thrift, than this colonial village of the prairies. While there I could scarcely realize that I was so far off at the West! "The land of steady habits," was around me. In 1835, many members of the Presbyterian church were deeply interested in the prosecution of a "plan for establishing Literary Institutions in the West," by gathering church colonies in some of the most favorable locations of the countries open to new settlers. In pursuance of this object, a number of ministers, elders and members of the Presbyterian and Congregational churches of central and western New York, united together, and sent out a committee to select a location and make a purchase of lands. They found a body of land belonging to Congress, containing thirty thousand acres, and made a purchase where Galesburg now stands. At first there were about thirty families engaged in this enterprise, and about ten thousand acres were entered at Congress price. The unoccupied lands, after the commencement of the settlement, were to be sold at from five to eight dollars per acre, and the profits, above the original cost and expenses, to be devoted to the erection and support of an academy and a college. In the fall of 1836, about forty families had arrived at Henderson's Grove, in the vicinity of the purchase, where they hired or erected cabins for a temporary residence. During the summer of the same year, a town plot was surveyed, and the lots offered for sale on terms similar to their farm lots. At first, public worship was regularly held in private houses; in the fall, a school house was erected, and public worship held therein; the same winter a school was opened, in which both classical and common branches were taught. In 1837 a church was formed, consisting of eighty-two persons. During the same year the settlers commenced building on the town plot, and on the prairie farms adjacent, and their meetings for public worship were partly held there. In 1838 the academy was erected, and served the purposes of teaching and public worship for several years afterward. In 1841 other buildings were erected, and a collegiate department organized and opened. In 1846 a spacious church edifice was erected, and the lower part opened for public worship, which has since been completed and dedicated to the worship of God. The result is, that they have a beautiful town, with a population of twelve hundred; a church, of which 540 persons have been members; an elegant church edifice, in which 600 or 700 persons regularly worship; a literary institution, of which near a thousand pupils have received the benefits. The academic department has now more than two hundred pupils, and the collegiate more than forty. I could but admire the piety, prudence and perseverance with which this enterprise has been conducted to its present result, and wish it a long and prosperous career. The western country still holds out inducements as promising as ever for union, enterprise, perseverance and piety, to seek the good of the present and unborn generations, in labors of a similar kind.

"OUR FATHER."

BY ELIZA COOK.

"Many of the children told me they always said their prayers at night, and the prayer they said was, 'Our Father.' I naturally thought they meant that they repeated the Lord's Prayer, but I soon found that few of them knew it. They only repeated the first two words—they knew no more than 'Our Father.' These poor children, after their laborious day's work, (nail making, japanning, screw-making,) lying down to sleep with this simple appeal, seemed to me inexpressibly affecting."—Report of the Commissioners on the Employment of Children, evidence of R. H. Horne, town of Wolverhampton.

Pale, struggling blossoms of mankind,
  Born only to endure;
White, helpless slaves, whom Christians bind,
  Sad children of the poor!
Ye walk in rags, ye breathe in dust,
  With souls too dead to ask
For aught beyond a scanty crust,
  And Labor's grinding task.
Ye ne'er have heard the code of Love,
  Nor seen Hope's cheering light;
Ye are not led to look above
  The clouds of earthly night;
And yet, 'mid ignorance and toil,
  Your lips, that ne'er have known
The "milk and honey" of the soul,
  Sleep not before they own
        "Our Father!"

Unheeded workers in the marts
  Of England's boasted wealth,
Ye who may carry ulcered hearts,
  If hands but keep their health;
Ye whose young eyes have never watched
  June's roses come and go,
Whose hard worn fingers ne'er have snatched
  The spring flowers as they blow;
Who toil beneath the summer sun,
  With dull and torpid brain;
Ye who lie down when work is done,
  To rise and work again;
Oh, even ye, poor joyless things!
  Rest not before ye pray;
Striving to mount on fettered wings
  To him who hears you say,
        "Our Father!"

Proud, easy tenants of the Earth,
  Ye who have fairer lots,
Who live with plenty, love, and mirth,
  On Fortune's golden spots;
Ye who but eat, laugh, drink, and sleep,
  Who walk 'mid Eden's bloom,
Who know not what it is to weep,
  Or poverty's cold doom;
Oh, turn one moment from your way,
  And learn what these can teach;
Deign in your rosy path to stay,
  And hear the "untaught" preach;
Then to your homes, so bright and fair,
  And think it good to pray,
Since the sad Children of Despair
  Can kneel in thanks, and say,
        "Our Father!"

HOMES.

BY MRS. SWISSHELM.

It has often been a matter of wonder to us, that comparatively so few Americans have homes—that so many millions of them live, as the Bedouins of the desert, without a settled habitation. They pich their tents, unpack their furniture, lay down their beds, and get fixed—then suddenly, as one jumps when a flea bites, pull up stakes and away. We evince considerable contempt for the wandering Arab, while scarcely more settled ourselves. Move, move, move; one scarce gets fixed up in a habitation until moving comes, and then it is tear down, pack up, and be off again. May be the dining room is a little too small, or the parlor a little too large, the doors painted the wrong color, or the paper too dim on the walls, or something is the matter with fastenings on a door or window shutter. Then away goes the free and independent citizen with his goods and chattels to take a new abode equally objectionable in some other respect.

Why does not every man get a home of his own, fix it to suit his tastes, and stay in it? No use to say "not able! too poor!" There is not a man or woman in North America who may not, with moderate health and industry, get a home! We are not going to talk about the folks "we read about" in the back alleys, and up long rickety stairs, in the heart or surburbs of some large city. We never could tell what brought, or what keeps them there, unless indeed they were kidnapped from the land of their fathers, carried in chains to their prisons, and diligently guarded so that they cannot escape. It would require a considerable police force to prevent our getting out of such lodgings, when millions of acres of unoccupied lands lie in God's free sunlight, bathed in His free air. Perhaps it is this feeling which prevents our sympathizing more with oppressed factory operatives and toiling artizans, who are described as living in close rooms and hot shops, who give so large a part of their hard earnings to some grasping landlord for a miserable, inadequate shelter. The tale is pitiful, wondrous pitiful, and contains much truth; but what keeps them there? Why will any one, with feet and hands that no one can prevent his using, travel up and down dirty alleys, with a cart-load of valuables, hunting a place to lay down his head and sleep? If we were an old maid—and this is considered the most desolate class of mankind—had not a dollar, and were making shirts for some shaver at six and a fourth cents each, we would pack up our 'tother frock this blessed sun-shiny morning and travel, not much matter where, till we come to where there is room. We would beg lodgings at farm houses until one would give us work. We do not calculate this would be long, for nearly all farmers and their wives want help, and we can do a little of most anything, and so can most folks if they try. Well, we could get fifty cents a week, with plenty to eat, as much pure, warm sunlight, cool shade and fresh water as queen Vic, can use. Allowing a week for holidays. Fifty cents a week is twenty-five dollars and a half in the year, and we can dress as gaily as a butterfly, and cozily as a silk worm, on ten dollars per annum. So in the year we would save fifteen dollars fifty cents. Farmers are fond of paying in trade, and as we would be very civil, and no one would object to have us for a neighbor, there would be some little spot with a great tree on it, in some odd corner where he would give us half an acre of ground, may be, for what he owed us; or we could pay the rest in making pantaloons for the boys, dresses or bonnets for the girls, or milking the cows for the old lady. If there was no man about who wanted some sewing done, and would pay us in work, we would borrow a spade, dig up dirt in our land, make it into mud, mix some cut straw or hay with it—any farmer would give as much straw as would answer—and begin the foundation of our house! About ten by twelve would be large enough. We would build the walls of mud and straw, and if we could make no arrangements to get boards or shingles, we would have it thatched with straw. We could get some one to make us a door and window for it, or wait till we could send to the city and buy one, and in the mean time hang up a curtain. When our house was up, would not we be a freeholder, and have a home without asking anybody's leave to live in their garret or cellar? And for furniture, couldn't we get a store box or flour barrel, and turn the mouth down for a table? A block of wood would make a sofa, and we would cushion it with moss. A dollar's worth of muslin would make a bed, bolster and pillow, sheets and slips. We could make a bedstead of sticks—get two tins for ten cents, one for a saucepan, and one for a goblet! A nice flat stone makes a very good griddle, another for a plate, and we would keep house in style—raise our own potatoes and corn! When we got fixed up—our little mudhouse white-washed, and some rosebushes growing, folks would say, "What a funny little house;" but we would have it "airy and cool in summer time, in winter close and warm," and it would be an odd country where we could not get something to do to get a living and enlarge and improve our mansion by degrees! So we imagine everybody with a little thrift can get a home—a shelter they can call their own; and now, since the exemption law is in force, they could keep it. The trees planted would grow for themselves, and the fruit for themselves, and the fruit would be theirs. If every one really wished a home, and would set to work to get it, instead of spending their earnings for useless clothing, and worse than useless luxuries of food and drink, the wealth of the State would be quadrupled in a very short time; and how incalculable would be the comfort and independence. We cannot tell how people content themselves to live in rented houses. It would give us at once St. Vitus' dance to have any one come in to us for rent, and feel no prospect of ever having a roof of our own to cover us! We would rather live under a tub, if it were our own tub, than in piles of brick that some one else claims! Oh, that folks would all take a notion to get homes.

TREATMENT OF PRISONERS OF WAR.

The following gives John Howard's first experience of the misery of prisoners. He was on his way to the south of Europe, for the recovery of his health.

He took a passage by the packet Hanover,—but, man proposes, God disposes. Providence had willed otherwise, and the missionary of mercy was not permitted to reach his destination. France and England were then at variance; the Seven Years' War was raging with its worst fury. The western coasts of Europe were swept by innumerable privateers, and by one of these the Hanover was captured, and the crew and passengers carried into the port of Brest, where, according to the custom of that period, they were treated with the utmost barbarity. Howard refers to this incident in one of his subsequent publications. Before the captured vessel was carried into the harbor, he says, he was kept without food, and even water, for forty hours—to most men an intolerable punishment; but his abstemious habits had well prepared him to bear such a trial—the commencement of a long series—without serious detriment to his health. When they were at length landed, he was confined, with many other prisoners, in the castle of the town, in a dungeon, dark, damp, and filthy beyond description, where they were kept for several additional hours without nourishment! At last a leg of mutton was brought and thrown into the cell—as horse flesh is thrown into the dens of wild beasts—for the starving captives to scramble for, tear with their teeth, and devour as best they could. In this horrible dungeon, thus fed, they were detained for a week. Six nights were they compelled to sleep—if sleep they could under such circumstances—upon the cold floor, with nothing but a handful of straw to protect them from the noxious damps and noisome fever of their over-crowded room. Thence our countryman was removed to Molaix, and subsequently to Carpaix, where he resided for two months on parole. At both these places he had further opportunities of witnessing the treatment which prisoners of war received at the hands of their enemies,—such as soon made him sensible that his own case had been one of comparative leniency.

POWER OF PRAYER.

We are told in the Gospel, that "the prayer of a righteous man availeth much;" and the fidelity with which the blessed assurance is often verified, should convince the most stubborn unbeliever. The little band of missionaries on board the good ship Morrison, from Boston to Bombay, a year or two since, were grieved to find their Captain an ungodly, profane man, one who cared not for his own salvation, and who resisted the efforts of the missionaries to instruct the seamen. He would not permit them to visit the forecastle or to talk with the sailors. Nearly four months of the voyage had elapsed, before these good men were allowed this seemingly unimportant privilege. In the mean while prayer was daily, almost hourly, ascending to heaven from the apartments of the missionaries in his behalf. They besought God, with earnestness and tears, that the heart of the Captain might be humbled and subdued. They plead, as for life, that he might be brought to the foot of the cross. Their prayers were heard, and they were answered.

The journal of one of the ladies on board the Morrison, which we had the pleasure of hearing read some time since, speaks touchingly of the silent work of grace in the hard and stony heart of this before incorrigible sinner. Nearly two-thirds of the voyage was accomplished, when most unexpectedly the manners of the Captain were observed to be less boisterous and profane. He gradually became more subdued, and finally attended a prayer-meeting of the missionaries. On a subsequent day, their joy was great at the reception of a note from him, giving them permission to enter the forecastle, and establish there such religious exercises and impart such instruction as they chose. It was expressed in kind language, accompanied with an acknowledgment that he was a bad man and a sinner, and also with a desire to know the true import of the unpardonable sin. Only a few days elapsed before the "new birth" was complete, and this proud man humbled as a little child. He was constant in his attendance upon the religious exercises of the ship, prayed with fervor and simple-hearted earnestness, and himself exhorted the seamen to seek their salvation. Thus, the voyage which was begun, and prosecuted for some time, under circumstances of anxiety and painful excitement, terminated, with the blessing of God, most joyously. In addition to the Captain, three or four of the seamen became the subjects of hopeful conversion. [Independent.

THE EVENTFUL PRAYER.

I am a native of a rural neighborhood in a country town. At the time to which I allude, (more than twenty years ago,) I may have been ten or twelve years old; old enough, at least, to feel the importance of becoming a Christian. In that state of mind I was sent on an errand, early one morning, to a neighbor's house. I arrived there just as the father was preparing for family worship. Instead of asking my errand and then sending me back as soon as might be, Mrs. H. invited me to take off my cap and wait till after prayer. I did so more willingly than she suspected; for I had great confidence in the piety of both, and somehow hoped that good would come to me from being with them in so sacred a service as their family devotions. Mr. H. had a peculiarly thoughtful, deliberate, and earnest manner in payer. I could perfectly understand every petition, and I felt sure it was a sincere petition. During all the prayer, I stood in one corner of the kitchen, leaning against the ceiling, with my face hid in my cap. I do not now recollect that there was any special allusion to me in the prayer; but he who prayed for us seemed to be so near to God himself, so filled with reverence and confidence united; it seemed to bring me so near to God, and unfold his goodness to me in such a light; there was such a reality about it, that altogether it was more than heart could endure. I wept in penitence and grief. I prayed, if ever I prayed; and if ever I was heard, it was in that unspoken cry for mercy. I was too young to know whether I was a Christian or not; indeed, I did not think I was for some years afterwards; I only knew that I felt towards my Savior as I had never felt before.

But as I now look upon the event, and as I have looked upon it for years, it seems to me clearly to have been the turning-point in my probation, the eventful moment to me. For years I have regarded it as the occasion of my happiness as a Christian, and of whatever success I may have had in my ministry.

That was an eventful prayer to me. Was it not also an eventful prayer to him who offered it? After the moment of his own conversion, could any moment be more pregnant with consequence to him than that which led to the conversion of another? And yet, at the close of that very prayer, unbelief may have taunted him with the inquiry: "What profit shall we have, if we pray unto Him?"

God is more faithful to his promise than we dare to think. He makes great events to turn on small pivots. No Christian knows what consequences may hinge on each sincere prayer he offers. Least of all should he distrust its efficacy or the faithfulness of God, merely because he cannot count up the persons converted in answer to it.

THE CASE OF DR. DICK.

In a letter to the Dundee Advertiser, Dr. Dick corrects one or two trifling inaccuracies in the kind appeal made in his behalf by Elihu Burritt. Having made these corrections, the Dr. adds:—"And now, when I am constrained to appear before the public, and to indulge so much in egotism, I shall plainly and unreservedly state the items of my income. I have an annuity of £20 from a scholastic establishment I formerly occupied. I have about £23 from rentals, subject to deductions of fee-duty, poors' rates, window-light, &c. I have a few pounds in the bank, which is gradually melting down, and which serves to supply the deficiencies of regular income. By dint of the most rigid economy, we have been hitherto enabled to move onward, though without some of those comforts we could have wished, notwithstanding some considerable incumbrances. I keep no servant, give no social dinners, walk short journeys when I am able, or take the lowest-priced railway carriages; and in this way we have kept ourselves free from any serious debts. In consequence of repeated attacks of illness, I have written nothing for the press for two or three years past. But if the public think my writings have been of any use to society, and were they disposed to present a pecuniary testimonial on this ground, I certainly would not refuse it. A small addition to my income would enable life to move on a little more smoothly than hitherto, and enable me to promote the education of my female orphan grandchildren."

The man who threatens the world is always ridiculous; for this world can go on easily without him, and in a short time will cease to miss him.

"I Can't Get Acquainted with the Members of the Church!"

So said a lady who had recently been admitted by letter into the membership of a large church, to the pastor.

"I am very sorry, my sister," was the reply; "the members are generally considered quite friendly, and there is much pleasant social intercourse among them."

"But scarcely any of them speak to me, or seem to know me, when I come to the church, or meet them in the street."

"Do you speak to them?"

"I do not like to speak first. It was so very different in the first church I joined."

"Where you passed the days of your childhood and youth, you were of course more widely known, and when you were baptized it was a more direct introduction to the Christian sympathies and affection of the church. Do you attend the prayer-meetings?"

"No; I have not been yet."

"The best place to form acquaintances among the members is at the prayer-meetings. The Sabbath congregations are so large, and so many strangers attend, that the members can scarcely become familiar with each other if they meet only there. But if you are seen regularly at the prayer-meeting, you will soon be recognized and welcomed. Have you been to the Dorcas Society?"

"Oh, no! I did not like to go where all were strangers to me."

"But how are they to become acquainted with you, if you do not give them the opportunity? I hope you have visited the Sabbath-school?"

"No; I should like to take a class, but I have been waiting for an invitation."

"My dear friend, do you not perceive that you are far more to blame for remaining a comparative stranger among us, than the members of the church generally can be? You are waiting for advances to be made by those to whom you give scarcely an opportunity for friendly intercourse. You give them no reason to think that you desire an acquaintanceship. Now my advice to you is, attend the more familiar meetings of the church, manifest an interest in its spirituality and prosperity, kindly recognize any whom you know to be members, dispense with the worldly courtesy that requires a formal introduction to these disciples of Jesus, and then, if they remain indifferent to you, the blame will rest with them." "BLACK PHEBE."

On Sunday, the 3d of March, there was buried at Brunswick, Maine, a black woman of a remarkable character, who was highly honored at her death. At her funeral, the assembly, filling a large church, were addressed by the Rev. Dr. Adams, of Brunswick, in a very appropriate, affecting, and eloquent manner. Her pall-bearers were Gov. Robert Dunlap, Dr. Lincoln, Professor Packard, and Joseph Kean, Esq., Treasurer of Bowdoin College, &c.; and the principal mourners were Rev. President Allen, with two of his daughters, of Northampton, Mass., who had come 250 miles to attend the funeral. She was buried by the side of her friends, Mrs. Allen, and her daughter, Maria Malleville Allen.

These honors were paid to this lowly woman, because of her rare attainments as a Christian, because she had been for thirty years a worthy member of the church of Brunswick, and was regarded by her fellow Christians as superior to themselves in the strength of her faith, and in a spirit of devotion. She was born a slave at Beverwyck, near Newark, N. J. In early life she entered as a servant in the family of President Wheelock, of Dartmouth College, and lived in his family, and that of his daughter, Maria Malleville Allen, the wife of President Allen, of Bowdoin College, 40 years. For the last 18 years she lived alone in her house, and she died alone and suddenly. In the same night, and probably at the same hour, died her friend, the wife of the Rev. Dr. Adams. This circumstance added peculiar pathos and interest to the discourse. He said, if his beloved companion (then lying dead, to be buried the next day) could have been permitted to choose an attendant spirit, as she passed through the dark valley, and in her upward flight to the paradise of God, doubtless she would have chosen Phebe. "Black Phebe!" he exclaimed, "she has sometimes been called; but her soul is whiter and purer than the light, and her heavenly garments are more resplendent than the sun shining in his brightness."

THE TRUE MISSIONARY SPIRIT.

The lamented Pohlman, in offering himself to the Prudential Committee of the American Board, as a missionary, wrote as follows:—

"Time has only served to strengthen the decision which was calmly and dispassionately made. After repeated reviews of the same, I am confirmed and settled. I cannot now doubt for a moment. Mine was not a rash or hasty, conclusion. If there are not contrary indications, I must go; I cannot stay. Here then am I; take me. Receive me under your care for the missionary service. I wish to enlist for life. If, in your view, I can be of any service, I lay my all at your feet. 'Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I thee.' Send me abroad to publish glad tidings to the idol serving nations. Send me whenever, however, and wherever you please. Send me to the most desert part of all the howling wilderness of heathenism, to the most barbarous climes, or to more civilized regions. Send me to the millions of pagans, to the followers of the false prophet, to the Jews or Gentiles, to Catholics or Protestants. Send me, in fine, wherever God opens an effectual door. Send me, 'for necessity is laid upon me; yea, wo is unto me if I preach not the gospel' to the perishing heathen."

DELAYING OBEDIENCE.

To have the understanding enlightened in regard to duty, and the conscience so completely awake as to make one feel uncomfortable in the neglect of it, and yet to be surrounded with a set of advisers, wearing the name and title of Christians, who are continually urging farther delay, is about as uncomfortable a position as a person of fervent piety needs to be placed in. To rebuke such advisers in the faithfulness of the gospel, and yet, at the same time, to behave towards them with becoming meekness, is not the easiest thing in the world. Nevertheless, the idea that we may postpone our obedience to God for a little season, notwithstanding our convictions, is not to be tolerated. One is well convinced, that it is his duty to observe the Sabbath of the Bible. But, forthwith, he is assailed by his associates with the suggestion, that he ought not to be in a hurry—that he ought to take plenty of time for consideration, at least a year. Plausible as such advice is, we offset it with a simple passage of Scripture. "I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies; I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy commandments." Ps. 119 : 59, 60. Here the Psalmist testifies, that he turned his feet to obedience, so soon as, by thinking on his ways, he found that he was walking astray. He made no delay about it; he did not go about to consult the wise men of the nation; he did not examine the writings of the rabbis and doctors, to see if there was not some way of getting round the duty; he made haste to render obedience. But, now-a-days, as soon as a person's conscience begins to lash him for neglected duty, he is advised to be very careful about running too hastily. Well, we would not wish one to be too hasty; but, on the other hand, it may be well to consider whether there is not such a thing as being too tardy. Conviction of duty is not to be trifled with. When any one does violence to his conviction, he feels that he disobeys God; and such disobedience must be followed by disastrous results. The voice of conscience grows more feeble, and (if the disobedience be persisted in) becomes, at length, hushed in silence. It may continue to reprove with regard to other duties, but with regard to that particular one which has been made the object of willful neglect, it reproves no more. As a necessary consequence, the soul suffers the loss of all those blessings which obedience in that one thing would bring. Nor is this all. Conscience having yielded to corruption in one instance, becomes ready to yield in another. Its sternness has been overcome, and it no longer guards the soul with that security which it had been wont to do. It is to the soul what the sense of modesty is to the female; and, as the female cannot allow her sense of delicacy to be trifled with without incurring the risk of a total loss of virtue, so the conscience cannot, in a single instance, be abused without incurring the danger of becoming "seared with a hot iron." We will not undertake to say, that this is, in every case, the result; but we do say, that there is great danger of it. We insist, therefore, that when one understands what is duty, he ought to lose no time in putting it in practice. Let him remember, too, that the wrath of God is revealed against those "who hold the truth in unrighteousness." Rom. 1 : 18.

But the possibility that one may be mistaken as to his duty, is often urged as a reason for delay. Well, there is, probably, something in that; at least, it seems plausible. Generally, however, this objection is more specious than solid. It is, with regard to those things which are the subject of direct and unequivocal command. With regard to the Sabbath, we have no hesitation in saying, that it savors of "the wisdom that is earthly." The object of it is to induce a deference to the views of those who have acquired great skill in explaining away the divine law. Now we hold, that however doubtful may be the teachings of Scripture with regard to such questions as are purely doctrinal, or however obscure the language in which its prophecies foretell coming events, with regard to the common, practical duties of life, the Word of God is so plain that there is no need for a child to be mistaken. Were it otherwise, it would be unsuited to the wants of mankind. Inasmuch as every one must give account for himself, and not another for him, it is necessary that each one should be able to decide his duty for himself. People of small intellectual capacity must be able to make this decision, as well as those of more expanded powers; and children, as well as those of mature age. Hence duty must be revealed in very simple language. And how simple is the language in which our duty to keep holy the Sabbath day is revealed! "Remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy—the seventh day is the Sabbath." Who can fail to understand this language? What untutored peasant cannot comprehend it? What child does not perceive its meaning? The command to refrain from the adoration of images is not more plain. Yet when a person of ordinary mental powers is convinced by it, and begins to think about rendering obedience, straightway he is admonished that he does not understand it, and that he would do well to consult some learned men, some spiritual rabbis or doctors of divinity, before taking any decided steps! And what do the learned doctors say, upon being consulted? Why, that it is the duty of men to keep holy the first day of the week. But how do they make it appear? Do they produce any precept from the Scripture, plain and unequivocal, like the fourth commandment? Not by any mens. They can present nothing which is level to the comprehension of a child. Whatever they say on the subject, is entirely above the understanding of children, and entirely above the understanding of ignorant people. They talk about the magnitude of redemption, as compared with the work of creation; they have something to say about redemption being finished, on the first day of the week, by the resurrection of Christ from the dead; they lay a few such theological propositions together, and finally draw out the inference, that the first day of the week is a holy day. But the plain, ordinary mind, does not understand this. The child fails to comprehend it. It is true, he hardly dares to indulge the thought that learned men may be mistaken; nevertheless, he is puzzled, extremely puzzled, to understand it. And this is, to our mind, very conclusive proof, that no such duty is enjoined in the Book of God.

We cannot, therefore, subscribe to the idea, that a person must, in reference to the Sabbath, or in reference to any other plain command of Heaven, wait to consult friends, and learned teachers, and the writings of fallible men, before rendering obedience. If God has spoken, "see that ye refuse not Him that speaketh." We do not believe that any one can begin to obey God too soon. In one respect, however, and only in one, caution may be advisable; and that is, where this obedience is connected with the solemn and public profession of the religion of Christ. In such case, it is proper to "sit down and count the cost." It is proper for one to examine his own heart as to the motives which prompt him to make such a profession. It is right for him to consider, seriously, whether he is going about the matter in his own strength, or in the strength of a higher Power. It is right for him to think well of the difficulties that lie in the way, and consider whether, for the love of Christ, he is willing to encounter them. It is well for him to remember the words of Christ—"the foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head"—and to hesitate a long time, and even to refuse to make a public profession of His name, unless he is willing to take up with the same hard lot in the world. But these things being once decided, let him begin obedience without one moment's delay.

GLIMPSES OF DOMESTIC LIFE IN CHINA—No. 2.

SHANGHAI, August, 1849.

In my letter of June 4th, I promised you occasional glimpses of Domestic Life in the "Middle Kingdom." This term, as you are probably aware, is only a translation of the name of China, (Chung-ko, as the natives call it—Chung middle, and ko country or kingdom;) but the facts which are to form your optic lens in obtaining those glimpses, are not so easily traced. If "truth lies hid in a well" any where, it does in China; and drawing with a cart rope does not always bring it up. One is constantly liable to be imposed upon, and that not always through malice, but oftener from a principle of mere politeness or suavity, either toward yourself, or on behalf of some friend of whom mention is made. A mere tyro in the language, for instance, is often complimented upon his attainments, until he may become a wonder to himself, if he is not an astonishment to the natives. But their compliments are not always as flattering to the person addressed as they intend them, or as a foreigner would desire. They will address a mere youth, for instance, as aged or venerable father, until he might well doubt whether his locks were not suddenly frosted over, or his brow furrowed wide and deep as the face of Methuselah himself. A man of sixty may give you his own age at half that number of years, without any wish that you should believe him, but with an air of mock humility, as if he would say, "I am not worthy to be so old a man."

But Mammon is truly the god of China, and one readily learns to calculate upon the homage paid at his shrine. I believe we could buy a church of baptized believers, or men enough to constitute a church, for half the money it would require to purchase a plantation of slaves of the same number at the South. But you sooner detect the fraud, where money is the object.

The same difficulty exists in coming at any thing like truth with respect to the common relations of life. The terms "brother" and "sister" are used so vaguely, that we might suppose a man to have a troop of brothers and sisters, when he may be entirely destitute, or at most have no more than one. This mistake is occasioned by the polite omission of the qualifying terms used to express relationship. Thus, te-sheung is the general term for brethren, and is understood as we use that term. Sheung means an elder brother, sheung-te a younger brother, and te-te the youngest. But these terms are all applied to cousins—the same is true of other relations—and the mistakes are all caused by the polite omission of the qualifying terms used to distinguish them. Tang is to be prefixed when one wishes to designate cousins, and ching to designate brothers and sisters. Thus, ching-sheung-te a brother, tang-sheung-te a cousin. Add to this the custom of grouping together in clans whole branches of the same family under one roof, and the deception becomes complete; and it might perhaps remain so for life, did not circumstances bring out the facts.

Take an example: We formerly mentioned to you the large family of brothers and sisters of our late teacher. We had always met the same houseful of children, and we knew they called him "ah-koo," elder brother; and, in speaking of or to them, he always gave them their respective titles of eldest sister, younger brother, and so forth; and it was not until months after his decease, although we were often there, and thought ourselves well acquainted with the family, that we discovered our error. By some means they at length came to comprehend our ignorance, and a hearty laugh they had at our expense, assuring us, that Chung-seen-sang was an only son, and that he had but one sister, now the only remaining child of her widowed mother. This all comes of the fact, that relative titles, and not arbitrary appellatives, as with us, are used to distinguish individuals. Occasionally, however, some little term of endearment is added, but is not extensively used.

I had an amusing instance of the above custom the other day, in speaking to our present teacher of his son, who resides at Sou-chou, and who has been for some weeks on a visit at home. He is a fine little fellow of fifteen, and I had become deeply interested in him. So I inquired, "Has your honorable son returned to Sou-chou?" and then asked, "What is your son's name?" He looked at me inquiringly, and answered, "Te-sah," (the third.) I added, that I did not inquire after his number, but his name. He hesitated, and turned to my cook, who was in the room, for an explanation, saying he did not get my meaning. Our united effort was finally successful; but he only shook his head with a perplexed air, and laughing said, "He has no other name." I then asked, "How do your neighbors distinguish him?" He answered, that he "did not know."

I have said, that this obscurity extends alike to all the members of the household. The children born in his house, and the stranger bought with his money, are, to the patriarchal father, as much bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh as are the inferior wives, who are also bought with money, and therefore can never share the rank of the first or great wife. They may indeed become the pet, the favorite, as I am quite certain, from having seen the second wife sitting in solitary grandeur at her side table, loaded with delicacies, and furnished with chop-sticks of silver and pearl, while the poor wife sat, with pale and thoughtful brow, and meek folded hands, the picture of subdued grief, only occasionally coming with a mournful smile to address us, or make inquiries, or to speak with the laughing, chattering group that surrounded us. Poor woman, perhaps we had, for the time being, monopolized her board and chop-sticks, (mere wooden ones, painted red;) but, could she have known the different emotions that filled our breasts, as we contrasted her with her proud rival, she would have felt herself well rewarded for the loss of her repast for our sakes that little once. They are our near neighbors, and I hope to know more of their history hereafter. There are other children in this family, bought with money, but the truly lady-like daughter, in speaking of them, called them her brothers and sisters. There were probably no sons by the first marriage, and daughters might as well not be as to exist without a brother. The father must have a son to build up his house, and if the first wife may have the honor to be his mother, all is well. Betrothed in youth, from a family of his own rank, she is not lawfully supplanted, except in default of offspring, nor even then in respect to the position to which the marriage contract entitles her. She is, to all intents, the mother of her husband's children. The infant Ishmael must become the heir of the family, but the hapless Hagar may be retained as a bondwoman, or sent away in jealousy, or sold into bondage, at the mandate of the capricious Sarah. Thus, the wife has certain inalienable rights—rights which cannot be wrested from her, but by a legal intervention. The causes of divorce, according to Davis, are seven: "The first, barrenness, would seem to be superfluous, as there is a remedy provided in legal concubinage; but the truth is, that either resource, or perhaps both, are in a man's power at his option. The other causes of separation are adultery, disobedience to the husband's parents, talkativeness, thieving, ill temper, and inveterate infirmities. Any of these, however, may be set aside, by the circumstances of the wife having mourned for her husband's parents, the family having acquired wealth since the marriage, and the wife being without parents to receive her back. It is in all cases disreputable, and in some, as those of a particular rank, inadmissible, for a widow to marry again. Whenever the widow is herself unwilling, the law protects her; and, should she act by the compulsion of parents or other relatives, these are severely punished. Widows, indeed, have a very powerful dissuasive from second wedlock, in being absolute mistress of themselves and children, so long as they remain in their existing condition." See Davis' History of China, p. 129. L. M. C.

MARRYING A DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER.—A great deal has been said and written on the scriptural legality of marrying a deceased wife's sister. Religious bodies have decided that it is wrong; and it is but a few years since, that quite an excitement was raised in one of the Western States in consequence of a clergyman having been deposed by his presbytery for marrying his deceased wife's sister. There is a law in England prohibiting such marriages; but efforts have been and are still being made for its repeal. It seems, from the following resolutions, that the Baptists in England are moving in favor of its repeal. At a meeting of the Board of Baptist Ministers, residing in and near the cities of London and Westminster, held in the Baptist Mission House, Moorgate-street, Feb. 12, 1850, the following resolutions were passed unanimously:—

1. That in the judgment of this Board, the marriage of a widower with a sister of his deceased wife is scripturally lawful, and ought not to be prohibited by human legislation.

2. That in the judgment of this Board, the Act of 5th and 6th William IV. cap. 54, is improperly restrictive of the rights of individuals, and in many cases productive of immorality.

3. That this Board has learnt with pleasure, that the Committee of the Baptist Union has issued a circular recommending the churches to petition for the passing of an act legalizing the class of marriages thus prohibited, and hopes that they will generally comply with the suggestion.

4. That a petition, in conformity with the preceding resolutions, be presented to both Houses of Parliament, signed on behalf of the Board, by the Chairman and Secretary; and that Mr. Hinton, with the Chairman and Secretary, be requested to prepare it.

NECROLOGICAL NOTICE OF BENJAMIN KÖNIGMACHER.

The fulsome adulation and unmerited panegyric so frequently and so indiscriminately lavished, in obituary notices, not only on very ordinary individuals, but often on very inferior and even on vicious persons, render it a somewhat delicate task to attempt any extended notice of departed worth; and, therefore, we most generally limit the announcement of the exit, from this world of tears, of the brightest and the best of the choice spirits that occasionally enliven our pilgrimage here below, and cheer us on in our checkered pathway to our eternal home, to a mere record of their departure to their inheritance above. Yet we cannot, from such considerations, be turned from our sense of propriety, or do so much violence to our feelings, under the present poignant bereavement, as to suppress all expression of venerated esteem and cherished affection for the subject of the severe dispensation which has deprived the Church of Ephrata, as well as the whole community in which our deceased brother resided for a period of nearly seventy-seven years, of one of the most generous and self-devoted benefactors that has ever tabernacled in the flesh.

Our whole intercourse in life, and not a limited course of reading, fail to afford a single example of a practical Christian—a Christian who has manifested his faith by his works—to the extent of our beloved brother, when we estimate religion by personal, hard, unremitting bodily toil and devotion to the welfare of others—a practical religion, which descends to any drudgery, however menial, or however servile, to carry forward and carry out every principle of the Divine Master.

Benjamin Königmacher was a Christian who not only made a profession of religion, and maintained his place in the congregation of the saints, but who, from the day of his connection with the Society of Ephrata, fifty-five years since, labored most diligently and perseveringly to succor and sustain that ancient institution; and that, not only by being the first and the last at the sanctuary, and by conducting and maintaining the Meetings when there was no Under Shepherd (which has seldom been the case for the last forty years) to lead the flock, but by becoming the servant and the slave of every one who might need his aid, or be benefited by his unprecedented willingness to render any act of kindness to a brother or a neighbor, and especially to the widow and the orphan.

Feebleness in numbers, and declension in vital piety, were not the only obstacles for him to contend against, in maintaining the cause he espoused, under discouragements which cannot be rehearsed in a necrological sketch, written for a weekly paper; but contending against external oppression and wrongs, as well as occasional internal dissensions, he was always found in the front rank, defending the faithful of the flock, and sustaining the welfare of the Society, like a valiant soldier of the Cross; which he often did under the most trying circumstances; nor did he ever relax his efforts to succor an individual, or advance the interests of the church, so long as they required any one to stand by them in all their troubles. But his public acts of devotion to the cause of the Society of Ephrata, were trifling to his private labors to uphold the weak and comfort the needy. Day by day, and night by night, year in and year out, for more than a half century, did he toil, indefatigably, to promote the prosperity and happiness of those around him; and that, not always attended with the least encouragement to perseverance in a good work, but more frequently when most shamefully requited; yet it never damped his ardor in doing good, or restrained him from commending the duty of a self-denying disciple. So sad a return, indeed, for his kind offices, has the writer frequently seen exhibited by numerous ingrates, that on one occasion he ironically remarked: "Brother Benjamin, you will receive your reward." To which the generous benefactor mildly replied: "If I did it in expectation of reward, I should deserve all I get." And, on another occasion, the writer expressing his astonishment at his perseverance in repeating acts of kindness to those who not only despitefully used him, but shamefully abused all his favors, he replied: "What did our Saviour endure in his work of love to perverse and rebellious man? Need I look for any thing better?"

Such elevated and ennobling principles prompted all his actions, and enabled him to persevere, under circumstances which would not only have discouraged hundreds, but really disgusted thousands; yet he toiled on, patiently, under all such trials and hindrances, that he might glorify his Master. No sacrifice of time or personal labor was ever withheld, when he could render a benefit to a fellow mortal, and especially to one of the household of faith. Through the instrumentality of this energetic servant, in connection with the coöperation of his kin coadjutor, Jacob Königmacher—kin in the flesh and kin in works of love—who was removed to the rest laid up for the faithful, ten years since, has the worship of the Almighty been regularly maintained, Sabbath after Sabbath, and the feeble remnant of the small flock of the Great Shepherd and Bishop of Souls at Ephrata, been preserved, during a series of years of great peril and disaster, up to the present day.

Upward of fifty years did our departed brother fill the office of Deacon, with the utmost alacrity and assiduity. He never waited to be importuned for his attention to the sick or afflicted, nor to be asked to render assistance, but always anticipated every want; neither did he limit the amount of relief to any uniform scale; his scale and his rule were the demand—not the niggardly doling out of pence-a-pence; in doing which, he never exposed the destitute, but shouldered the responsibility to extend whatever was actually needed; and no one ever questioned the propriety of that course, for all had confidence in his discretion, as well as in his goodness of heart, well assured that none would ever suffer where he had the oversight. On hearing of any indisposition in the family of the Redeemer, he repaired immediately to the scene of distress, proffered any personal assistance, would secure all the attentions needed, and never leave a dwelling without making particular inquiry (apart) "whether they stood in need of any thing;" and, whatever that might be, it was immediately supplied. He was the most unostentatious man—a man of the roughest exterior, but withal one of the most tender-hearted, to be found in the land. He was truly a man of sympathies, and loved nothing better than being engaged in the practical work of Christian love. His religion was not a lip-service, but the religion of the heart and the hand. While he relied solely on the merits and the atonement of a crucified Redeemer for acceptance with God, and committed himself entirely into his hands, yet he deemed it to be his duty, as well as the common duty of every disciple, to imitate the Divine Exemplar, in doing all the good he could to others; and put his hands to the work, as if he had to work out his own salvation himself.

Among the office-bearers of the synagogue, under the Old Dispensation, there was one designated "chazan," or Angel of the Congregation—one who exercised functions separate from, though akin to, the regular sheleh tsebur, or he who ministered in word. Whatever the distinction may have been, or however they may have approximated, no term could be found more expressive of the guardian care and succoring vigilance over the interests of the Society, nor one more appropriate to the ministry of the individual, than the term Angel of the Congregation, to our much lamented brother. He was, in every sense, the Angel of Ephrata, in modern times, not only in position, but in the exercise of the works of love. But few such self-devoted men can be found in any community. Their sparseness has induced the writer to pen this hasty, imperfect sketch, in the hope of inciting others to emulate his praiseworthy example of goodness and usefulness as a neighbor, and of the consecration of all his powers as a Christian, to his Maker and Redeemer. NEW YORK AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.—The Commissioners appointed by the Governor of New York to mature a plan for an Agricultural College, have made their report. They recommend an institution in connection with an experimental farm, which is to consist of 600 acres, and be cultivated by the scholars, who are to work four hours a day. Among the exercises suggested, are laying out the farm and garden; setting out trees and plants; grafting, budding, pruning, transplanting, and rearing fruit trees; fencing grounds; breeding and feeding stock, &c. The branches of education are, natural philosophy, practical chemistry as applicable to soils and manures, geology, mineralogy, botany, horticulture, mathematics, engineering, practical surveying, the principles of rural legislation, and the veterinary art. Candidates for admission to the College will have to be sixteen years old, and well versed in the rudiments of an English education. The annual expense for each scholar is set down at $100, including tuition, board, washing, fuel, and lights. Others, who live in the vicinity at their own expense, will be admitted for $25 a year, but they must labor with the pupils, and submit to the College rules. The course of instruction will require six terms; one continuing from February to the summer vacation, the other from the middle of August to the middle of December. To manage this institution, they propose a President who is a scientific and practical agriculturist, a Professor for each of the different branches, a farmer, a gardener, a mason, and a blacksmith. The annual expenses they estimate at $12,000.

SUNDAY POST-OFFICE LABOR.—An entire page of the London Times was recently occupied with declarations and signatures, expressive of the practicability and desirableness of abolishing Sunday labor in the Post Offices throughout the country. Among the signatures were those of fifteen English and Welsh Bishops, (headed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of London,) nearly 300 clergy of London and its suburbs, and some hundreds of banking, legal, mercantile, and trading establishments, together with several of the Aldermen and other civic functionaries of the city.

☞ If we mistake not, it was the Bishop of Canterbury, who was reported, by the post-office authorities, as having always required that his official letters should be delivered on Sunday. We should like to know, whether it is in his official capacity, or as an individual, that he heads the above-mentioned list of petitioners.

AMENDED VERSION OF THE SCRIPTURES.—A good deal has been said among the Baptists, within a year past, about an amended version of the Scriptures. The subject was brought up at the last annual meeting of the American and Foreign Bible Society, and since then it has furnished a theme for not a few editorial articles. Recently, Dr. Cone and Mr. Wyckoff, the President and Secretary of the Bible Society, published a pamphlet in favor of the amended version. This led to a large meeting in New York, last week, of those opposed to the measure. At that meeting a report was read, which entered deeply into the merits of the question, and presented a series of powerful arguments against the change proposed. Resolutions embodying the leading ideas of the report, were enthusiastically adopted, and letters were read from distinguished Baptist ministers, condemning the amended version, and urging its rejection by the great body of the denomination at the approaching anniversaries. It is proposed, we believe, by parties favorable to the change, to offer the stereotype plates as a donation to the American and Foreign Bible Society, at its next annual meeting, on condition that they be used instead of those heretofore used. That step will bring the subject fairly before the people for discussion.

RELIGIOUS MOVEMENTS IN CALIFORNIA.—A San Francisco paper says that the Presbytery of California, in connection with the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, met at Benicia Feb. 20. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. S. Woodbridge, and on the organization of the body, Rev. Mr. Williams was chosen Moderator, and Rev. Mr. Woodbridge, Clerk. Much important business was transacted during the session; among which, measures were adopted for the efficient promotion of the interests of education and missions, and, as a special object, the evangelization of the Indian tribes in California.

ANOTHER MARTYR.—John M. Barrett, Esq., who was arrested in South Carolina, on suspicion of being opposed to Slavery, and subsequently released on bail, died at Dublin, Ind., on the 23d ult. The New Castle Courier says, that he died of a disease brought on by long confinement within the damp and unwholesome walls of a southern prison, and fell "a victim to the dark and bloody spirit of Slavery, whose path is strewn with human lives, and crushed hopes, and bleeding affections, and the fearful aggregation of every human wo and misery."

"SABBATH LAWS."—The N. Y. Tribune, of Second-day last, says that "a preliminary meeting of citizens was held on Thursday evening, at No. 55 Forsyth-st., for the purpose of drafting a petition and organizing an association, the object of which shall be to use their best efforts to procure an entire and absolute abolishment of all laws now in force in the State of New York which conflict with the privileges enjoyed by the people on other days of the week and not on the Sabbath."

POST-OFFICE AT ALFRED CENTER.—A letter from Eld. N. V. Hull informs us that a post-office has recently been established at Alfred Center, Allegany County., N. Y., David C. Green, postmaster. Eld. Hull requests his correspondents to address him at Alfred Center instead of Alfred, and also advises those corresponding with students of the Academy, and others residing in that part of the town, to address their letters in the same way.

EPISCOPAL BISHOP OF CALIFORNIA.—A statement is going the rounds of the papers, that it is in contemplation to consecrate Rev. Dr. Hawks, of New-York, as a Missionary Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and send him to California as the seat of his future labors.

HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION IN NEW YORK.—The Assembly of New York passed a Homestead Exemption Bill on the 5th inst., by the decisive vote of 67 to 34. It is expected that the Senate will concur. The Governor's signature is considered certain. The bill exempts the homestead of a family to the value of one thousand dollars, from sale on execution.

JEWISH CONVERT.—A Jewish rabbi, named Bazaleel Herbertsmann, has been admitted into the Christian Church at Edinburg, having been converted to the faith by means of a tract placed in his hands by a brother Jew. An immense crowd assembled to witness the baptism.

SIGNIFICANT FACT.—Although the Jesuits have been engaged in the work of missions among the heathen more than 200 years, not an instance is on record where they have sought to accomplish their work by translating the Scriptures into the language of the people.

REPORT FROM SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.—The Commercial Advertiser publishes the following extract from a letter dated at St. Paul, Minnesota, March 12, said to have been written by a gentleman of respectability and probity:—

"A dog train arrived here yesterday, from some distance above Lake Superior, bringing news that an American vessel had been seen, by some of the Indians, and had sent letters saying that Sir John Franklin was found. The particulars I cannot learn. However, they say he is safe."

General Intelligence.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

SECOND-DAY, April 1.

No business was transacted by either branch of Congress; in consequence of the death of Mr. Calhoun. In the Senate, Mr. Butler, of South Carolina, announced the death of his colleague, and paid a tribute to his memory. He was followed by Messrs. Clay and Webster, who bore eloquent testimony to the exalted talents, patriotism, and virtues of the illustrious dead. In the House, Messrs. Holmes, of S. C., and Venable, of Va., made appropriate addresses.

THIRD-DAY, April 2.

The funeral solemnities of Mr. Calhoun were attended, in the Senate Chamber, by both branches of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, President Taylor, the Cabinet, a large representation of the diplomatic corps, numerous officers of the army and navy, and many distinguished strangers. After the performance of the Episcopalian service, and the delivery of a brief address by Rev. C. M. Butler, Chaplain of the Senate, from the 7th verse of the 82d Psalm, a procession was formed, which proceeded to the Congressional Burying-Ground, where the remains were deposited to await their removal to South Carolina.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, April 3.

Resolutions were passed to print in pamphlet form the addresses delivered in Congress on the death of Mr. Calhoun, and that his remains be removed, at the pleasure of his surviving family, in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and attended by a Committee of six Senators, to the place designated for their interment in the bosom of his native State.

Mr. Rusk introduced a bill to reduce the rates of postage, and for other purposes.

Mr. Cooper submitted a resolution, instructing the Committee on Finance to inquire into the expediency of modifying the Tariff of '46, by increasing the duty on iron and certain other articles.

A message was received from the President in relation to the protection of the frontiers of Mexico from the Apache and other wild Indians.

The special order, Mr. Bell's compromise resolution, was then taken up, and Mr. Baldwin concluded his remarks upon the subject of slavery.

House of Representatives.

After disposing of some unimportant business, the President's California Message was taken up, and Mr. McClernand, of Illinois, offered a plan for the settlement of the questions which have so long agitated the country. It proposes the admission of California with her constitutional boundaries; the erection of a territorial government for Utah; a territorial government for New Mexico; and a compromise relative to the Texan boundary. The subject was discussed during the remainder of the day, but no action was taken upon it.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, April 4.

Numerous petitions were presented and referred, after which the special order came up, and the slavery question was debated by Messrs. Underwood, Corwin, Webster, Hale, and Foote.

House of Representatives.

A Committee of Nine was appointed, in accordance with the request of Mr. Secretary Crawford, to investigate the Galphin Claim.

The Committee on Elections reported against the admission of Hugh N. Smith, Delegate from New Mexico, and W. A. Babbitt, Delegate from Deseret, to seats in the House. The Report was referred to the Committee of the Whole, and made the order for April 29.

Messrs. Green, of Missouri, and Spaulding, of New York, addressed the House on the California and slavery question.

In Senate. SIXTH-DAY, April 5.

Mr. Dickinson submitted a resolution, directing one hundred dollars compensation to James Robertson, for several days' imprisonment, on complaint of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, upon suspicion of having a design upon the life of Mr. Clay, which, after debate, was adopted.

The resolution in relation to a Select Committee on the subject of slavery, was then taken up. Mr. Shields, of Illinois, addressed the Senate, declaring himself in favor of the immediate admission of California, and opposed to the Special Committee. Messrs. Mason, Underwood, Clay, and Benton, followed with brief remarks; after which the Senate adjourned over to Second-day.

House of Representatives.

Engaged all day upon private claims, many of which were passed.

ERUPTION OF VESUVIUS.—Mr. Bayard, son of ex-Senator Bayard of Delaware, was buried at Naples on February 20. He received his death at Vesuvius, on one of the nights of the recent great eruption there, from the falling of a stone from the crater, which nearly severed his arm. He bled profusely for 60 hours, when amputation was ordered, which resulted in lock-jaw and death. His funeral was attended by all the Americans in Naples, and by one good Englishman, who came in his carriage and followed to the burial; no Italians, and no military escort sent by the King, or permitted from the squadron. They were fearful of American soldiers.

A correspondent of the Journal of Commerce thus describes the scenes at the mountain since the eruption:—I am sorry I did not come a few days sooner, to witness one of Vesuvius' grand eruptions which has been the largest ever known. We have been today to see the lava, &c., and it is most wonderful. A new crater has been formed, and the emission of lava was so immense, that it has extended a distance of seven miles, by one and a half to three miles wide, and about thirty feet high. After descending the mountains, it has gone forward, one and a half miles wide, and thirty feet high, for a distance of five miles at least, and forms an embankment like that of a railroad raised over a plain, covering thirty-two houses, and one or two churches, and destroying of course an immense number of vineyards and farms. The direction was on the side opposite to Naples. The sight must have been most grand; and while it lasted (say five days) the railroad cars run all night, to carry people to see it. Although the trembling of the houses at Naples was sensibly felt during the eruption, there was not the least apprehension of danger.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamer Europa arrived at New-York on Sabbath last, with tow weeks later intelligence from Europe.

The news is not important. A decline of one farthing in nearly all descriptions of cotton, and a slight improvement in some articles of provisions, is reported.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer had presented his budget for the ensuing year; and although he announces a surplus, the manner in which he proposes to dispose of it is not altogether satisfactory. "Ministers are said to hold office by a very precarious tenure."

From Ireland, we have reports that cultivation is going on more rapidly than was anticipated, and that a great breadth of potatoes have been sown. Emigration from the southern frontiers of Ireland is rapidly increasing. The Society for the Improvement of the Cultivation of Flax in Ireland, is making strenuous efforts to introduce that crop into the Southern and Western Provinces.

Through the good offices of M. Gros, the French Envoy, who had arrived at Athens, the dispute between England and Greece is in the way to settlement. M. Gros recommends the Greek Government to recognize the English claim to indemnities for injuries sustained by British subjects, but to leave the question of amount open to discussion—a proposition which the Greek Government is disposed to adopt, though it waits for the final reply of Russia. In the mean time, Admiral Parker retains possession of 33 Greek vessels as pledges for payment, but the semi-blockade has been raised for a reasonable time, until some definite arrangement has been made.

The Pesth Zeitung has five of its columns filled with the sentences passed by courts martial upon the persons who have been compromised in the Hungarian Revolution. All the sentences of death have been commuted to terms of imprisonment in irons on the fortifications for periods of 12 and 16 years. The condemnation of Baron Ladislaus Bemer, Bishop of Grosswardien, to 20 years imprisonment in irons, for participating in the Hungarian revolutionary movements, had excited the greatest sensation.

ONE MONTH LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

The steamer Oregon, which left San Francisco on the 1st of March, reached Panama on the 20th, bringing 262 passengers, and nearly two millions and a quarter dollars in gold dust, $1,342,602 on freight, and at least $1,000,000 in possession of the passengers. The passengers, mails, treasure, &c., reached New-York on the 5th inst., by the steamers Cherokee and Empire City.

The Sacramento flood had entirely subsided, and no farther danger was apprehended. Town lots at Sacramento City were daily rising in value. Levees are to be built at Sacramento City to prevent future inundations. The work will cost a million of dollars. The authorities have ordered the lands cleared for the purpose. The squatter disturbance is not yet settled. The squatters claim right to the unoccupied lands, whether included in the city survey or otherwise. The anti-squatter party is said to be most numerous. The Legislature has been petioned for a city charter. But Gov. Burnett has vetoed that measure.

All the other towns of the Sacramento and tributaries are thriving, particularly the new towns of Yubaville, Vernon, Fremont, and a survey recently made on Feather River near its mouth called Nicolaus. Communication has opened with all parts of the Placer from the above points, and the three regular steamboats which leave San Francisco for the great point of disembarkation, Sacramento City, are on each of their trips crowded with passengers for the gold diggings.

The prospect for gold-diggers, during the coming summer, was considered very flattering. New mines had been opened in several places, which yielded well.

In San Francisco business was becoming more brisk. Money still commands the highest rates of interest—rents are falling, and real estate is at a stand; lumber is rapidly declining.

Immigration was pouring into San Francisco in a stronly increasing current. The arrivals for the last month—Jan. 29 to Feb. 27—were, American, 1,170, of whom 21 were females; foreign, 1,013, of whom 126 were females.

Among the passengers by this arrival, are Messrs. T. O. Larkin, Priest, &c., appointed by the California Mail Steamship Company, a Committee to arrange for the immediate construction of the necessary steamers to establish a new line.

The Oregon arrived at San Francisco on the morning of the 22d Feb. and remained in port but one week. English dates to the 28th Dec. were received by her in San Francisco, being but 55 days on the route.

A large fire occurred at Chagres on the evening of March 23, which consumed the largest part of the old town of Chagres. The American side is progressing rapidly, and is called par excellence Jersey City.

THE GREAT EXHIBITION.—It is stated that the Committee, who have in charge the arrangements for the World's Great Industrial Exhibition, to be held next year at London, have already determined to erect a building a mile in length, with five avenues, each a mile long, and that this is only to begin with, as it is thought to be quite too small for the whole. This will appear more probable, when we remember that at the late exhibition of implements at the Fair of the Royal English Agricultural Society, twenty-seven acres were covered by them. To understand well all that is to be seen at the great approaching exhibition, will require the same length of attentive observation as the tour of Europe.

MR. CALHOUN'S LAST DAY IN THE SENATE.—The general opinion is, that Mr. Calhoun's death was hastened by the excitement connected with the discussion of Slavery. A Washington letter writer says that his attention was particularly arrested by the earnestness with which Mr. Calhoun watched Seward, while the latter was developing, in a plain, unequivocal manner, the course which he believed the North destined to take. Calhoun was resolved that the South should continue to rule the Union, and dispense its vast patronage; and, on the 13th of March, he declared that he did not want to be on good terms with Mr. Seward. "The Senator," said he, "who holds that he must consult a higher Power than the Constitution in regard to our rights, is not the man to associate with me." In this spirit did he leave the Senate Chamber on that day, and never returned.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD.—The plan of Mr. Benton for a railroad to the Pacific has been published in the National Intelligencer. He proposes to apply the proceeds of land-sales to this purpose, and by hypothecation, when necessary, to anticipate resources. He would begin at St. Louis and close at San Francisco, with branches to the Columbia River, Santa Fé and Deseret. He wishes to have a common road and a railway; to finish the first within a twelvemonth for wagons, and the last in seven years. He would make the road a post road, and have the mail carried in sleighs, wagons or coaches, 100 miles per day, besides a horse mail, for light letters and slips, to travel 200 miles a day. The Indian title he desires to extinguish on a breadth of 100 miles. To encourage the early settlement of choice lots, Mr. Benton provides, that a donation of land, 160 acres, shall be made to each head of a family, widow, or single man, over 18, who shall be settled on the line of said central highway and branches, of the extinguished Indian claim, within twelve months after such extinction of title; and preemption rights, to the same extent, to all similar settlers, after twelve months.

COLONIZING FREE NEGROES.—The Legislature of Virginia has adopted a bill designed to rid the State of Free Negroes. It appropriates $30,000 annually for five years to remove those who may be willing to remove. It also makes the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, and First and Second Auditors, a Board of Commissioners, who, whenever they shall be satisfied that any number of free persons of color, now free, and residents of this State, and their children, shall have been actually transported to the colony at Liberia, or other places on the western coast of Africa, or have been embarked for transportation thither by the American Colonization Society, shall pay said Society such sum as may be necessary to defray the costs of transporting and subsisting such persons for a limited time; not more than $25 to be allowed for the transportation and subsistence of any free person of color above the age of ten years, and not more than $15 for those under that age. The act imposes a tax of $1 upon every male free negro of the age of 21 years and under 55 years, to be added to the appropriation aforesaid, to assist in removing those who are willing to be removed.

REACTION IN FAVOR OF LIBERTY.—We have the pleasure to announce to our readers, says the editor of the Western Citizen, that since the explosion of the gas constituting a considerable portion of the Southern element in Congress, and the smoke has blown away, the prospects of Freedom are more flattering. The prompt expression of the North in favor of right and no compromise, has also had its effect in supporting the fluctuating and faint-hearted men. From this fact let us take courage to apply to ourselves the injunction, "Be not weary in well doing." It is now conceded, that California will be admitted to the Union with her present Constitution and boundaries. If the proviso does not pass in application to the government of other Territories, we have this consolation, that nothing will be done by Congress to hinder the Territories, as California has done, from forming Governments for themselves, with restrictions in their Constitutions. But nevertheless the security is in agitation, and petitioning to Congress and writing to Members.

MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE.—A young lady by the name of Jane A. Dixon, daughter of Russel Dixon, of Bridgewater, Oneida Co., N. Y. visited Rochester in October, 1848. Toward the close of the month, she left the city, in company with a young man of good standing in society, on her way home. He was to have left her at Auburn; but nothing has been heard from her since her departure from Rochester. Miss Dixon was a young lady of unblemished reputation. Her parents would be thankful for any information which would lead to her recovery, living or dead.

HOW TO ENLARGE VEGETABLES.—A vast increase of food may be obtained by managing judiciously, and systemically carrying out for a time the principle of increase. Take, for instance, a pea. Plant it in very rich ground, allow it to bear the first year, say half a dozen pods only; sow the largest one the following year, and retain one pod; again select the largest, and the next year the sort will have trebled its size and weight. Ever aftewards sow the largest seed, and by these means you will get peas, or anything else, of a bulk of which we at present have no conception.

The Philadelphia Gazette says that Mr. S. Norris has just built, at his new factory in Schenectady, an engine, on a patent plan of his own, which has run upwards of fifty miles on the Syracuse and Utica road, with a loaded train, at the rate of 72 miles an hour. There are four wheels on a side, all of the ordinary size, excepting one driving wheel, that is seven feet in diameter, and, like all the wheels, is of wrought iron! Alone, they cost nearly four thousand dollars, and the locomotive itself, $14,000! It is called a 24 ton engine.

An Agricultural and Horticultural Society was formed at a large meeting in Salem Co., N. J., on the 16th ult., Hon. T. Jones Yorke in the chair, and Chas. P. Smith, Secretary. Messrs. Jona. Ingham, R. P. Thompson, and James M. Hannah, were appointed a committee to report a constitution and by-laws.

JEWISH SCHOOLS AT SALONICA.—The Rev. Mr. Dodd gives some valuable facts, in the Missionary Herald, in relation to the Jewish Schools at Salonica. There is one large public school, where all the poor Jews, by paying a trifle, can send their children. The pupils number perhaps 1,000. There are private schools, supported by the richer parents, having about 1,500 pupils. Hebrew and Hebrew Spanish are taught. In one school French is taught. These schools are only for males. Female education is generally unknown. Of the adult male population, possibly 1,000 can read understandingly. Those who can read the Talmud are called wise men, and they enjoy peculiar privileges. It is thought there are about 500 of these "wise men." They read the Bible only as it is explained by the Talmud, which is said to contain all wisdom. They have little or no idea of other countries, and none of grammar and the structure of language. The language spoken is the Spanish, corrupted and mingled with Hebrew and Turkish.

SUMMARY.

A fatal affray occurred at Singleton's Landing, on the Kentucky river, on March 25, between Mr. Thomas T. Coger and Keene Singleton, in which Mr. Coger and a son of his were both shot. A difficulty which had its origin in a law suit, took place between them, in which Mr. Coger received three shots from a revolver in the hands of Singleton, wounding him mortally. Young Coger also received a shot in the groin, which, too, is supposed to be mortal. Singleton got off, and has not been arrested.

The total number of deaths in Boston from small pox, as reported at the death office, for the eleven years ending with and including the year 1838, was forty-three. For the eleven years ending 1849, the number of deaths by small pox was five hundred and eleven. During the first period of eleven years, patients seized with this disorder were sent to quarantine. At the commencement of the latter period, the law was repealed, and patients were treated for the disorder at their various homes.

The stage proprietors of New York have petitioned the Board of Aldermen for some regulation in regard to dead horses, and other animals, that decease in the city, especially during the summer months. The petitioners state, that they lose from their stables annually from 2,300 to 2,500 horses in the aggregate, through fatigue, accident, and general natural causes. This number is swelled to over five thousand from the distilleries, and other private establishments.

Messrs. Barton and Cobb, of Portsmouth, N. H., organ and piano forte builders, have produced an instrument uniting the flute and piano forte, and is so arranged that it can be played with or without the piano. The flute is made of wood, so that the atmosphere has little or no effect upon it, and when once tuned it remains so, and answers to the touch of the most rapid music. It adds but fifty dollars to the expense of the piano.

Two ladies in St. Louis, a Mrs. Hicks, formerly of Connecticut, and a Miss Hawkins from Toronto, have made shirts for Prince Albert and his son, of the finest linen that could be procured, the first of which contained 152,217 stiches, and the second 95,154, which they have sent as a present, through the British Minister at Washington.

Counterfeit half eagles are in circulation in various parts of the country. A large number have made their appearance in Richmond, Va. The Editor of the Richmond Times was shown a $5 gold piece purporting to be of the emission of 1843, so admirably executed as to mislead even the most wary. It was defective in weight, however.

The Salem Gazette mentions the approaching sale, in Boston, by auction, of a venerable portrait of Dr. Franklin—taken before he was 30 years old. The picture formerly belonged to John Franklin, brother of Benjamin Franklin, and it is mentioned in his will, dated in January, 1756. It has been retained in the family ever since.

Levi Cole and Thomas Kanouse, who were arrested some time since, charged with being the robbers of the Bank of Westerly, R. I., were a few days since liberated, upon giving bail in $1,600 each. During their confinement at Westerly, fears were entertained that they would escape, and they were removed to Providence, where the bail was taken.

The Sussex (N. J.) Register gives the details of the explosion of a Powder Magazine at the Andover Mine, by which two sons of William S. Johnson, aged 12 and 14 years, were blown to atoms. Factory Establishment for Sale.

THE subscriber will sell the well-known Establishment, called the Bethel Mill, situated in Hopkinton, R. I., consisting of the factory, 60 by 28 feet, two and a half stories high, and a good stone basement room under the whole building; a cloth-house, 16 by 20, one and a half stories; a dye-house, 20 by 30, with suitable kettles; a wash-box, &c.; a small smith-shop for repairing; three dwelling-houses, a barn, and about six acres of land. The buildings are mostly new, the factory and dye-house having been erected in 1848, where one was burnt in that year. A good water privilege of about five feet fall, with a sufficient reservoir to supply the mill through all the drought of summer, being 114 acres, 12 feet deep, averaging from 8 to 10 feet the whole surface.

The present occupants run twenty looms on plaid linseys, and are entitled to its occupancy until the money loaned by them towards its erection (over 3,000 dollars) shall be paid, at a rent of about six hundred and eighty dollars per annum, or otherwise paid in money. It is pleasantly situated, in a good neighborhood, and help easily obtained. About half of the purchase money must be paid within the year, and the purchaser, if he chooses, can let the rest remain to be liquidated by the rent, which will take between six and seven years. It will be a good investment for any one desirous of obtaining such an establishment, or who has money to loan. JACOB D. BABCOCK.

Eclectic Magazine for the Year 1850.

THE Eclectic Magazine of Foreign Literature, Science, and Art, aims to present to its readers a complete survey of the whole field of British Periodical Literature, comprising the selections of all the articles of the most able and celebrated Reveiws, Magazines, and Journals, which have any interest or value to American readers. It not only contains the articles which are desirable in those periodicals reprinted in this country, but in the far greater variety of able and popular Reveiws, Magazines, &c., which form so splendid an element of the literature of the day, and which are inaccessible to the mass of American readers, except by some such medium as the Eclectic Magazine. By omitting what is merely local in interest or feeble in character, the ample size of the Eclectic Magazine enables the editor to embody all that is really desirable in the whole range of journalism. As only the best articles of each periodical are selected, it is evident that the contents of the Eclectic Magazine must be superior to those of any one, however great or celebrated; and, taken together, must constitute a more desirable and able body of periodical literature than can be found elsewhere in the same compass.

Each number is embellished with a suberb steel engraving, from the well-known burin of Mr. Sartain, of subjects of elevated character and general interest, including portraits of distinguished living authors and celebrities, making twelve rich and elegant prints in a year.

TERMS.

The Eclectic Magazine is issued on the first of every month, in numbers of 144 large 8vo. pages each, on fine paper, making three volumes a year, with title-pages and indexes. Price $5 per year, if paid strictly in advance—otherwise invariably $6.

☞ The Magazine above described fully sustains the character given to it in the prospectus, and is justly regarded as the best work of the kind to be had. We shall be happy to forward the subscription of any of our friends who may find it more convenient to communicate with us than with the publisher.

History of Romanism.

In a large octavo volume of 750 pages, printed in large type, on the finest paper, and embellished with more than fifty engravings, chiefly from Original Designs, and bound in muslin, extra gilt. Price $3. THE HISTORY OF ROMANISM, from its earliest origin to the present time, by the Rev. John Dowling, D. D. A new and enlarged edition, with the Author's last additions, and a Supplement, containing a Sketch of the Life of Pope Pius IX., &c.

The best evidence of the intrinsic value of this remarkably popular work is to be seen in the fact that within the comparatively recent period of its first publication, the extraordinary number of 17,000 copies have been disposed of.

The following is an extract from a letter from the Rev. Dr. Giustiniani, the converted Roman Catholic priest, who is abundantly qualified by education, observation, and extensive study, to testify to the fidelity and value of a "History of Romanism."

"If the reader wishes to be acquainted with the errors of Romanism, he has only to open the pages of Dowling's History. If the reader is anxious to read an epitome of the history of the popes, their ambition; their intrigues; their avariciousness; their tyranny; their superstitions, and their mummeries, he can here find all proved and authenticated by the most accredited authors of the Church of Rome." L. GIUSTINIANI.

"It reflects much credit on the skill, patience, industry, and judgment of the author; he appears very justly to have conceived the idea of a work, which has long been regarded as a desideratum by a large portion of those interested in the great controversy with the Romanists."—Protestant Churchman.

"We think it an able work, comprising the results of extensive reading and research, and well adapted to fill an important chasm in our literature.—Lutheran Obs.

"We regard it as a most important addition to the historical and religious literature of the age. Its contents form a rich storehouse of historical instruction, which should be placed within the reach of every family."—N. Y. Christian Intelligencer.

"It presents a succienct, but sufficiently full, history of the rise, progress, errors, cruelties, and present condition of the Papacy, authenticated by reference to the most undoubted historic sources, related in a spirited, engaging, and impressive style, and arranged in the most lucid manner. It abounds in facts and incidents, and, with its beautiful illustrations, is better adapted to furnish a vivid and impressive portraiture of Romanism as it is, than any other book we know of."—N. Y. Evang.

"The detached portions of Romish history which were every where to be met with, needed to be brought together and presented in systematic order. The reading of one book thus becomes better and cheaper than the reading of many."—Boston Recorder.

"It is written with the ready, popular eloquence, for which the well-known author is distinguished, and cannot fail to arrest attention to the controversy of which it treats. It is a strongly Protestant work, and exhibits the deformities of Popery with great power."—N. Y. Recorder.

"The author appears to have brought to the execution of this great work, unwearied industry, genuine and thorough scholarship, and scrupulous fidelity."

RUFUS BABCOCK, late Pres. of Waterville College.

Miscellaneous.

CLOSING SCENE OF PROF. WEBSTER'S TRIAL.

We have not thought it advisable to occupy much room with the testimony and pleadings in the great trial at Boston; but the following sketch of the closing scene, we are sure, will instruct as well as interest our readers:—

At 8 o'clock Sabbath evening, the papers were handed to the Jury, and they retired to their apartment. The Court adjourned to their ante-chamber in the building, where it was their intention to wait until midnight, for the purpose of being in readiness to impart information to the Jurors, should they be doubtful on any point of law, or otherwise require the opinion of the Judges. It having been generally known that the case was in the hands of the Jury, and that a verdict was likely to be rendered during the night, the excitement among the assembled multitude in the vicinity became intense, and various were the conjectures made. There could be seen in all directions in the Court-square groups of people engaged in serious discussions concerning the trial. The scene within the Court, though more solemn, was not less exciting, and, notwithstanding the lateness of the hour at which the result was made, there were present in the Supreme Court many of the oldest and most respectable citizens. The scenes within and without the Court-House will never be forgotten by those who witnessed them.

The Jury, after retiring, passed some forty minutes in breathless silence, scarcely exchanging glances of the eye. The strong, unbroken chain of evidence, together with the powerful argument of the Attorney General, had so fastened the marks of guilt upon the prisoner, that almost the only question for the jury to act upon, was one of formality—to vote upon their verdict.

At half-past nine o'clock, the foreman, Mr. Byram, addressed his associates upon their duty, which he stated to be, to render a verdict in accordance with the evidence. There were three questions to be settled, in order to justify the Jurors in the rendition of a verdict of guilty, and these were—Was it proved that the fragments of a human body found on Prof. Webster's premises, at the Medical College, were the remains of the late Dr. George Parkman? Was it proved that Prof. Webster, and he alone, murdered Dr. Parkman? And was the murder the result of deliberation and malice aforethought? On each of these questions the Jury voted by holding up their right hands, as follows:—

First Question—Has the identity of Dr. Parkman's body been satisfactorily proved? Yes—each Juror holding up his right hand.

Second Question—Did Prof. John White Webster, and no one else, murder Dr. George Parkman? Yes—each Juror again holding up his right hand.

Third Question—Was the murder the result of previous preparation, and was it "malice aforethought?" On this interrogatory the Jury stood eleven to one.

After this vote, the Jury rose from their table—some walked the room, others looked fixedly upon indifferent objects, and all were in tears and a terrible state of anguish. The dissenting Juror was allowed to remain unquestioned for some 30 minntes, while he collected his thoughts and cast the evidence over again in his mind. Finally, he called upon his associates to vote again upon the question, when he held up his hand with the other eleven, and then a unanimous verdict was declared.

At twenty minutes of 11 o'clock, it was rumored throughout the Court-room that the Jury had agreed upon a verdict, and that they were about to report. The scene which immediately ensued was awful. The entire Court-room was crowded with seated and standing spectators, all watching with fixed gaze the door through which it was expected the Jury would enter.

At thirteen minutes of 11 the prisoner, unmanacled, in custody of officer Jones, came in and took his seat in the dock. He looked down-cast. His lips were compressed and his face pale. In three minutes after the entrance of the prisoner, the Court and Jury entered, almost simultaneously—the Judges through the western door, and the Jurors through the eastern door.

All eyes were now turned upon the Jury, whose faces bespoke suppressed emotion and solemnity, and whose cheeks, in several instances, were wet with tears. After a short pause, Judge Shaw instructed the Clerk of the Court to interrogate the Jury as to their agreement upon a verdict, and the latter proceeded as follows:

Clerk—Gentlemen of the Jury, have you agreed upon a verdict?

Foreman of the Jury—We have.

Clerk—Who shall speak for you?

The Jury—Our Foreman.

Clerk—John W. Webster, rise and hold up your right hand. Mr. Foreman, look at the prisoner—John W. Webster, look at the Foreman of the Jury. What say you, Mr. Foreman, is the prisoner at the bar, John W. Webster, guilty or not guilty?

Foreman—GUILTY.

Clerk—So you say, Mr. Foreman, so you all say, Gentlemen of the Jury?

The Jury—WE DO.

The announcement of the verdict had a terrible effect upon the prisoner. His uplifted arm dropped, as if the circulation of the blood through it had been stopped, and his hand struck upon the bar in front of the dock. Indeed, there was an appearance of something like a paralytic shock visible throughout his entire frame, and he sank backwards into his chair. He soon raised his right hand to his face, but for some time there was not strength enough in his arm to hold it there. The muscles of his face evinced great internal emotion, and in all respects he presented a most appalling spectacle. He seemed like a man whose last hope had been scattered by a single blow. During the ten minutes which elapsed in this solemn ceremony, the Court presented a sight seldom if ever witnessed before. We shall not undertake to describe the appearance of the vast audience during the rendition of the verdict, nor the manner in which they deported themselves, because a truthful picture of this scene is beyond the power of our pen.

The Sentence.

On Second-day morning the Court again assembled. After some minutes of silence, Mr. Attorney General Clifford rose, and succinctly, yet with great gravity, narrated the facts of the indictment, trial, and verdict, and then moved the Court that the final sentence of the law be now pronounced. The prisoner then rose, and was asked by the Clerk what he had to shew why sentence of DEATH should not be pronounced against him. In reply he said nothing, but bowed sadly and took his seat. Chief Justice Shaw then addressed him in the following words. The voice of the Chief Justice was replete with emotion, and his whole manner evinced the sincerity of the feeling so touchingly expressed in the following Sentence:—

JOHN W. WEBSTER,—In meeting you here for the last time, to pronounce that sentence which the law has affixed to the high and aggravating offense of which you stand convicted, it is impossible by language to give utterance to the deep consciousness of responsibility, to the keen sense of sadness and sympathy, with which we approach this solemn duty. Circumstances, which all who hear may duly appreciate, but which it may seem hardly fit to allude to in more detail, render the performance of this duty on the present occasion most unspeakably painful. At all times and under all circumstances a feeling of indescribable solemnity attaches to the utterance of that stern voice of retributive justice which consigns a fellow being to an untimely and ignominious death; but when we consider all the circumstances of your past life—your various relations in society—the claims upon you by others—the hopes and expectations you have cherished, with your present condition, and the ignominious death which awaits you, we are oppressed with grief and anguish, and nothing but a sense of imperative duty imposed on us by the law, whose officers and ministers we are, could sustain us in pronouncing such a judgment against the crime of willful murder, of which you stand charged—a crime at which humanity shudders—a crime every where, and under all forms of society, regarded with the deepest abhorrence. The law has denounced its severest penalties in these few simple, but solemn and impressive words: "Every person who shall commit the crime of murder shall suffer the punishment of DEATH for the same." The manifest object of this law, is the protection and security of human life—the most important object of a just and fraternal Government. It is made the duty of this Court to declare this penalty against any one who shall have been found guilty, in due course of the administration of Justice, of having violated this law. It is one of the most solemn acts of judicial power which an earthly tribunal can be called upon to exercise. It is a high and exemplary manifestation of the sovereign authority of the law, as well in its stern and inflexible severity as in its protecting and fraternal benignity. It punishes the guilty with severity in order that the right to the enjoyment of life, the most precious of all rights, may be more effectually secured.

By the record before us, it appears that you have been indicted by the Grand Jury of this county, for the crime of murder, alledging that on the 23d of November last you made an assault on the person of Dr. Geo. Parkman, and by acts of violence you deprived him of life with malice aforethought. This is alledged to have been done within the apartments of a public institution in this city, the Medical College, of which you were a Professor and Instructor, upon the person of a man of mature age, well known, and of extensive connections in this community, and a benefactor to that institution. The charge of an offense so aggravated, in the midst of a peaceful community, created an instantaneous outburst of surprise, alarm and terror, and was followed by universal and intense anxiety to learn by the results of a judicial proceeding, whether this charge were true. The day of trial came—a Court was organized to conduct it—a Jury almost of your own choosing was selected in the manner best calculated to insure intelligence and impartiality; counsel were appointed to assist you in conducting your defense, who have done all that learning, eloquence, and skill could accomplish in presenting your defense in its best aspects. A very large number of witnesses were carefully examined, and after a laborious trial of unprecedented length, conducted, as we hope, with patience and fidelity, that Jury has pronounced you guilty. To this verdict, upon a careful revision of the whole proceedings I am constrained to say in behalf of the Court that they can perceive no just or legal grounds of exception. Guilty! How much under all these thrilling circumstances which cluster round the case, and throng our memories with the retrospect, does this single word import, but the willful, violent, and malicious destruction of the life of a fellow man in the peace of God, and under the protection of the law? Yes! of one in the midst of life, with bright hopes, warm affections, mutual attachments, strong, extensive, and numerous, making life a blessing to himself and others. We allude thus to the injury you have inflicted, not for the purpose of awakening one unnecessary pang in a heart already lacerated, but to remind you of the irreparable wrong done to the victim of your cruelty, in sheer justice to him whose voice is now hushed in death, and whose wrongs can be only vindicated by the living action of the law. If, therefore, you may at any moment think your case a hard one, and your punishment too severe; if one repining thought arises in your mind, or murmuring word seeks utterance from your lips—think! Oh, think! of him instantly deprived of life by your guilty hand! then, if not lost to all sense of retributive justice—if you have any compunctious rising of conscience, you may be ready to exclaim, in the bitter anguish of truth, "I have sinned against Heaven and my own soul! My punishment is just! God be merciful to me a sinner."

God grant that your example may afford a solemn warning to all, especially to the young. May it impress deeply upon every mind the salutary lesson it is intended to teach, to guard against the indulgence of unhallowed and vindictive passion; to resist temptation to every selfish, sordid, and wicked purpose; to listen to the warnings of conscience, and yield to the claims of duty; and while they instinctively shrink with abhorrence from the first thought of assailing the life of another, may they learn to reverence the laws of God and Society, designed to secure their own. We forbear, from obvious considerations, from adding such words of advice as may sometimes be thought appropriate on occasions like this; it has only been our province on occasions like the present; to address the illiterate, the degraded, the outcast, whose early life has been cast among the vicious, the neglected, the abandoned, who have been blest with no means of moral and religious culture—who have never received the benefits of cultivated society, nor enjoyed the sweet and ennobling influence of home. To such an one a word of advice upon an occasion so impressive may be a word fitly spoken and tend to good; but in a case like this, where these circumstances are all reversed, no word of ours could be more efficacious than the suggestions of your own better thoughts, to which we commend you.

But as we approach this last sad duty of pronouncing sentence, which is indeed the voice of the law, and not our own—yet in giving utterance, we cannot do it with feelings of indifference, as a formal and official act—God forbid that we should be prevented from indulging and expressing those irrepressible feelings of interest, sympathy and compassion, which arise spontaneously in our hearts, and we do most sincerely and cordially deplore the distressing condition, into which crime has brought you. And though we have no word of present consolation or of earthly hope to offer you in this hour of your affliction, yet we devoutly commend you to the mercy of our Heavenly Father, with whom is abundance of mercy, and from whom we may all hope for pardon and peace. And now nothing remains but the solemn duty of pronouncing the sentence which the law fixes for the crime of murder, of which you stand convicted, which sentence is, that you, JOHN W. WEBSTER, be removed from this place, and detained in close custody in the prison of this county, and thence taken, at such time as the Executive Government of this Commonwealth may by their warrant appoint, to the place of execution, and there be hung by the neck until you are dead—And may God, in his infinite goodness, have mercy on your soul.

FARMING ON TWENTY-ONE ACRES OF LAND.

From the Genesee Farmer.

Many of the cultivators of the soil, who occupy large possessions, do not realize the amount of labor that can be profitably employed in cultivation; and few farm laborers are aware how small a piece of ground will afford full employment to an industrious man, and yield himself and family the comforts of life, and make them an independent home.

In illustration of these views, I will give an account of farmer B. His farm consists of twenty-one acres. One acre of it is occupied with buildings, yards and gardens, and twenty acres for cultivation—all made productive by thorough draining and bountiful manuring. A good, substantial fence, is all around it, but there are no division fences. He has 57 rods of patent portable fence, which is easily removed, with which he encloses one-fourth of the ground for pasture.

The farm is divided into four equal parts—5 acres in each part. First season, No. 1 is in grass, clover and timothy, for pasture; No. 2 in hoed crops—one acre in wurtzels, one in potatoes, and three in corn; No. 3 in barley; and No. 4 in wheat. With these crops he keeps a regular rotation each year. The second season, No. 1 is manured in the fall with all the manure he has collected the past year, and ploughed for the next season's hoed crops; No. 2 is ploughed in the fall for barley the next spring; No. 3 [barley stubble] is sown with wheat; and No. 4 [wheat] is sown with timothy and clover for the next season's pasture—which rotation he uniformly pursues.

He keeps a yoke of oxen, two cows, twenty good ewes, and a breeding sow, for which five acres of fresh clover, on a rich soil will afford plenty of pasture, provided that he does not turn into it too soon in the spring. The wheat and barley straw, corn stalks and roots, will be ample forage for them in winter. He is industrious, economical and prudent. Everything is done well, and in season. The ground is kept clean, no weeds being allowed to grow, not even around the fence; it is made rich by plentiful application of manure, which renders it very productive. His wheat averages 30 bushels per acre. It will take twenty-four bushels to bread the family the year [which consists of himself, wife, and four little ones,] and will take 7 bushels for seed, which will leave 119 to sell; this, at $1 per bushel, will bring $119. His barley yields 40 bushels per acre; it will take 8 of it for seed, and 192 bushels to market, at 50 cents per bushel, will be $96. The corn averages 60 bushels per acre; the three acres produce 180 bushels; it will take 80 bushels to feed the pigs, fat the pork, and use in the family, (for they eat Johnny-cake and mush,) which leaves him 100 bushels for market, which, at 50 cents per bushel, is $50. The potatoes and beets are all used at home. The wool of the 20 ewes, averaging $1 per fleece, will be $20. They raise 20 lambs, which he sells in July or August for $20. By taking the lambs from the ewes early, the latter will get fat by fall; 15 of them are sold for $30, with which he purchases 20 ewes for next season's keeping—and he has five fat sheep left for the use of the family. The sow has six pigs the last of March or early in April; five of them, with the sow, are fatted, and a young sow kept for pigs next spring. The 5 pigs and old sow, when fattened, will make 1100 lbs. pork; 500 will do for the family, with the five fat sheep, and leave him 600 lbs. to sell, which, at 5 cents a pound, is $30. The two calves are fatted and sold for $5. This makes $340 worth sold from the products of 20 acres, and the family have had their farm living the past year.

It may be thought that this calculation is too large for an average production, but I assure you that if the operator is industrious, economical and judicious, he will seldom fall short of the quantity stated. But it is asked, how can an industrious man be constantly employed on 20 acres of ground cultivated for farm purposes? Look at it. His ground for spring crops is all ploughed in the fall. On the first of April he commences operations for the season. He first sows the grass seed on the wheat; then 10 cwt. of plaster on the ground for hoed crops; and as soon as the ground is sufficiently dry, he harrows and cross harrows until it is thoroughly pulverized, and then he rolls it. By that time the planting ground is ready to harrow, which operation is continued until the ground is well pulverised, and the nearer it can be made to a garden tilth the better.

But if he is ahead of the season with his work, he can always have full employment in making the manure heap. He collects everything that will make manure that his time and means permit; he puts on it at least one ton of plaster at different times. Leached ashes, swamp muck, marl, dirty salt, and old brine, are all collected and mixed with the barn-yard dung, so as to increase the manure heap to at least 200 loads.

The ground being in good order, and the season favorable, he commences planting the first of May, and takes time and does it well—for there is more lost by careless planting than would pay for four times the labor of doing it well. He first plants the wurtzels, then the potatoes and corn. Planting done, the wheat is to be wed; and as soon as the wurtzels are up he begins hoeing, which affords him employment until the first, and perhaps the fifth of July. He then has some leisure, and assists a neighbor in haying, to procure help in hauling in the grain.

He commences harvest as soon as the grain will answer, and barley will do to cut pretty green. If it is not sufficiently dry to bind, let it lie two or three days in swath. Harvest begun, he may work as faithfully as he chooses until the grain is all secured. That done, he harrows, cultivates, or ploughs shallow the barley stubble, so as to pulverize it thoroughly four inches deep, and sows on it half a ton of plaster. The corn is now ready to cut up; that done, he ploughs the barley stubble deep and well, and sows the wheat. The summer crops are now ready to gather, which employs him a while. When all are secured, he takes out the manure, spreads it evenly over the surface, and ploughs it under. The hoed ground is also to be ploughed for barley next spring, which keeps him busy until it is time to prepare for winter.

In winter he takes good care of his stock, threshes the grain, and provides the fuel—having none on his farm. The orchard is planted by the fence around the farm and door yard.

Now, my young friends, be industrious and saving, and you will soon be able to purchase 21 acres of land. And you who have large possessions, and sons whom you wish to have settled near you, divide your possessions with them, and teach them to realize that industry and economy are the sources of wealth—and that a neat, comfortable and independent home, though it is small, will afford more rational enjoyment in old age, than large possessions, with a princely mansion, even if it is not encumbered with debt.

STATISTICS OF INSANITY.

The Report of the Managers of the N. Y. State Lunatic Asylum at Utica, states that the whole number of patients received into the Asylum since it was opened, on the 16th January, 1843, is 2,376. Of these 1,017 have been discharged recovered, 419 improved, 222 unimproved, and 269 have died. 1,119 were married, 1,113 single, 101 widows, and 43 widowers. Of the 1,209 men, 512 were farmers, 151 laborers, 63 merchants, 65 scholars, 18 attorneys, 18 physicians, 11 clergymen, 17 teachers, 5 medical students, and 1 editor. The following table will show the age at which insanity commenced:—

Under 20 years	265	From 50 to 55 years	99
From 20 to 25	436	" 55 to 60	85
" 25 to 30	404	" 60 to 65	56
" 30 to 35	306	" 65 to 70	32
" 35 to 40	298	" 70 to 75	5
" 40 to 45	233	Over 80 years of age	3
" 45 to 50	153
Total			2,376

The following are the principal supposed causes of insanity:—

	Men.	Women.	Total.
Unknown	236	207	443
Ill health	174	274	448
Doubtful	181	143	324
Religious anxiety	102	103	205
Loss of property	67	26	93
Puerperal	—	93	93
Sickness and death of kindred	26	61	87
Excessive study	52	7	59
Intemperance	82	5	87
Millerism	17	21	38
Disappointment in love	36	24	60
Perplexity of business	31	14	65
Abuse of husband	—	34	34
Epilepsy	30	12	42
Excessive labor	21	23	44

Some of the minor causes of insanity are curious enough. Thus, two became insane from the want of occupation; two from the excitement of a sea voyage; three from excessive use of snuff; one from excessive smoking; one from excitement of visiting; one from firing of cannon; two from neighborhood difficulty; one from Fourierism; one from Anti-Rent excitement.

ABATING A NUISANCE.—A novel mode of putting down a nuisance was adopted in the quiet and picturesque village of Berby, with complete success. For a considerable time, a number of illiterate young men assembled at the principal entrance to the church, and amused themselves by making indecorous remarks on the person, dress, &c., of each female (irrespective of social position) as she entered the church. No female escaped their vulgar rudeness. One day a hand-bill, of which the following is a copy, was posted throughout the village: "Wanted, about twenty young men, of all shapes and sizes, from the tall dandy, with hair enough on his upper works to stuff a barber's cushion, down to the little hump-backed, freckle-faced, bow-legged, carroty-headed up-start. The object is to form a gaping corps, to be in attendance at the church doors, on each Sunday, before the commencement of divine service, to stare at the females as they enter, and make delicate and gentlemanly remarks on their person and dress. All who wish to enlist in the above corps will appear at the church door next Sunday morning, as usual, when they will be duly inspected, and their names, personal appearance, amount of brains, &c., registered in a book kept for that purpose, and published in hand-bills, to be distributed all over the village. To prevent a general rush, it will be well to state, that none will be enlisted who possess intellectual capacity above that of a well-bred donkey." The nuisance was discontinued.

HYDROPHOBIA NOT THE RESULT OF BITES.—The Westminister Review, for January, has an article upon epidemics, that contains much valuable information, with some speculations more ingenious than wise. It ridicules the idea that hydrophobia in human beings has any connection with the bite of a mad dog, and contends that chemical analysis and experiment have proved, that there is no poison in the saliva of a rabid animal. In the cities of the East, where dogs are permitted to run at large, and especially at Constantinople, where they form communities by themselves, and infest the streets night and day, the inhabitants do not suffer more from hydrophobia than in Western cities. There are more cases of the disease in January, and the smallest number in August, as appears from statistical tables. Not more than one in twenty-five of those bitten by mad dogs ever suffer by hydrophobia, and in that case the influence of fear upon weak nerves may have been the cause; and the [illegible] has frequently occurred in human beings where no possible connection could be traced between the malady and any previous bite or scratch. DEATH BY SPONTANEOUS COMBUSTION.—The following extraordinary occurrence is related in the Gazette des Tribunaux:—"A few days ago, in a tavern near the Barriére de l'Etoile, a journeyman painter, named Xavier C——, well known for his intemperate habits, while drinking with some comrades, laid a wager that he would eat a lighted candle. His bet was taken, and scarcely had he introduced the flaming candle into his mouth, when he uttered a slight cry, and fell powerless to the ground. A bluish flame was seen to flicker about his lips, and on an attempt being made to offer him assistance, the bystanders were horror-struck to find that he was burning internally. At the end of half an hour his head and the upper part of his chest were reduced to charcoal. Two medical men were called in, and recognized that Xavier had fallen a victim to spontaneous combustion. This conflagration of the human frame is frightfully rapid in its progress; bones, skin, muscle, all are devoured, consumed, and reduced to ashes. A handful of dust on the spot where the victim fell, is all that remains."

CUSTOM BREEDS FAMILIARITY.—When traveling from Liverpool to London by the mail train (eight hours and three quarters) on May 7, 1846, I remarked that partridges, pheasants, hares, and rabbits, though near the train, were not the least alarmed by it, as rooks and ringdoves were; all of the many birds of these two species having changed their quarters to some distance. I was particularly struck by the indifference of the rabbits, which, although within thirty yards, did not even erect their ears to listen to the sound. I have no doubt that the case was very different when the trains first started, and that these four species, which are now regardless of them, quickly fled at their approach; but experience having taught them that they have nothing to fear, they are now as indifferent to the loudly rushing train as to the gently passing wind. When subsequently traveling by this rail, I observed that a partridge which had been close to where the engine passes, (perhaps dusting itself on the road,) was obliged to move out of the way. It then flew merely a few yards up the grassy bank, and alighted within the railway inclosure.

VACCINATION.—The following paragraph from the Home Journal contains information which may prove useful to all newspaper readers:—"First, every individual is susceptible of vaccination; second, re-vaccination is not necessary before puberty; third, the system undergoes a change at puberty, and re-vaccination is then necessary; fourth, vaccination is a sure preventive of small pox; fifth, re-vaccination is a sure preventive of varioloid; sixth, the third vaccination is inert; seventh, the system is susceptible of varioloid after puberty, whenever the individual is exposed to small pox, without re-vaccination; eighth, re-vaccination is not necessary if the first operation was performed since puberty; ninth, those who disregard vaccination are always liable to small pox whenever exposed to the influence of that dreadful disease; tenth, if every individual were vaccinated before puberty, and re-vaccinated at that revolution of the system, there would be no such disease existing as the small pox."

NEW GARDEN PLANTS.—New garden plants have been discovered in India and China, by travelers sent out to those countries by the Horticultural Society of London. One of them, Mr. Dalton Hooker, in his researches at the base of the Himalaya mountains, where the temperature of the year is within a trifle the same as that of New York, discovered a quantity of rhododendrons, or rose trees, which, for the size and beauty of their flowers, surpass anything of the kind, either in Europe or this country. Four species of these splendid plants grow spontaneously around the town of Darjeeling, situated on the crest of the sub-Himalaya chain of Sikkim, at an elevation of six thousand feet above the level of the sea. Some of these singular plants have been, after much labor and expense, taken to England alive and well.

HOW TO DISLODGE A FISH-BONE FROM THE THROAT.—It sometimes happens, that a fish-bone, accidentally swallowed, will remain in the œsophagus, and occasion serious inconvenience; in fact, instances have been known where so much irritation has arisen that death has followed. In such cases, it is advisable, as soon as possible, to take four grains of tartar emetic, dissolved in one half pint of water, and add immediately afterwards the white of six eggs. The coagulated mass will not remain in the stomach more than two or three minutes, and the probability is, that the bone will be ejected with the contents of the stomach. If tartar emetic is not to be found conveniently, a teaspoonful of mustard dissolved in milk-warm water and swallowed will answer the same purpose.

IMMENSE TEA-POT.—An English correspondent of the Independent says:—"Amongst the most interesting public festivities of the season have been those of the Temperance Society in Leicester. The abstinence principle has happily obtained strong hold upon this manufacturing town, and the Society is well organized. They had a week of meetings, commencing on Christmas eve. Their tea-making is stupendous. The Society has an urn warranted to make tea of uniform strength and simultaneously for 1,000 persons. It has a valve and index, a tube of seventy feet in length, so that the supply can be regulated to a nicety, with little trouble to the ministering ladies."

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

Sabbath Tracts.

The American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its Depository, No. 9 Spruce-st., N. Y., viz:—

No. 1—Reasons for introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment to the consideration of the Christian Public. 28 pp.

No. 2—Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 52 pp.

No. 3—Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 28 pp.

No. 4—The Sabbath and Lord's Day—A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 52 pp.

No. 5—A Christian Caveat to the Old and New Sabbatarians. 4 pp.

No. 6—Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.

No. 7—Thirty-six Plain Questions, presenting the main points in the Controversy; A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian; Counterfeit Coin. 8 pp.

No. 8—The Sabbath Controversy—The True Issue. 4 pp.

No. 9—The Fourth Commandment—False Exposition. 4 pp.

No. 10—The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed. 16 pp.

No. 11—Religious Liberty Endangered by Legislative Enactments. 16 pp.

No. 12—Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention is invited:—

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pages.

The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.

An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.

Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to GEORGE B. UTTER, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

FACTS AND THOUGHTS ABOUT WISCONSIN.

Wisconsin, in many respects, enjoys an enviable situation among the Western States. It is not quite as rich, perhaps, in the luxuriant productions of nature, as some of the more southern; yet this is more than counterbalance by considerations of a higher character. The Lakes, on the east, and the Mississippi, on the west, afford great facilities for importation and exportation. The climate and soil are well adapted to the growth, in great profusion, of the staple agricultural productions of the Eastern and Middle States. The thermometer ranges higher in summer than in the same latitudes east, thus giving time for ripening of crops, but sinks lower in winter. The surface soil of the prairies is a black loam; that of the burr-oak "openings" is more sandy; that of the white-oak, more urgillaceous. The surface soil gradually changes into a subsoil of compact, unctuous, gravelly loam; the whole resting upon a base of sand, gravel, or rock. Water is obtained in abundance, by digging in the openings from twelve to forty feet, and on the prairies from twenty-five to one hundred feet. Materials for building are somewhat scarce, compared with the rock-ribbed, pine-clad mountain regions of the east. This difficulty, however, is in a fair way of being removed by the new method of building with gravel cement, invented by Joseph Goodrich, Esq., of Milton. Buildings of this kind, for durability, enconomy, and adaptation to the country, promise to be far superior to wood; if so, it will be of incalculable benefit to the West.

Limestone is found underlaying large portions of the State, outcroping in numerous places. Boulders are found quite plentifully, scattered along the margin of marshes, and the shores of ponds and lakes. The course of these wandering rocks, as indicated by the striæ on the upper surface of the quarried limestone, seems to have been south-west. The rock in the eastern part of the State is considered a continuation of the Helderberg series of New York. In the western part, magnesian limestone appears, interstratified with chert. This formation has indications of having been easily abraded in its early stages by the action of water; an example of which, among others, is the cave lately discovered in the town of Middlesex, Dane County. There have been many vague and incorrect rumors afloat in regard to the size and character of this cave. The country around resembles a large semi-elliptical amphitheater, with rivulets descending from the surrounding hights, during the wet seasons, uniting in the center, and forming one common stream. This stream is soon interrupted by a bluff jutting directly across its course. The water, thus hemmed in, has worn through the solid rock an underground channel, which, except in times of high water, is dry. A very good idea of this subterranean channel, alias cave, may be formed by imagining a large auger-hole, with innumerable twistings, turnings, and branchings, sufficiently large to admit a common-sized man by his lying down, placing his arms close to him, and thrusting himself forward by his feet placed against the rough sides of the aperture. These tortuous apertures expand, once in some twenty or thirty feet, into conical apartments, resembling in size and shape Indian wigwams. The length of this "anaconda" has not as yet been ascertained, though, from the nature of the surrounding country, it is supposed to be several miles. Stalagmites and stalactites are found; but, owing to the mud deposited during times of high water, they are so soiled as to destroy much of their beauty.

The "Mineral Regions" are also in connection with this formation. Iron and copper are found, but lead is most abundant. Some "diggings" which have been heretofore quite extensively worked, are now deserted for the golden ones of California. The method of working most of these mines is simple. Shafts are sunk, after the manner of western wells—square or rectangular—and curbed as fast as sunk. These are continued till the ore is reached; which is found either in veins or in fragments termed floats, scattered through the soil. Both the soil and ore are raised to the surface by means of windlases, and there separated, or else separated before being raised. There is much uncertainty in sinking these "Mineral Dits," as there is no way of ascertaining whether a vein will be struck or not, except by trial; and many an unfortunate man has spent quite a fortune in fruitless search after these hidden treasures.

Although much wealth is destined to accrue to Wisconsin from her mineral and agricultural resources, yet her greatness will not consist in these; it will consist in her intellectual and moral power. It is for her schools and churches—the life-giving streams issuing therefrom—that she is destined to be noted. The very luxuriance of some of the Western States is, in many respects, detrimental to the development of man's nobler faculties—detrimental to the higher pursuits of intellectual and moral beings. The prayer of Agur—"Give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me, lest I be full and deny thee, and say, Who is the Lord? or lest I be poor, and steal, and take the name of my God in vain"—is as applicable now as in the day when it was uttered—as applicable to all mankind as to Agur.

The avenues to sudden wealth, which are presented at the West, should be so many arguments against, rather than in favor of, a removal there. The sad experience of many attests the truth of this remark. Many bright and shining lights, and some, even, who were considered pillars in eastern churches, have, on removing to the West, given themselves up to the acquisition of wealth. Others, who remain firm in their integrity, are caused to weep bitter tears over the worldly-mindedness of their children. This is not strange; for it could not be expected, that the young and susceptible mind would invariably withstand those influences which overcome and ruin so many whose moral characters have been of long growth. Such being the case, it becomes parents, in selecting their new homes, to consider well the influences that are to be thrown around themselves; to consider, also, in view of eternity, the influences amid which they are about to cast their children.

It cannot be denied, that Wisconsin, in common with other Western States, has influences which are deleterious to the highest developement of humanity. She, with the rest, is wanting in many of those characteristics of climate and natural scenery, which have such an influence in the formation of eastern character. This cannot be better illustrated, than by a quotation or two from a noted western writer. He says:—"Nearly all heroism, moral excellence, and ennobling literature of the world, has been produced by those who, in infancy and youth, were fostered by the inspiration of exalted regions, where the turf is covered with a rude beauty, rocks and wilderness are piled in bold and inimitable shapes of savage grandeur, tinged with the hues of untold centuries, and over which awe-inspiring storms often sweep with thunders in their train." If grand scenery has this effect, is it any wonder, that the East "is the nursery of patriotism the most firm, and eloquence the most sublime? Elastic as the air they breathe, free and joyous as the torrents that dash through their rural possessions, stony as the granite hills from the scanty soil of which they wring a hardy livelihood, her enterprising sons, noble and high-minded by natural endowment, are like the glorious regions of rugged adventure they love to occupy. This is an universal rule." These influences may be almost imperceptible at first, yet, from the very nature of things, must ultimately operate to her detriment.

Although Wisconsin is wanting in some of these prerequisites of heroism, "moral excellence, and ennobling literature," yet she possesses them in as great numbersas, if not greater number than, any other Western State. The proportion of her inhabitants from the East, is far greater than in those States farther South. As a necessary consequence, her society bears more the impress of eastern society. She has already taken a very important and commanding station among her neighbors, in all of the intellectual, political, and moral reforms and improvements of the age; as a reference to the reports of her benevolent societies, legislative proceedings, and State Superintendent of Public Instruction, will plainly show. She is doubtless destined ere long to hold, in education and morals, the same relation to the Western States as Massachusetts does to the New England States, and New York to the Middle States.

Such being the situation and some of the prospects of Wisconsin, considerations of great importance press upon us as a denomination. There are already five Seventh-day Baptist Churches organized within the State. The societies composing these churches, have, for the most part, been very fortunate in their locations, being in the best portion of the State, and well situated to occupy a commanding position. It is to be regretted, however, that some individuals have located themselves too far from their brethren to enjoy Sabbath privileges with them. If individuals thus locate themselves for the purpose of being missionaries, and holding up the truth to their neighbors, it may be well; but if they do it for wordly considerations, they have done a wrong to themselves, to their families, and to religion. Another difficulty is, that some who were members of churches at the East, have, on emigrating to the West, neglected to unite with their brethren, even when living in the same neighborhood, in church relations. From these causes, some of the churches are very much crippled. The leading position taken by the Seventh-day People there, from the first, in the cause of education, has added much to their influence. Du Lac Academy, one of the two incorporated Academies of the State, has had during the past year for its Principals, brethren A. W. Coon, and P. P. Livermore, and is sustained mainly by the patronage of Seventh-day Baptists. This Institution is, doubtless, doing more for the education of teachers and, the elevation of common schools, than any other in the State. It becomes us to cherish well its interests, as it is now, and may thus continue long to be, a powerful auxiliary in advancing the best interests of the denomination at the West. These and other facts go to prove, that the denomination has a firmer foothold and greater influence in Wisconsin than in any other Western State, and perhaps a greater proportionate number and influence than in any other State in the Union, and that in Wisconsin is the nucleus around which, for a long time to come, our western churches will cluster. This being the case, that State affords a desirable location for those observing the Sabbath, and wishing to provide a home for their families, or the young man desiring to find a situation where he can grow up with the country.

A question of great importance here arises, applicable to the entire West: What men are most needed there? Her billowy prairies, luxuriant vallies, and majestic rivers, invite man thither. He has accepted the invitation, and persons from all classes, both in this country and in Europe, have taken up their residence in "Prairie Land." The consequence is, a society with a great variety of customs, beliefs, and prejudices—a society, young, buoyant, and ill brooking the stereotyped restraints of older communities, yet ready to be swayed and molded by leading spirits. What are some of the qualifications necessary for such spirits, in order that they may have an influence both great and good?

1. They need to be clothed with bodies that are stout of limb and strong of nerve—constitutions that will stand the toils incident to a pioneer life.

2. They need a thorough and extended course of intellectual training, that will enable them to stand high in whatever situation they may be called to occupy. The society in the northern portion of these States is composed principally of the young and middle aged, whose energy, industry, and enterprise, would do honor to them in any situation—a substantial proof of which is their undertaking a pioneer life. Many are there from the higher walks of life; many that have a good classical education; many that are seeking for place and honor. Now, in order to meet such, it is necessary to have an education equal or superior to theirs. Again, false doctrines are fast gaining ground. Mormonism, Catholicism, the socialism of France, the transcendentalism of Germany, and the enchanting machinations of Secret Societies, find at the West their wily and successful advocates. These must be met, and in order to meet them successfully, there is need of much learning and wisdom. Those labor under a mistake, who think that if men have a passable education—one that would enable them to do tolerably well at the East—they can, on removing to the West, take the lead in intellectual and moral reforms. They may succeed very well for a season; but society is changing, and soon they will find themselves running under. Those of better intellectual qualifications, though perhaps inferior in morals, will supersede them, while they are compelled to pass the remainder of their days in comparative obscurity. It therefore becomes those men who are looking to the West as a field of future usefulness—who are desirous of exerting a high, hallowed, and commanding influence—to consider well what they will have to meet, and make preparations accordingly, and not permit their zeal to thrust them hastily or prematurely into the field.

3. They need deep and ardent piety. This is necessary in every walk of life, however humble and secluded. If so, how much more necessary for those who are to give form and character to society among western pioneers. They need meekness, fortitude, patience, energy, and perseverance. They need virtue that will be proof against the seductive influences that may surround them; a burning zeal for the good of their fellow-beings; a moral courage that cannot be frowned down; a spirit that will not be satisfied with moving in the smooth, gentle current of public favor, but an aggressive spirit, that will leap the bounds of public opinion, take a bold stand for truth, and maintain that stand, fearless of consequences—not only maintain a defensive position, but make a direct attack upon whatever opposes truth.

Such are the individuals most needed at the West. HESPERIAN.

AN AFFECTING INCIDENT.

The Rev. Mr. Sutherland relates an incident which illustrates, in an awfully striking manner, the fearful peril of contemning the Bible. It is as follows:—

In the village of Ruthergton, two miles from the city of Glasgow, an Infidel Club was formed. At one of its meetings it was sagely concluded to express an abhorrence of the Bible by burning a copy of it. The volume was brought, a brisk fire was burning on the hearth. A question arose who should throw it into the flames. It was determined by lot. The designated man did the business, but was immediately seized with an indescribable horror, which made him tremble. He became infuriated, gave up infidelity; yes, the Bible was true, but he hated both it and its Author. He raved like a madman, so that it was somewhat hazardous to approach him. In his fury he swore he would never taste another morsel of food. Not he, he would never be indebted to the Almighty for any thing. A day or two afterwards, while passing through the village of Ruthergton, a stranger accosted me, who related the affecting case, and asked me to go and see the miserable man. I did so, and what a sight! It realized all my ideas of the personification of a devil incarnate. The fiendish glances he cast at his neighbor and myself shocked me, whilst he paced his room with hurried steps. I broke silence by saying that God is merciful. He turned on me, and with flaming rage exclaimed, "I want no mercy; I demand justice, and the sooner the Almighty will send me to hell, the better I shall feel; for then I hope to be able to spit my venom in his face;" and much did he utter in the same horrid strain. "Will you suffer me to pray with you?" said I. "I ask no favor of God or man. I accept no favor, no, not so much as a crumb of bread." "But you breathe at the expense of the Almighty." "I cannot help that," was the answer. "But you begone, and cease to torment me before the time." There I had ocular demonstration that it was the purpose of the Judge of all to punish the workers of iniquity. And if the effect of a slight frown was so terrible, I ask, solemnly, "What shall the end of them be who obey not the Gospel of God?"

THANK GOD FOR SUMMER.

BY ELIZA COOK.

I loved the Winter once with all my soul,
And longed for snow-storms, hail, and mantled skies;
And sang their praises in as gay a troll
As Troubadours have poured to Beauty's eyes.

I deemed the hard, black frost a pleasant thing,
For logs blazed high, and horses' hoofs rung out;
And wild birds came with tame and gentle wing
To eat the bread my young hand flung about.

But I have walked into the world since then,
And seen the bitter work that cold can do—
Where the grim Ice-King levels babes and men
With bloodless spear, that pierces through and through.

I know now, there are those who sink and lie
Upon a stone bed at the dead of night,
I know the roofless and unfed must die,
When even lips at Plenty's Feast turn white.

And now whene'er I hear the cuckoo's song
In budding woods, I bless the joyous comer;
While my heart runs a cadence in a throng
Of hopeful notes, that say, "Thank God for Summer!"

I've learnt that sunshine bringeth more than flowers,
And fruits, and forest leaves to cheer the earth;
For I have seen sad spirits, like dark bowers,
Light up beneath it with a grateful mirth.

The aged limbs that quiver in their task
Of dragging life on, when the north wind goads—
Taste once again contentment, as they bask
In the straight beams that warm their church-yard road.

And Childhood—poor, pinched Childhood—half forgets
The starving pittance of our cottage homes,
When he can leave the hearth, and chase the nets
Of gossamer that cross him as he roams.

The moping idiot seemeth less distraught
When he can sit upon the grass all day,
And laugh and clutch the blades, as though he thought
The yellow sun-rays challenged him to play.

Ah! dearly now I hail the nightingale,
And greet the bee—the merry-going hummer—
And when the lillies peep so sweet and pale,
I kiss their cheeks, and say, "Thank God for Summer!"

Feet that limp, blue and bleeding, as they go
For dainty cresses in December's dawn,
Can wade and dabble in the brooklet's flow,
And woo the gurgles on a July morn.

The tired pilgrim, who would shrink with dread
If Winter's drowsy torpor lulled his brain,
Is free to choose his mossy Summer bed,
And sleep his hour or two in some green lane.

Oh! Ice-toothed King, I loved you once—but now
I never see you come without a pang
Of hopeless pity shadowing my brow,
To think how naked flesh must feel your fang.

My eyes watch now to see the elms unfold,
And my ears listen to the callow rook,
I hunt the palm-trees for their first rich gold,
And pry for violets in the southern nook.

And when fair Flora sends the butterfly,
Painted and spangled, as her herald mummer;
"Now for warm holidays," my heart will cry,
"The poor will suffer less! . . . Thank God for Summer!"

A CHILD AT PRAYER ON A STEAMBOAT.

A few weeks since, in coming down the North River, I was seated in the cabin of the magnificent steamer Isaac Newton, in conversation with some friends. It was becoming late in the evening, and one after another, seeking repose from the cares and toils of the day, made preparations for their berths. Some, pulling off their boots and coats, laid them down to rest; others, in the attempt to make it seem as much as possible like home, threw off more of their clothing—each one as his comfort, or apprehension of danger, dictated.

I had noticed on deck a fine looking little boy of about six years old, following around a man, evidently his father, whose appearance indicated him to be a foreigner, probably a German—a man of medium height, and respectable dress. The child was unusually fair and fine looking, handsomely featured, with an intelligent and affectionate expression of countenance, and from under his little German cap fell his chestnut hair, in thick, clustering, beautiful curls.

After walking about the cabin for a time, the father and son stopped within a few feet of where we were seated, and began preparations for going to bed. I watched them. The father adjusted and arranged the bed the child was to occupy, which was an upper berth, while the little fellow was undressing himself. Having finished this, his father tied a handkerchief around his head to protect his curls, which looked as if the sunlight from his young heart always rested there. This done, I looked for him to seek his resting place; but instead of this, he quietly kneeled down on the floor, put up his little hands together beautifully child-like and simple, and resting his arms on the lower berth, against which he knelt, he began vesper prayers.

The father sat down by his side, and waited the conclusion. It was, for a child, a long prayer, but well understood. I could hear the murmuring of his sweet voice, but could not distinguish the words he spoke. But what a scene! There were men around him—Christian men—retiring to rest without prayer; or, if praying at all, a kind of mental desire for protection, without sufficient courage or piety to kneel down in a steamboat's cabin, and before strangers acknowledge the goodness of God, or ask his protecting love.

This was the training of some pious mother. Where was she now? In a distant land, in her cold grave sleeping? How many times had her kind hand been laid on those sunny locks, as she had taught him to lisp his prayers!

A beautiful sight it was, that child at prayer, in the midst of the busy, thoughtless throng. He alone, of the worldly multitude, draws nigh to Heaven. I thank the parental love that taught him to lisp his evening prayer, whether Catholic or Protestant, whether dead or living, whether far or nigh; it did me good; it made me better. I could scarce refrain from weeping then, nor can I now, as I see again that sweet child in the crowded tumult of a steamboat's cabin, bending in devotion before his Maker.

But a little while before, I saw a crowd of admiring listeners, gathered about a company of Italian singers, in the upper saloon—a mother and two sons, with voice, and harp, and violin; but no one heeded, no one cared for the child at prayer.

When the little boy had finished his evening devotions, he arose and kissed his father most affectionately, who put him into his berth to rest for the night. I felt a strong desire to speak to them, but deferred it till morning. When morning came, the confusion of landing prevented me from seeing them again. But, if ever I meet that boy in his happy youth, in his anxious manhood, in his declining years, I'll thank him for the influence and example of that night's devotion, and bless the name of the mother that taught him to pray.

Scarcely any passing incident of my life ever made a deeper impression on my mind. I went to my room and thanked God that I had witnessed it, and for its influence on my heart. Who prays on a steamboat? Who train their children to pray, even at home?

THE JEWS OF EGYPT.

In personal appearance the Jews of Egypt are not prepossessing. Their features, it is true, are often finely formed; but they are a down-looking, gloomy tribe, as might be expected from the treatment they have so long experienced. Many of them are fairer than the rest of the population, which may be accounted for by their Syrian origin. It has been remarked, that they are frequently bloated in appearance, and are liable to sore eyes; and some attribute the circumstance to the immoderate use of sesame oil. Whether this be the case or not, certain it is, that this peculiarity in their cookery gives their persons a very unpleasant odor, so that you may know a Jew in the dark. I ought to add, that almost all the Eastern Jews I have seen are very different in the type of their features from those of Europe; and that I do not remember to have noticed the real Hebrew nose more than once, namely, on the face of a young money-changer in Alexandria, whose father rejoiced in a regular pug. The women, on the other hand, in as far as I have been able to ascertain, preserve a very characteristic cast of countenance. They are often handsome and well made. Their mode of life and character resembles that of the Levantines, between whom and them, however, there exists an insuperable antipathy.

It is the custom for the Jews in Egypt to celebrate very strictly the Feast of Tabernacles. During eight days they forsake their rooms, and sleep in little cabins made of palm-leaves, on the terraces of their houses. Those who have no convenient place for so doing, are invited by their friends, so that on this occasion the roofs of the Jewish quarters are covered with a regular encampment. The streets previously are absolutely filled with camels laden with palm-branches, which fetch a handsome price, for there is an eager demand for them. The Levantines used to tell me that on the first day of this festival the Jews go to their priest, and ask if it will be a good year. He oracularly and gutturally answers, 'Ch—.' If the year be good, he says, 'Did I not tell you ch—?' meaning (cheir) good. But if it be a bad year, he says, "Did I not tell you ch—?" meaning (chara) bad.

Of late years, the treatment of the Jews in Egypt has been gradually becoming better and better. It was not, however, until during the early part of my stay in the country, in the year 1846, that toleration was extended to them sufficiently to allow of their burying their dead by day. It was only by moonlight that they could hurry the remains of their departed friends stealthily to the grave. No law, it is true, forced them to this, but only the bigotry of the population. On the few occasions when they ventured to face the daylight, Moslems, Greeks, and Levantines, used to pelt the bier and its bearers with stones and rubbish, and often to proceed to the most abominable excesses. No one ever felt ashamed of such acts; but, on the contrary, they were considered meritorious; for there is no object on earth which is regarded in the East as beneath a descendant of Abraham. This may be understood from the progression of their terms of abuse—"ass, bull, dog, pig, Jew."

Such was the state of public opinion when the death of Mercado el Ghazi, the grand rabbin, happened. This was thought by the Jewish community to be a good opportunity for taking advantage of the growing toleration of the government. Mohamed Ali was absent from the country on his celebrated visit to Constantinople; Ibrahim Pacha was at Cairo, and to him application was made for two guards. The Sirasker had just returned from Europe, very little improved, it is true, but with some desire to merit the approbation of the civilized world. This was a capital opportunity, because it enabled him to carry out at the same time his favorite system of intimidating and overawing the people, who were destined by fate, treaty, and the right of the strongest, to be his most dutiful subjects. So he replied—

"Two guards!—you ask only for two? I will send my own carriage, thirty cawasses, and a battalion of infantry; the shops on the whole line of procession shall be closed; and woe be to the man who lifts a stone that day!"

What was said was done. The people murmured, but remained tranquil; and a bright example of toleration was manifested. It is worth knowing, that the greater part of the improvement which has taken place in the conduct of Egyptians to foreigners and infidels, is entirely attributable to similar exertions of supreme power; but it is a gross mistake to suppose that, in as far as the government is concerned, any thing has been done to soften the rancor of Moslem prejudice. Toleration is not to be instilled into a people by force; and I doubt whether the good that might have been done by increased intercourse with Europeans has not been more than counterbalanced by the envy and indignation excited by the marked favor with which they are treated, and the privileges and immunities they enjoy. INTEMPERANCE IN SCOTLAND.

It would seem that intemperance and rumselling are even more strongly enthroned within the enclosures of the Church in Scotland than they were in this country five-and-twenty years ago. A correspondent of the Watchman and Reflector describes a debate which lately arose in the United Presbytery of Edinburgh, on a resolution offered by Rev. Mr. Aikman, concerning the sale of liquors on Sunday, and calling upon Church Sessions to deal with such of their members as continued in this unhallowed calling.

"Mr. Aikman stated that there were over four hundred shops open in Edinburgh on Lord's day evening for the sale of spirits. To his personal knowledge, there were twenty-seven—twenty-three of which were kept by members of their body. He thought that an injunction from that court would cause all the sessions to take up the matter, and if it were done, he was very hopeful that good results would follow. Many members of the Presbytery were very indignant at such an exposure, and Mr. Aikman received several intimations of the fact. He boldly stood his ground, asking his opponents to deny the facts he had stated, if they could, and if they could not, to aid him in purifying the Church. Dr. Harper and others wished a committee to be appointed to draw up a declaration to be read from the pulpits by way of admonition, and to declare how the Presbytery intended to act. The original motion prevailed. It was stated that members have been known to hasten from the Lord's table to engage in the traffic. The whole system of church courts is bad. The people have nothing to say in matters of discipline. In this particular case, little will be gained by leaving it to sessions; for in many churches some of the office bearers themselves are rumsellers. Churches are low indeed that cannot deal with rumselling per se; but here is Sunday traffic by members in good standing. Comment is superfluous. Just think of it, a rumselling Christianity here, and a slave-holding Christianity in the Southern States! Is it not heart sickening? I like an anti-slavery man—that is, I like some anti-slavery men, but how often is the good cause wounded by the selfishness of its advocates. Here is a man who wishes "to turn an honest penny;" seeing his handbill posted in various parts of Glasgow, I took a copy:

"NO SLAVERY!! NO SLAVERY!!!
FREE LABOR RUM.
Wm. Stewart, Wine and Spirit Merchant,
First in the city to bring out the above rum at the price,
And begs to solicit a trial of it.
Only 3d the Imperial Gill!"

INTEMPERANCE AND LEGISLATION.

We find in the Journal of Commerce an alarming picture of intemperance in the State of New York. That paper says:—

Twelve thousand petitions, emanating from every county in the State, had been received by the Legislature up to the first of March, demanding such action of that body as will insure an expression of the popular will on this subject through the ballot box. The Legislature of this State, at its present session, have collected statistics from the various city prisons, with the exception of twenty-three, whence no returns have been received, which prove that upwards of 36,000 intemperate persons were arrested in 1840, and that from four fifths to nine tenths of all the crime committed has its origin in intemperance. The connection between intemperance and pauperism is only less intimate. The prevalent impression is believed to be well founded, that more than three fourths of the pauperism in the State is caused by intemperance.

The Committee estimate the cost of pauperism caused by intemperance, to the people of this State, during the year 1849, at two millions of dollars. They also estimate the amount annually expended for drinks, at 7,000 grog shops existing in the cities of this State, exclusive of villages, at upwards of twenty-five millions of dollars. The remedy proposed to restrian this growing evil, is that demanded in the numerous petitions presented to the Legislature, namely, a Legislative Act, absolutely prohibiting the sale of spirituous liquors, wines, strong beer, or intoxicating fluids, except to be used for other purposes than as a beverage, on penalty of a fine of twenty dollars for the first, and thirty for the second offense, and of imprisonment, in addition to fine, for the third, for a period not exceeding ninety, or less than thirty days; and a further penalty, also, of being held answerable to parties interested, for all damage proved to have been consequent on such sale. The party prosecuting is to receive half the fine imposed.

MONEY SPENT IN WAR.—Give me the money that has been spent in war, and I will purchase every foot upon the globe. I will clothe every man, woman, and child, in an attire that kings and queens would be proud of. I will build a school house upon every hill side, and in every valley, over the whole habitable earth—supply those houses with competent teachers; I will build an academy in every town, and endow them; a college in every state, and fill them with able professors; I will crown every hill with a church consecrated to the promulgation of the gospel of peace; I will support in their pulpits able teachers of righteousness, so that on every Sabbath morning, the chime on one hill, shall answer to the chime on another, around the earth's broad circumference, and the voice of prayer and the song of praise should ascend like an universal holocaust to Heaven.

It is only necessary to grow old, to become more indulgent. I see no fault committed that I have not committed myself.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, April 18, 1850.

BAPTISM—ITS SUBJECTS.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

In the Recorder, Vol. 6, No. 41, I find an editorial upon "Baptism—its Subjects," concerning which I wish to ask the following questions:—

1. Is the church of Christ, as defined by you, (definition 1,) composed in whole or in part of organized congregations of believers?

2. Can any person claim to be a member of any given church of Jesus Christ simply because he has been regenerated?

3. Although baptism may not be the "door into the church," yet is it not an indispensable condition of church membership?

N. V. Hull.

Remarks.

Our readers are aware, that our paper seldom contains any thing upon the baptismal controversy. Our controversial articles, for the most part, have been upon the Sabbath question, that being the one in which we, as a distinct denomination, are most interested; and we have inclined to leave the discussion of Baptism to our First-day Baptist brethren, who are managing it with eminent ability and vigor. It has lately occurred to us, however, that the subject might be introduced into the Recorder occasionally, without any detriment to the great question which we are called to defend. It is a subject of much importance, not merely as respects the significance of the rite of baptism itself, but as respects the nature of a gospel church, its government, and, ultimately, as respects the true theory of civil government. We have long regarded infant baptism as the basis of the great national ecclesiastical establishment of the old world; and the notion that there is, under the gospel, a visible church, which is nothing but a continuation of the Jewish Church—a notion which is the great pillar of the doctrine of infant baptism—is the foundation of those intolerant and intolerable encroachments which civil government so often makes upon the consciences of the governed. Who, then, has or can have a deeper interest in this subject than the Seventh-day Baptist? At this day, when such mighty efforts are in progress to enforce the Sunday Laws, and to render them, if possible, still more stringent—when our German brethren in a sister State are suffering under their unequal operation—when the American Government, instead of guarding the sacredness of conscience, as by its constitutional guaranties it has sworn to do, dooms the Sabbath-keeper to fines and imprisonment unless he will lend a prop to the religious faith of the majority—it appears to us that we are called to the investigation, not only of baptism, but of every other subject which can shed light upon our duty as citizens and Christians. It was under the influence of some such views, that we penned the article, in reference to which the queries of Bro. Hull are submitted. We shall endeavor to answer his questions in their order.

In regard to the first, we are not sure that we understand it, but we think we do. We said, "The New Testament use of the term 'church' shows that it denotes, either (1.) the whole company of the redeemed, or (2.) a local congregation of believers, united together for the purpose of maintaining the worship of God and His ordinances." In view of the first acceptation of the term, we maintain, that any believer composes a part of the church of Christ. That a portion of the church is embraced in organized congregations, is evident enough; that the whole is, cannot be pretended. A very large portion is in heaven; and about their organization nothing needs be said. As to that portion of it which remains on earth, we suppose that some are embraced in organized congregations, while others stand aloof from any organization whatever. That all believers on earth ought to be found in organized congregations, we admit. These congregations also ought to be organized upon the gospel plan.

To the second question, we answer, No; supposing that by "any given church of Jesus Christ" Bro. H. has in view our second definition. A person cannot claim to be a member of a church "simply because he has been regenerated," nor simply because he has been baptized, nor simply because he keeps the Sabbath, nor simply because of his compliance with any other one duty. He can claim it only on the ground of his disposition to receive, and "continue steadfastly in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." As far as his regeneration affords the evidence that he will do this, it may be taken as giving him a claim to church membership, but no farther.

To the third question, we reply, Yes. So is Sabbath-keeping; so is moral honesty; so is chastity; so is regard for truth; so are "whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are of good report." And if in any of these a member is found wanting, he should be admonished, disciplined, and, if found incorrigible, excommunicated. If our brother means to inquire whether there is not a relative order in which these duties are to be observed, we reply, that there is. Baptism is the first outward act by which a regenerate person is expected to give proof of his faith in Christ; and being the first, a church organized after the gospel plan cannot hold in its fellowship any unbaptized persons. We may suppose a case like the following: A person comes before a church, and requests to be received into fellowship. He is examined, and, upon a declaration of his readiness to do all things which the Lord has required of him, he is accepted. But immediately it is found that he refuses to do the very first act which is required as an expression of his faith. The church, therefore, has no alternative but to reject him. Consequently, as he never gains access to the privileges of the Lord's house, it remains true, that a church organized upon the New Testament platform embraces none but baptized believers.

GLIMPSES OF DOMESTIC LIFE IN CHINA—No. 3.

The Wife as Daughter-in-law.

Shanghai, October, 1849.

The position of the wife, as daughter-in-law, in the family, is far from enviable, and indeed may well be considered the most undesirable of all relationships in China. Betrothed at an early age, through the intervention of a third person, (generally some female relative, called a go-between,) the parties wed without previous acquaintance, having probably never even met. If they ever do, indeed, accidentally meet, it is as strangers; and they greet each other for the first time, on the consummation of the marraige, as husband and wife. It occasionally happens, however, that the girl is taken into the family of her future husband immediately after betrothal, and shares, to all intents, the lot of a menial, as well before as after marraige. Among the better classes, she is measurably exempt from these menial duties, but their absence is abundantly compensated, one would think, by the increased seclusion to which she is subjected.

I might give you many a proof of this, but prefer, as usual, to illustrate from my own experience or observation, and will tell you here how, by dint of repeated efforts, I came at last to be acquainted with the wife of our late teacher. That he loved her most sincerely, no one could doubt, who knew them both as I knew them; but that, as wife and daughter-in-law, she was obliged to submit to the domestic imprisonment incident to her station, I had ample proof. Chung-seen-sang had been our teacher for some months, and had often brought me little presents of flowers, embroidery, and so forth, from his wife, before I had found it convenient to call on them. At length he gave us a very cordial invitation to go to his house on a certain day, for the purpose of witnessing a procession of city gods, which would pass directly before his door. The procession itself we cared little to see, as it had lost its novelty from frequent repetition; but I was glad of any pretext to get an introduction to the family, and, in my impetuous delight, I asked, "Shall I see your wife?" He hesitated, colored slightly, and only answered, "You come." We went. There were mothers, sisters, and cousins, in any quantity, but the wife was among the absent. We were, as usual, objects of great curiosity to all; but the poor wife, if she had any to gratify, must indulge in silent speculations in her own cloistered retreat. We were stationed at an open door while the procession passed, and my heart was sickened, as usual, at the sight of the whole city given to idolatry. There were the five ruling gods of the city—huge, frightful looking objects, seated in their sedan chairs, and borne, a la mandarin, each upon the shoulders of four coolies. There were men on horseback, sunk in saddles which, (spite of the chronology that gives to saddles no higher antiquity than the time of Constantine the Great,) I must insist upon referring back to Balaam, for whose road weariness, and consequent ill humor, charity finds an apology in the probable fact of his own having been made after the pattern now in use among the Chinese. These lordly equestrians were conspicuous, each after his own fancy. One carried some ostentatious insignia of his vocation; others, waving flags, ornamental umbrellas, fruit or flowering trees growing in vases, old muskets, musical instruments, perhaps a child perched upon his shoulder or on his arm. There were bands of musicians, whom Jubal might have blushed to acknowledge as his children; and beggars, whose rags were their riches, and who gloried in their shame. There were self-condemned culprits, bearing pans of burning incense, suspended by chains, and fastened by hooks through the flesh of the left arm, sometimes also of the right; and juvenile penitents, whom the angry gods had punished by sickness, for their own, or their parents' sins, and who, pursuant to promises made by those parents in case of recovery, were led in the procession, dressed in red garments, as a badge of their guilt, with their hands manacled, perhaps dragging a chain after them, or borne on the shoulders of men, their heads exposed to the rays of the burning sun; officers and soldiers, priests and people, trumpets and banners—all forming such a procession as only a heathen city, perhaps only a Chinese city, can command. My head grew dizzy with looking at the living, moving mass as they swept past the door-way in surge-like procession, and I was obliged to retreat to an inner room for quiet and relief. All was sympathy and affection. The mother, sisters and cousins, left the procession to minister to my wants. The teacher often came to inquire after me, and to send away any whose idle curiosity might prove annoying. But I looked in vain for her I most desired to see. If there was sympathy in her heart, it was hidden in its own depths, or bounded at most by the circumscribed limits of her own little sanctum sanctorum.

I was exceedingly disappointed, but for several succeeding weeks refrained from making any allusion to the subject, not wishing to put the teacher to the inconvenience of an explanation he might not chose to make. At length I approached the subject by expressing a wish that his wife would visit me, as I had not yet had the pleasure of seeing her. He remarked, that it was inconvenient for her to come so far, but begged me to visit her at her own home, adding, by way of illumination for my deplorable darkness, that it would be necessary for me to go in my sedan, unaccompanied by my husband, if I wished to be invited into the inner apartments to visit his wife. This was a spice of aristocracy I was not prepared to relish, but was obliged to receive nevertheless.

A few weeks later, another invitation came, and this was in the name of the lady herself, that Mrs. W. and I would attend on a certain evening, and witness a choo-koong-tuh ceremony, to be held in their house, for the benefit of some departed friend. A word to the wise (as experience had by this time made us) was sufficient. We knew we were expected to go in our chairs, and that, with this show of gentility on our part, our lords were quite at liberty to accompany us in the character of footmen, if they so pleased to do. The choo-koong-tuh was already in operation when we arrived. The stone floor was covered with a mock purgatory, one poor soul in effigy alone occupying his place in its center; the relentless monarch of the gloomy prison displayed on the canvas suspended high against the adjacent wall; and just below him, at the head of the victim, was placed the officious reporter, a miniature paper man, looking down from his high bamboo stilts, to behold the order of the proceedings, hear the prayers for the dead, which were to be be read in his presence, and which he was immediately after to take with him into the invisible world, being all committed to the flames together—the way in which all offerings for the benefit of friends are sent thither. The priests, with their blank faces, Babel tones, and heavy feet, were keeping time to the music of the drums and gongs, which, if they failed to wake up the sleepy gods, were quite sure to allow no waking mortal to become drowsy within the compass of their horrid notes. Patience could not long endure the din, and so, weary and sick at heart, I gladly claimed the promised privilege of seeing the wife, and was ushered into an adjoining room, to pay my respects, according to the proprieties of required usage. Tea and refreshments were successively served, the first of which was handed to the gentlemen in the outer apartment, but just as we were sitting down to the last, the teacher came in, and inquired if I would like my husband to join us? "Certainly, if it would be proper," I said; and away he went, elated with being the bearer of an invitation, which he was sure would avail as coming from me, his own, as he declared, having been quite insufficient. The gentlemen came in, but the modest wife had already made herself invisible, and I knew it would be useless to ask for her. After they withdrew, she again appeared, and I watched my opportunity, just before leaving, to call my husband, and introduce her to him, all custom and caprice to the contrary notwithstanding. The teacher laughed heartily at the manœuvre, and pronounced it "all right," although I have little reason to believe that aught but the talismanic touch of friendship could have made it so.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER OF JAMES A. BEGG.

The last English steamer brought us an interesting letter from Bro. James A. Begg, of Glasgow, Scotland, dated March 21st, from which we take the liberty of copying a few paragraphs of general interest. Speaking of his recent work on the "Authority for a Change of the Weekly Sabbath at the Resurrection of Christ," Mr Begg says:—

"It gladdened the heart and strengthened the hands of one young man, who has since been removed from this lower scene, and whose case I desire to relate, that if you see meet you may give his name a place in your obituary list. Alexander Paterson was bred as a collier; but, having lost his health, obtained a situation attending to a steam engine near Airdrie, east of Glasgow. I am not sure whether it was while thus employed, or before, that his heart was turned to the Lord. He was baptized, and was, I believe, connected with a meeting holding much the same views as Mr. Alexander Campbell of America. Increasing disease rendered it necessary to abandon the care of the engine, and he went to Helensburgh with his wife to stay. This is a favorite watering place on the Frith of Clyde, resorted to in summer by families from Glasgow. Here he turned himself to the repairing of umbrellas for a livelihood. Three years ago our family were at Helensburgh for a weeks; and on Sundays I was requested to preach in a small chapel. On one of those occasions I disscussed fully the church's apostacy in regard to the Sabbath. The argument was felt by one individual to be sound, though his practice was unafected by the fact. To Alexander Paterson, however, this individual so presented the evidence I had formerly adduced, that he felt the necessity of full investigation. That investigation issued in his perfect conviction, that the Word of God gives no warrant to any to change the Sabbath, and that the duty of those who see the departure made to have been unwarranted, is to return to the good "old path." Conferring not with flesh and blood, poor and dependent though he was, he therefore resolved to give God the glory, casting himself, his wife and child, on the care of the Lord of the Sabbath. This he had done, I believe, a month or so ere he pressed me to come to see him—his state of health and other circumstances rendering it difficult for him to come to me. We were mutually comforted by my visit, and he rejoiced in a clearer exhibition of Scripture bearing on the Sabbath. But, while he conceived his bodily health improving, disease was making progress. I had a pleasant interview with him on the last day of the year, as he passed through Glasgow, on his way to visit his friends at Chapel Hall, to whom he hoped to be of service in regard to the Sabbath; but having caught cold, he became rapidly worse, and died of consumption on Friday, January 25th, 1850, after about six months' witness for God. He was an individual of much knowledge of the Scriptures, and of general intelligence, considering his opportunities. His removal, in these circumstances, is to me truly grieving; for I had hoped he might have been of service in the cause of truth, and specially encouraging to those of weak faith, because of his devotedness in peculiarly trying circumstances. But I may not, and I do not doubt, that it is all so ordered both in wisdom and love. God can of the stones of the street—of those least likely in human estimation—raise up and better qualify than my brother was or I am, witnesses to His truth and faithfulness. Enough for us to be honestly devoted to Him, while to us it is called day, with such endowments as He has bestowed."

"The conflict for the Sunday still continues at the meetings of Railway Proprietors in this country. Yesterday the North British (from Edinburgh to Berwick) had a meeting at which the question of Sunday trains was again impatiently discussed. This line has been open on Sunday from the commencement, and great efforts are made to shut it. The meeting could with difficulty be got to listen to the speeches of those in favor of shutting, and the decision was decidedly opposed to such an alteration. On the 12th inst., the half-yearly meeting of the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway was held, when the subject was very fully discussed on an unsuccessful motion to re-open on Sunday; for, as you are aware, this line was, by great effort of the Church party, got shut after having been open for years on Sunday. In the report contained in the North British Mail, (a copy of which I have sent you,) you will observe that Mr. Combe, while he speaks of the Sabbath as valuable, does so, not on the ground of its being a divine appointment, but as written in our constitution. This is infidel, and by the churchmen is denounced as such; but is it more infidel to reject avowedly Heaven's institution, than to reject, against the Scripture testimony, the day which has been given, and to adopt another. Mr. Cox, on the other hand, drew a good argument from the supposition that the Jewish capitalists got possession of the line, and on the authority of the fourth commandment shut it up on the seventh-day, and at the half yearly meeting bring their "sundry eminent Rabbins" to enforce the obligation of the fourth commandment. The illustration was appropriate, and no attempt was made to answer it.

"But a bold and general effort is being made by the Sunday sanctifiers, over all the land, to induce Parliament to shut the Post-Offices throughout the country upon that day. Unfortunately for the credit of this movement, the Parliamentary Committee on Petitions have already twice reported upon the irregularity with which many of these petitions have been got up—many of them having whole sheetfuls of names in the hand writing of one individual, instead of being subscribed by the persons themselves. The Postmaster General has also given his opinion, that it is altogether out of the question to propose complying with the prayer of these petitions. It does indeed appear to me to be the merest infatuation to expect an increase even of the outward semblance of reverence for the Sunday. Disregard is increasing, and, I doubt not, will continue to do so, until all hindrance to the adoption of the seventh day rather than the first shall have been taken away. The church is fighting for itself, and not for its Lord; in pride will not confess its apostacy, and return to His law. But in vain do men frame iniquity by a law. Though hand join to hand, their counsel will be overthrown."

The Wesleyan Agitation in England.—Four hundred delegates assembled in London about the middle of March, says a correspondent of the Independent, to discuss the present condition of the Wesleyan body, and to devise means of abating the tyranny of the preachers. The meetings are said to have been characterized by gravity and earnestness, and a deep conviction of the necessity for reform. The delegates were mostly local preachers, and had been from fifteen to upward of fifty years "members of society." Many men of good social standing and of marked ability were among them. The President was asked to receive a deputation, but declined to do so. The feeling of the delegates, generally, appeared to be favorable to a reconciliation, but the violent and revengeful course of the Conference renders such a result quite unlikely. Another meeting is to be held in August. Meanwhile something like a bill of rights is to be prepared and published. One of the speakers, referring to the legal instrument prepared by Wesley, under which the Conference governs, said:—

"I would rather go to Scripture for the standard, but unfortunately this Deed Poll is in the way, and therefore we cannot do so. This is Methodistic, and therefore to talk of forming our rules exclusively by the Scriptures, is taking a stand which we cannot maintain. As long as we are connected with Methodism, we must submit to it."

A COLLEGE—PRACTICAL VIEW.

A resolution of the last General Conference reads thus:—

Resolved, That in the opinion of this body, it is exceedingly desirable that we, as a denomination, should have a College and Theological Seminary, where our youth, and especially those young men expecting to devote themselves to the gospel ministry, may be properly educated.

All this looks well in the abstract. It would be equally desirable to see the victims of error throwing off the shackles, and every where demonstrating that they are made free by the truth. But a project anticipating the latter, must take into account the long-cherished prejudices which men will not surrender without a struggle. So in the establishment of a College, some preliminary contingencies should be foreseen.

Conference recommended joint committees from the Associations, and appointed a committee of its own "to labor to secure funds for educational purposes, and to take such other measures for the establishment of a College and Theological Seminary as they may deem proper," &c. The phraseology plainly shows, that the funds are to have no other destination than to aid in the establishment of a College, &c. But, with due deference, I would repeat the sage advice of Franklin, "Don't give too much for the whistle." Our denomination have, like Franklin, bought one whistle; and before they make another purchase, I hope they will not only count the cost, but inquire what kind of a whistle they actually need.

A College, to be an honor to our denomination, or one where our youth can be properly educated, must stand on a level, in respect to facilities, with the best colleges in the land, if not actually above them. Any thing less would be a dead weight—a hinderance—a curse. Such a College could not be properly endowed with less than $150,000. To raise this sum, on an average each member of the denomination must consecrate $25, or, allowing six to a family, each family must contribute $150 as its share of the enterprise. Will cool deliberation say, that this sum can be raised and not embarrass our movements in other matters?

But suppose the College endowed, and each professor in his chair; they could not educate the people unless they came to their lectures or received their lessons. With all this outlay, we have not laid aside a dollar to aid an indigent young man or young woman in his or her struggle for knowledge. Our young men are still on their farms or in their shops; their sisters are uneducated at their side; and the funds which the toil-worn hands of their fathers had accumulated for their education, are laid out to build a College and endow it, like the boy who paid all his cash for a purse to keep it in. But suppose funds are not wanting; comparatively few of our youth can now be induced to take even a thorough academic course; how many would add a college course? A college, to bear a medium reputation, should have at least fifty annual graduates. Will facts justify a hope, that ours would be thus successful? How many have we, in all our academies, ready to enter college?—and how many from them have graduated with college honors? Alfred Academy, though one of the most flourishing in America, and in the midst of a section of our churches foremost in education, has furnished one student only of our own denomination who has received the full honors of a college course. DeRuyter Institute, the longer in operation, can point to only three regular graduates—(I speak only of those in our denomination)—and the last fifteen years have graduated scarce a dozen from all sources. There may be now, in all our academies, twenty or thirty Seventh-day Baptists who have set out for a college course. But, judging from the past, what number of them will elude the snares of Hymen long enough to be crowned with bacheloric honors? Would the whole number, for ten years to come, equal a respectable graduating class for a single year? I do not ask how many ought to do it, but how many would do it?

Were there no facilities at hand, no fountains from which our youth could draw pure Castalian draughts, I would at once go for the outlay, even with all the obstacles in the way. But there are facilities, that can be enjoyed by any of our people who choose, without the sacrifice of a single principle or the concealment of a single tenet we hold dear. The warmest sectarian colleges will permit the enjoyment of the Sabbath unmolested, and there are colleges where our youth may vindicate the truth wholly unrestrained, and be more honored for a manly adherence to principle, and where the indigent may share equally with others the benefits of benevolent and state funds. Shall we, then, exhaust our energies, and slight public provisions made ready to our hand, which belong as really to us as to any other citizens? Must we have a little sanctum of our own, where we may shut up the light which Heaven has put into our hands to emblazon abroad?

It is but fair to suppose, that our youth who are so far advanced as to enter college, are settled in their religious principles; and, if not alienated by unkindness or neglect on our part, they will adhere the closer for all the privations and inconveniences they meet in their literary pursuits; and casual conflicts will only ensure the discipline they need to fit them for their work. Who that loves the truth would not esteem it a privilege thus to learn the sweets of being a witness for God, single-handed and alone, only as aided by Him and filled with His love?

I will only add, that the associations and influences to be felt in a thorough college, of long standing, are more potent in the formation of a literary character, than they possibly can be in one of recent origin.

In my next, I will endeavor to show what we really need in our educational enterprise.

JAS. R. IRISH.

Christian Union.—Two Conventions have been held in the State of New York, within a few months, to consider the question whether all sectarian distinctions are not unchristian, and should not therefore be abolished, as obstacles in the way of social progress and human salvation. The first, held at Peterboro, Madison Co., was thinly attended, but the discussions are said to have been conducted in a very liberal manner, and the exercises throughout were generally interesting. The second was held in February, at Syracuse; lasted two days, and was numerously attended; clergymen and laymen of eleven different denominations taking part in the discussions. A third Convention assembles at Canandaigua, Ontario Co., on the 17th and 18th insts., where a large attendance is expected.

Catholic Views of Slavery, &c.—A number of gentlemen in New York have requested Dr. Cummings of St. Stephens' Church, to deliver a lecture explaining the principles and views of the Catholic Church upon Slavery and other highly important questions which are now occupying public attention. The Doctor having acceded to this request, we may expect that new light will soon be thrown upon the dark minds of the gentlemen in question. It is probably considered complimentary to Dr. Cummings to be invited to explain the views of his Church, but we should not consider it very complimentary to the church, in this day of conflict between Slavery and Freedom, that its views need to be explained.

A bad Custom well Observed.—The contributors to the American Baptist Missionary Union have a miserable custom of delaying to forward their money to the treasury until the financial year is nearly up, and then sending it along by hundreds and thousands of dollars. True to established usage, they this year paid in about two-thirds enough to meet expenses during the eleven months ending with April, and the remaining third, or $36,256 69, in the single month of March, with which the year closed. The liberality which this one month's receipts evince, we commend to all contributors for missions; but the custom of leaving so much to be done just at the close of the year, is dangerous, and ought not to be countenanced.

New York Legislature.—The Legislature of New-York adjourned on Fifth-day last, sine die. The Homestead Exemption Bill, which will be found in another column, is one of the most generally acceptable bills passed during the session. A General Railroad Act was passed, which removes many of the impediments heretofore existing to the construction of railroads where the people are willing to pay for them. An Act was passed by which the Free School Law is to be again submitted to the people, at the ensuing State Election, on the question of "Repeal" or "No Repeal." The Bill proposing to raise $800,000 by State Tax for the support of Common Schools, failed in the Senate. The Bill providing for a stay of the Collection of Rents on Manorial Estates, where the State contests the title of the alledged landlords, was lost.

Revival at Fall River, Mass.—A very general and extensive revival of religion has recently been experienced among "the busy, bustling, world-mad people" of Fall River, Mass. It reached all the religious congregations in the place, and persons who have visited there speak of being deeply impressed with the presence of Divine Power. One of the pastors of the place, in a letter dated March 12, says:—

"In my study I had last Sabbath evening from 75 to 90 inquirers, most of whom are indulging hope. These were of all ages, from 70 down to 10. There has been deep solemnity and silence almost painful in our assemblies, evening after evening—no excitement except that of deep thought and conviction."

Temperance and Music at the Tombs.—On Sunday of last week, an interesting temperance meeting was held among the prisoners at the Tombs in New York. About three hundred prisoners were present, who listened attentively to addresses on the consequences of intemperance—sad proof of which they saw as they glanced around upon their companions. The Hutchinson Family also attended, and sang several of their best pieces, in a way that sealed instruction, and produced a most salutary impression.

Relief of Alfred Academy.—The Legislature of New York, just before its adjournment, passed "An Act authorizing a loan to the town of Alfred in the county of Allegany, and to authorize the town of Alfred to re-loan the same money to the Trustees of Alfred Academy." By this means the Academy gets a loan of ten thousand dollars of the School Fund, for the term of five years.

Revival at Princeton, N. J.—An account of the recent revival at Princeton, N. J., says that about seventy converts are numbered in the First Presbyterian Church, about thirty in Nassau Hall College, and a large number among the Methodists.

Wesleyan Missionary Receipts.—It is announced in the London Watchman, that the income of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, for the year ending December 31, 1849, was one hundred and eleven thousand pounds sterling, or $500,000, an increase of $7,000 upon the income of the preceding year.

General Intelligence.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. SECOND-DAY, April 8.

After the presentation of numerous petitions, reports from committees, and the transaction of morning business, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the special order—Mr. Foote's motion to refer Mr. Bell's Resolution to the Committee of Thirteen. Mr. Benton made a strong speech in favor of taking California by herself, without taking in any other subject. To this Mr Clay rejoined. Mr. Foote then spoke in favor of his Compromise Committee, and after some further discussion by Messrs. Cass, Hale, Douglass, and Smith, a motion to postpone the reference of Mr. Bell's motion was carried.

House of Representatives.

Mr. Vinton attempted to get through a resolution authorizing the President to detail thirty seamen and such officers as he may think proper to join Mr. Grinnell's expedition in search of Sir John Franklin, but the attempt was unsuccessful.

The Slavery question was then taken up, and Mr. Wallace, of S. C., addressed the House. The burden of his discourse was, that the non-extension of slavery is abolition in disguise.

Mr. Johnson, of Ky., followed in a speech against separating the admission of California from the territorial question, and pledging Kentucky to fight if she is dishonored by Northern fanatics.

Mr. Kaufman tried to get a vote of the House against the movements in New Mexico for an organization of that Territory independent of Texas, but failed.

A motion was made by Mr. Conger, of N. Y., to cut down postage to a uniform rate of 2 cents on paid and 5 on unpaid letters, and to abolish the franking privilege. The Post Office Committee promised soon to introduce a bill to the same purport, and the subject was then dropped.

In Senate. THIRD-DAY, April 9.

After the transaction of the morning business, and a struggle with reference to the privilege of Special Orders, the Senate took up the Census Bill. After the consideration and disposition of sundry amendments, and a long and uninteresting debate upon the several amendments proposed, the Senate, without having come to any conclusion, adjourned.

House of Representatives.

Discussion upon the slavery question occupied the whole day. Mr. Harris, of Tenn., entered into a constitutional argument to show that Congress has no power to prohibit slavery in the territories. He was followed by Mr. Corwin, of Ohio, who advocated the immediate admission of California.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, April 10.

Mr. Hale presented a large number of anti-slavery petitions.

Mr. Clay called the attention of the Senate to the fact that the greater portion of these petitions were printed and similar, for the purpose of showing that there was a concerted movement among the Abolitionists to misrepresent public sentiment in various sections of the country, by sending these petitions in blank, to be circulated insidiously, and returned to the Senate.

Mr. Hale called the Senator to order for speaking without a motion being pending.

Mr. Clay took his seat, greatly excited, and demanded a statement of the point of order.

After some conversation on the point of order, Mr. Clay proceeded in a strain of denunciation of the Abolitionists of the North as the worst enemies of the slaves of the South. He also intimated, that Mr. Hale had made the slavery agitation a sort of centaur, on which he had ridden into power and place. Individuals of this character, although pretending to be the friends of the slave, were in fact friends only to themselves.

Mr. Hale declared his determination to do his duty, in his humble way, despite all loud words or threatening and abusive denunciations. He then presented another anti-slavery petition from New York.

Mr. Rusk raised the question of reception, and submitted some remarks in denunciation of a petition presented yesterday, by Mr. Seward, praying for the enrollment of slaves in the militia.

Mr. Foote, after some remarks in denunciation of incendiary petitions, announced his intention to scrutinize the appointments of the Administration, and oppose the confirmation of all those which had been made through the influence of Abolitionists. Subsequently, the petition presented yesterday by Mr. Seward, asking the enrollment of slaves in the militia, was taken up. Mr. Clay moved that its prayer be rejected, which motion was unanimously adopted.

The Census Bill was then taken up, the amendments concurred in, and the bill passed.

House of Representatives.

After some unimportant business, the House went in Committee of the Whole on the California question. Mr. Ross, of Penn., made a speech, in which he maintained that Congress has not the power either to establish or prohibit slavery in the territories. Mr. Duer, of New York, followed. He was willing to place the settlement of this question on the constitutional principle, that the people of a territory, in forming a State government, have a right to establish or prohibit slavery, as it pleases them.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, April 11.

Mr. Cass presented the joint resolutions of the Legislature of Michigan, rescinding the instructions to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from that State to vote for the Wilmot Proviso.

Mr. Douglas presented a memorial in favor of securing the free navigation of the St. Lawrence River, and expressed the hope that action would be had upon the subject in season to secure this new outlet to the ocean in time for the trade of the West, the Erie Canal being inadequate to the transportation of the large amount of produce. Mr. Seward moved that the petition be printed. He contended that the Erie Canal now supplied all the facilities necessary for the commerce of the West; that its enlargement would soon be completed, when it would be in the power of, as well as to the interest of, the State to reduce the tolls on freight, so as to furnish all the facilities required for the growing commerce of the West.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of Mr. Bell's resolution on the subject of slavery, which Mr. Foote had moved to refer to a Select Committee. Several members insisted that the question of admitting California ought to be acted upon separately, and not mixed up with the slavery questions to be referred to the Committee. Mr. Douglass moved to lay Mr. Foote's motion on the table, which was rejected by a vote of 28 to 26. It was then proposed that the Committee should not consider the question of the abolition of slavery in the States, slave trade between the States, slavery in forts and dock yards, and slavery in the District, or anything relative to domestic slavery, not specially referred to them by name and by order of the Senate. Pending this proposition, the Senate adjourned.

House of Representatives.

A report was made in favor of printing 10,000 copies of T. B. King's Report on California, which led to a long talk about the manner in which the public printing has been done, or left undone. The report was finally adopted.

Mr. Potter, from the Post Office Committee, reported a bill establishing mail routes in California, Oregon, Minnesota, and New Mexico.

Mr. W. R. W. Cobb, of Ala., from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill granting bounty land to soldiers of the war of 1812, Wayne's war, the Creek and Florida wars.

In Senate. SIXTH-DAY, April 12.

An earnest effort was made to dispose of Mr. Foote's Compromise Committee in its revised form, but in vain, and the matter was laid on the table.

The deficiency bill was then taken up, and an amendment, striking out the appropriation for wings to the Patent Office, was discussed, but the Senate soon got tired, and adjourned over till Second-day.

House of Representatives.

After some talk about giving the widow of Gen. Worth a pension of fifty dollars per month, the bill was laid on the table.

The Select Committee on the Galphin Claim asked farther instructions, and were ordered to overhaul the business from beginning to end. After which the House adjourned over.

NEW-YORK HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION BILL.

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:—

SECTION 1. In addition to the property now exempt by law from sale under execution, there shall be exempt by law from sale on execution for debts hereafter contracted, the lot and buildings thereon, occupied as a residence and owned by the debtor, being a householder and having a family, to the value of one thousand dollars. Such exemption shall continue after the death of such householder, for the benefit of the widow and family, some or one of them continuing to occupy such homestead, until the youngest child become twenty-one years of age, and until the death of the widow. And no release or waiver of such exemption shall be valid unless the same shall be in writing, subscribed by such householder, and acknowledged in the same manner as conveyances of real estate are by law required to be acknowledged.

§2. To entitle any property to such exemption, the conveyance of the same shall shall show that it is designed to be held as a homestead under this act, or if already purchased, or the conveyance does not show such design, a notice that the same is destined to be so held shall be executed and acknowledged by the person owning the said property, which shall contain a full description thereof, and shall be recorded in the office of the clerk of the county in which the said property is situate, in a book to be provided for that purpose, and known as the "Homestead Exemption Book." But no property shall, by virtue of this act, be exempt from sale for non-payment of taxes or assessments, or for a debt contracted for the purchase thereof, or prior to the recording of the aforesaid deed or notice.

§3. If, in the opinion of the Sheriff holding an execution against such householder, the premises claimed by him or her as exempt, are worth more than one thousand dollars, he shall summon six qualified jurors of his county, who shall upon oath, to be administered to them by such Sheriff, appraise said premises, and if, in the opinion of the Jury, the property may be divided without injury to the interests of the parties, they shall set off so much of said premises, including the dwelling house, as, in their opinion, shall be worth one thousand dollars, and the residue of said premises may be advertised and sold by such Sheriff.

§4. In case the value of the premises shall, in the opinion of the Jury, be more than one thousand dollars, and cannot be divided as is provided for in the last section, they shall make and sign an appraisal of the value thereof, and deliver the same to the Sheriff, who shall deliver a copy thereof to the execution debtor, or to some one of his family of suitable age to understand the nature thereof, with a notice thereof attached, that unless the execution debtor shall pay to said Sheriff the surplus over and above one thousand dollars within sixty days thereafter, that such premises will be sold.

§5. In case such surplus shall not be paid within sixty days, it shall be lawful for the Sheriff to advertise and sell the said premises, and out of the proceeds of such sale to pay to said execution debtor the said sum of $1,000, which shall be exempt from execution for one year thereafter, and apply the balance on such execution; provided, that no sale shall be made unless a greater sum than $1,000 shall be bid therefor, in which case the Sheriff may return the execution for want of property.

§6. The costs and expenses of selling off such homestead, as provided herein, shall be charged and included in the Sheriff's bill of costs upon said execution.

§7. This Act shall take effect on the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one.

A law passed the Georgia Legislature, at its last session, giving to the widow and child, or children, of any person dying insolvent, $100 worth of the property of said insolvent, free and clear of all claims for debts due by him.

STEAMERS TO LIBERIA.

Joseph Bryan of Alabama, for himself and his associates, has petitioned Congress to advance to them $2,400,000 in five per cent. stocks, repayable with interest in twenty installments, to help build four steam ships of 4,000 tuns burden, better than any other in the world, and capable of going from New York to Liverpool in eight days. These ships are to cost $800,000 a piece, and Mr. Bryan wants the Government to fork up as they are built. Two of them he proposes to finish by October 1, 1852, and the other two by October 1, 1854; the Government is to have the right to take them when needed for war purposes, by paying their cost and ten per cent. commission; and the right at all times to place on board two heavy guns and men necessary to serve them, and to send agents to Liberia free of charge.

The main purpose of these big ships is to transport free negroes to Liberia under the direction of the Colonization Society. Mr. Bryan thinks each ship can take 4,000 passengers at a trip, and make four trips a year; thus transporting 64,000 free negroes to Africa and respectability; and the Society is to have the right of sending them by paying $10 for passage and rations for emigrants over 12 years old, and $5 for those under. The steamers are also to have the privilege of introducing the products of Liberia into this Republic free of duty. They are also expected to be very useful in putting an end to the slave trade. VOLUNTEERS FOR THE MEXICAN WAR.—Only one regiment was commissioned in the State of New York and sent directly to the scene of the Mexican War. A Select Committee of the Assembly recently made a report upon their sufferings and condition, a paragraph from which will give an idea of what war does for the soldier:—

"The whole number that departed originally for the seat of war, was 805. Of these there died in Mexico, or were killed in battle, 227; discharged from disabilities, wounds, sickness, &c., 226; missing and deserted 35; died since their return 56; known to be living 106; leaving wholly unaccounted for 155. Of those discharged in Mexico, as above stated, in number 226, very few have been heard of. It is supposed that most of them died, being sick when discharged. Of those known to be living, numbering 106, nearly all are broken down by disease, hardships, or wounds received in the campaign, and are unable to support themselves. Of the 190 of whom we can learn nothing, we suppose most have died, and many have doubtless gone away, it may be to California. We have discovered 18 widows, who are all in a destitute condition, and about 20 children likewise situated. The case of Lieut. Boyle, is peculiarly touching. Soon after he left for the seat of war, his afflicted wife, broken-hearted, died, leaving five children. At the close of the war, Lieut. Boyle returned, bereaved of his wife and broken down in constitution. In a short time he too died, leaving four children. Two of them are now in the orphan asylum, and two are in New York. Many and distressing have been the instances of suffering which have come under our knowledge, among those who have reached their native land. Two have died, as we learn from correct authority, from actual starvation. Numbers have died in the Hospital and the Alms House, and until quite recently the misery of the relics of the 1st Regiment of New York Volunteers has been comparatively unnoticed."

AFRICAN COLONIZATION IN OHIO.—A large and respectable meeting of the colored citizens of Cincinnati was held on the 21st ult., which protested against the whole scheme of African Colonization. The following is one of the resolutions adopted:—

Resolved, That this is our home; this is the spot where our fathers, mothers, sisters and brothers have died; here are our kinsmen in chains, and while one rattles upon their limbs, or clanks upon their neck, we will never voluntarily leave the land of our birth, but contend for our rights, in the Church, and out of the Church—in the State and out of the State—until the stars and stripes shall float over the head of none but the free.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS.—The Ship Ianthe arrived at New York from Canton last week, bringing an interesting group of the "upper ten" of the Celestial Empire, consisting of a young woman and her maid-servant, a professor of music, a little girl, and a boy. Miss Pwan Yekgo is 17 years of age. Her feet are only about three inches in length—a choice mark of her distingué character. Her maid-servant, Miss Lune-Chung, has feet of ordinary size. The little girl, Miss Amoy, is 6 years of age; the boy, Master Taing, is only 4.

THE MINES OF GREAT BRITAIN.—A late number of the Edinburgh Review contains a very interesting article on this source of national industry. There are employed in the mining operations 193,000 persons, and in the metallic arts and manufactures 142,000. The annual profit is $20,000,000. The yearly produce of copper is 15,000 tons; of lead 50,000 tons; of tin 5,000 tons. The produce of coal in 1846 was 37,754,750 tons. In 1837 the annual produce of the mines of Great Britain was valued at $100,000,000; since then it has greatly increased.

SCHOOLS FOR COLORED CHILDREN.—The establishment of separate schools for the education of colored children, has occasioned considerable discussion in Boston. The subject was at length brought before the Supreme Court, where it was decided last week, that the right to regulate schools belongs alone to the School Committee—thus sustaining the city authorities in their course of establishing separate schools.

The ship Memnon, Capt. Gordon, arrived last week from Canton, whence she sailed on the 9th of February. On the 4th of March, off St. Helena, Capt. G. reports having spoken the bark Caroline, under the command of an officer and crew from the British steamer Cormorant, having been taken by said steamer off Rio de Janeiro, under the suspicion of being a slaver. The captain of the bark and one of the crew were on board, and would be tried at St. Helena.

SUMMARY.

Mr. Perkins, who has spent six months in California, returned in the last steamship, bringing decidedly the neatest specimen of the California, staple we have yet laid our eyes on. It is a boulder of quartz and gold, eight inches long, five wide, by four deep, and weighs fourteen pounds seven ounces, of which it is computed that thirteen pounds are gold, worth $3,400. It was dug in a dry gulch or canyon of the North Fork of the American River known as "Auburn Diggings," and is said to be equaled by but one other specimen as yet shipped—the one sent to England last summer.

The overland emigration to California, this year, is enormous. A gentleman from St. Josephs, Mo., says that there are from 59 to 60,000 persons at that place, and up and down the Missouri river, awaiting the proper time to start for the plains. In consequence of the vast army of adventurers, provision of all kinds, especially fodder for horses, is enormously high—as high as in California. For instance, oats are $2 50 per bushel.

It is said by gentlemen from California, now in Washington, that Col. Fremont is the richest man in the world. His gold mine will probably be saleable, in a few years, at six millions an acre. Mr. Wright says also, that he knows of spots belonging to the Government, which are worth six millions of dollars an acre, and will produce from ten to twenty per cent. a year on that sum.

A California letter, received by the last steamer, says: "People must not be too sanguine. Many do well and make fortunes, but more die, and thousands have little or no recompense for their toil. The labor in the mines is hard, the exposure and privations great. We generally hear of most of those who do well, but the unfortunate are little heard of or cared for.

The Boston Traveler says:—"The condition of Mrs. Webster and her daughters is indescribable. All efforts to console them are unavailing. The most heart-oppressing shrieks are constantly issuing from their mansion. Many of the most distinguished citizens of Cambridge have waited upon the sorrow-stricken group, and all imaginable efforts have been made to lighten the weight of their sorrows."

The trial of Albert G. Gaskins, the young man who was arrested in January last by a special agent of the Post Office Department, charged with robbing the United States mail, took place on the 1st inst. before the Circuit Court of Charleston, S. C., and resulted in his conviction on four separate indictments. He was sentenced to forty years' imprisonment at hard labor in Edgefield jail!—ten years for each offense.

News has been received from Campeachy, announcing that a great conflagration had occurred at the city of Laguayra, Venezuela, which broke out on the 18th of March, and consumed almost the entire city, but two buildings being left standing. The greatest distress prevailed among the inhabitants, who were not only houseless, but in danger of starvation. The loss by this conflagration is not far short of two millions of dollars.

The Washington Republic states that the officers of the army stationed in Oregon have petitioned Congress for an increase of pay to meet the great expenses they are subjected to by the peculiar situation of the Territory, where the prices of all necessaries are graduated on the California scale.

A man named Touissant, sentenced to death in Canada, for an outrage upon a young girl, has had his sentence commuted to imprisonment for life. Several other persons condemned to death in Canada, have lately had their sentences commuted in like manner.

A letter from California says that a vessel lately arrived at San Francisco from Sydney, New South Wales, with three women on board, who, being unable to settle their passage, were sold at auction to the highest bidder, for fifteen dollars each, for five months' services.

A rencounter occurred at Mobile, Ala., on the 5th inst., between a man named David White and Henry M. Jackson, in which both fired pistols, and White was shot dead. Jackson escaped without injury, and surrendered himself to the authorities, who held him to bail.

The Society (English) for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, has recently come into the possession of upwards of thirty thousand pounds sterling, bequeathed to it by the late William Long, Esq, of London.

A correspondent of the Journal of Commerce says that a suit has been brought against the celebrated Prof. Agassiz, for $20,000 damages, because he expressed an unfavorable opinion on a scientific work.

Sixteen thousand dollars, and not sixteen hundred dollars, was the amount of bail given by the robbers of the Phœnix Bank at Westerly, R. I.

Albert G. Bagley, the gold-pen maker, was on trial last week, in New York, for seduction, and a verdict of $1,800 was rendered against him.

Mr. T. J. Campbell, Clerk of the House of Representatives, died at Washington on the 13th inst. The door is now open for another scene of competition.

A route to Boston by way of the Long Island Railroad and a boat across the Sound, was opened on the 15th inst.

A young bear, about two-thirds grown, was captured at Manahawkin, N. J., last week.

There was quite a flare-up at Sonthport, Wisconsin, on the 8th inst. It seems that Mr. C. I. Hutchinson, an extensive produce dealer, had received into his warehouse some 40,000, bushels of wheat, for which he gave the usual warehouse receipts; and then sold the wheat, and started for California. When this become known, the small farmers holding receipts came forward to claim their wheat, and resist the claim of those who had purchased. The matter was not settled at last accounts.

The last steamer from Chagres brought intelligence that a trunk had been broken open at Panama, and $10,000 worth of gold and watches stolen from it. Officer A. M. C. Smith, who caught the persons who robbed the gold boxes, was put upon the track of these, and has already caught two of them, with a large amount of property.

Four steamers left New York on the 13th and 15th inst. for Chagres, and California. One of them, the Georgia, had 561 passengers, another, the Cherokee, 232. The Empire City and the Philadelphia also had a completement of passengers.

Matilda Elliott, a lunatic now in one of the Pennsylvania asylums, has recently had several cases decided in her favor in Pittsburg. By one of them her title was established to one-fifth of the flourishing town of Temperanceville, near Pittsburgh; and by another her claim to another piece of land, at the mouth of the Saw Mill Run, was established.

A telegraphic dispatch in the Evening Post says that Mr. Wilson, from New York, for some time connected with the coast survey, was married on Wednesday evening, and found dead in his bed beside his bride the next morning.

The Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives of Massachusetts, to whom was referred the subject of Homestead Exemption, has reported, that it is inexpedient to legislate upon it. The report was accepted.

The ship Memnon, Capt. Gordon, sailed from New York on the 12th of April, 1849, for San Francisco and Canton, and arrived at New York again last week, with a full cargo of teas, silks, &c., making the voyage in 11 months and 26 days.

MARRIED,

In Brooklyn, L. I., on the 6th of March, by Eld. J. L. Scott, ISAAC SKIDMORE to MARTHA PALMER.

On Sabbath morning, March 30th, by Eld. David Clawson, JONATHAN BROOKS, of Bridgeton, N. J., to MARGARET A. DAVIS, daughter of Abel Davis, of Hopewell, N. J.

DIED,

At Lost Creek, Va., March 22d, after a painful illness of several weeks, ELI BOND, aged 61 years. Bro. Bond was a member of the Lost Creek Seventh-day Baptist Church more than sixteen years, and adorned his profession by a consistent Christian life. He was deeply impressed, at the commencement of his sickness, that he should not recover. In the prospect of death, his mind was calm and tranquil, and at times elated with joy. He departed this life in the triumph of faith, inspiring all his relatives and friends with the cheering hope, that he has received a joyful admittance into the paradise of God. He has left a widow, several children, a large number of relatives, and the Church, to deplore the loss which they have sustained.

In Hopewell, Cumberland Co., N. J., March 22d, 1850, MARGARET RANDOLPH, wife of Charles F. Randolph, aged forty-seven years. She embraced religion in early life, and united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church at Shiloh. For several years she labored under a dropsical affection, which had occasioned her a great amount of suffering; and for which she had submitted to the operation of tapping forty-five times. She however bore her affliction with a degree of fortitude and Christian resignation seldom witnessed, and left to her surviving friends good evidence that their loss is her inestimable gain.

In Shiloh, N. J., April 3d, 1850, BEULAH S. RANDOLPH, widow of Reuben Randolph, in the 62d year of her age. Her amiable disposition and Christian deportment had won the affections of those with whom she was acquainted. She had been for many years a useful member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church at Shiloh. There was a premature decline of her mental and physical energies, so that for the last two years she was incapable of enjoying the pleasures and privileges of social and religious intercourse. But she has gone where the weary are at rest, to unite with that happy throng which shall surround the throne of God and the Lamb, to sing the praises of redeeming grace and dying love throughout eternity.

Eclectic Magazine for the Year 1850.

THE Eclectic Magazine of Foreign Literature, Science, and Art, aims to present to its readers a complete survey of the whole field of British Periodical Literature, comprising the selections of all the articles of the most able and celebrated Reveiws, Magazines, and Journals, which have any interest or value to American readers. It not only contains the articles which are desirable in those periodicals reprinted in this country, but in the far greater variety of able and popular Reveiws, Magazines, &c., which form so splendid an element of the literature of the day, and which are inaccessible to the mass of American readers, except by some such medium as the Eclectic Magazine. By omitting what is merely local in interest or feeble in character, the ample size of the Eclectic Magazine enables the editor to embody all that is really desirable in the whole range of journalism. As only the best articles of each periodical are selected, it is evident that the contents of the Eclectic Magazine must be superior to those of any one, however great or celebrated; and, taken together, must constitute a more desirable and able body of periodical literature than can be found elsewhere in the same compass.

Each number is embellished with a suberb steel engraving, from the well-known burin of Mr. Sartain, of subjects of elevated character and general interest, including portraits of distinguished living authors and celebrities, making twelve rich and elegant prints in a year.

TERMS.

The Eclectic Magazine is issued on the first of every month, in numbers of 144 large 8vo. pages each, on fine paper, making three volumes a year, with title-pages and indexes. Price $5 per year, if paid strictly in advance—otherwise invariably $6.

☞ The Magazine above described fully sustains the character given to it in the prospectus, and is justly regarded as the best work of the kind to be had. We shall be happy to forward the subscription of any of our friends who may find it more convenient to communicate with us than with the publisher.

History of Romanism.

In a large octavo volume of 750 pages, printed in large type, on the finest paper, and embellished with more than fifty engravings, chiefly from Original Designs, and bound in muslin, extra gilt. Price $3. THE HISTORY OF ROMANISM, from its earliest origin to the present time, by the Rev. John Dowling, D. D. A new and enlarged edition, with the Author's last additions, and a Supplement, containing a Sketch of the Life of Pope Pius IX., &c.

The best evidence of the intrinsic value of this remarkably popular work is to be seen in the fact that within the comparatively recent period of its first publication, the extraordinary number of 17,000 copies have been disposed of.

The following is an extract from a letter from the Rev. Dr. Giustiniani, the converted Roman Catholic priest, who is abundantly qualified by education, observation, and extensive study, to testify to the fidelity and value of a "History of Romanism."

"If the reader wishes to be acquainted with the errors of Romanism, he has only to open the pages of Dowling's History. If the reader is anxious to read an epitome of the history of the popes, their ambition; their intrigues; their avariciousness; their tyranny; their superstitions, and their mummeries, he can here find all proved and authenticated by the most accredited authors of the Church of Rome." L. GIUSTINIANI.

"It reflects much credit on the skill, patience, industry, and judgment of the author; he appears very justly to have conceived the idea of a work, which has long been regarded as a desideratum by a large portion of those interested in the great controversy with the Romanists."—Protestant Churchman.

"We think it an able work, comprising the results of extensive reading and research, and well adapted to fill an important chasm in our literature.—Lutheran Obs.

"We regard it as a most important addition to the historical and religious literature of the age. Its contents form a rich storehouse of historical instruction, which should be placed within the reach of every family."—N. Y. Christian Intelligencer.

"It presents a succienct, but sufficiently full, history of the rise, progress, errors, cruelties, and present condition of the Papacy, authenticated by reference to the most undoubted historic sources, related in a spirited, engaging, and impressive style, and arranged in the most lucid manner. It abounds in facts and incidents, and, with its beautiful illustrations, is better adapted to furnish a vivid and impressive portraiture of Romanism as it is, than any other book we know of."—N. Y. Evang.

"The detached portions of Romish history which were every where to be met with, needed to be brought together and presented in systematic order. The reading of one book thus becomes better and cheaper than the reading of many."—Boston Recorder.

"It is written with the ready, popular eloquence, for which the well-known author is distinguished, and cannot fail to arrest attention to the controversy of which it treats. It is a strongly Protestant work, and exhibits the deformities of Popery with great power."—N. Y. Recorder.

"The author appears to have brought to the execution of this great work unwearied industry, genuine and thorough scholarship, and scrupulous fidelity."
RUFUS BABCOCK, late Pres. of Waterville College.

Miscellaneous.

THE SHAWL TRADE OF PAISLEY, SCOTLAND.

[Abridged from Hogg's Weekly Instructor.]

The extensive factories of Mr. Robert Kerr, situated at Seedhills and in Thread Street, Paisley, represent on a scale of great magnificence the operations of the trade or manufacture more especially recognized as the Paisley shawl trade; and it is in reference to these large works, that we shall now endeavor to present an outline of the mode in which the Paisley shawl is produced, together with an enumeration of its varieties and characteristics.

The particular pattern having been decided upon for the manufacture of a shawl, the following is the method in which it is produced. Tabular views of the intended succession of its colors are first jotted down on a paper termed the "weaver's ticket." This shows at a glance the procession of the coloring each way, lengthwise and breadthwise, from end to end and from side to side of the shawl. Calculated in splits of two threads each, the "weaver's ticket" exhibits the exact way in which the dyes throughout the shawl are to occur when woven. To furnish a notion of the minuteness of these tickets, that intended for a shawl of 1600 splits down and up, i. e. 3200 splits or 6400 warp threads, commenced with dividing off 10 "splits" to be dyed in a particular manner, viz., 10 inches of them black, 72 inches marone, and 10 inches black again, making up the full length of the shawl, including its fringes. Besides this there were 30 different changes down and up, or 60 changes in the whole breadth of the web. So minute were many of the subdivisions of the coloring, that, for example, the 10 "splits" above mentioned, when put together, formed, in a web of this fineness, not more than a quarter of an inch of the one color in the width of the cloth. Some portions all of one color were, of course, more extensive, varying from perhaps 80 and 100 to 350 "splits."

The "weaver's ticket" or "web draught" being thus concocted from the pattern peculiar to the shawl, the necessary yarns are first given, in a green state, to the warper, by whom the intended web is thereupon warped off, wholly undyed. The warper's duty includes measuring off, knotting upon a thread and tying with a colored string the different measurements of color indicated on the "draught." By this means he is enabled to warp off every proposed color into a chain by itself; and, not only so, but to keel or mark upon that chain each termination of that succession of color—giving the number of "races" or times this one color runs up and down through the web.

The yarns on coming from the warper are arranged and screwed down into the slides of a machine or frame, and dyed according to these marks—each warper's chain of yarn being dipt as many times as it represents different colors or grounds throughout the length of the shawl; those in the width of it being separated, as already intimated, to be dyed each of its own appropriate color. The value of the labor already expended up to this stage actually equals that of the silk itself.

In the dyeing-house, woolen yarns are first scoured in ammonia, soap, &c.; some colors also demand the yarns to be previously prepared for their reception; and, in general, cotton yarns are previously boiled in water; spun silks tossed in boiling water, and tram silks boiled in soap to extract the gum. The skeins of yarn are then hung upon the dyer's pins and dipped in the vats or boilers. These vats in Mr. Kerr's works are of cast iron, 6½ feet deep. Some of them, for hot dyes, have a flue passed through them. Scarlet yarn is dyed in one hour, one man at each side of the boiler turning over the skeins. Some colors require a greater length of time than this. The woolen yarns are all done warm; the cotton all cold; and the latter require several dippings, which is sometimes even the case with the woolens in dyeing woad-blue. In these last instances, the dyer keeps advancing from the weaker to the darker color, until the full shade is obtained. After being dipped in the dye, the yarns are washed, mostly in cold water, although in Mr. Kerr's establishment warm water is preferred. Excepting such colors as improve by an access of oxygen from the atmosphere, most yarns require immediate washing. When the dyeing is finished, each skein is wrung well out on the dipping pin, and thus becomes ready for the drying stove, where it remains hanging upon poles, usually from afternoon till next morning; subjected to a temperature of 100, 110, or 120 degrees of Fahrenheit. Nothing more remains to be done with the yarn in this department than making it up into bundles.

The flower-lashing, whereby the yarns are adapted for the loom, is done by men and girls. The patterns, transferred on design paper, being put down before them on a frame, exhibit at a glance the distinct color of every thread in the piece. Upon this frame are stretched chords called "simples," one for every thread, whatever its color, represented on the pattern. A twine called a "lash" is passed through amongst the "simples" on the frame, so as to isolate in its place each one of the same color from the general mass. The "tacks," or "lifts" of each distinct color, are afterwards assembled together into one "lash," so that when this lash is pulled by the drawboy employed at the loom or at the card-punching machine in preparing for the Jacquard, the whole of one particular color in the portion of the pattern at which they have arrived can be thrown into the web by the weaver's shuttle, or is represented by means of the punching machine upon the card paper. The punching machine, whereby these cards are cut, is mounted in exact conformity to the harness of the weaver's loom, and enables the weaver to dispense with the drawboy; or, rather, instead of each weaver requiring a drawboy for himself, one drawboy at the card-punching machine now answers for all. The card-punching machine, therefore, is worked by a drawboy, and holes corresponding to the different colors representing the weaver's "shots" are thereby punched out upon the cards successively. The succession of cards being strung together, are deposited at the side of the loom, mount one by one to the top of it, and there becoming for a moment fixed upon pins, each in its turn admits of the portions of a particular color, represented by its perforations (somewhat as musical notation represents sounds) being communicated to the fabric in process.

The flower-lashing is performed in the upper flat of Mr. Kerr's factory, a lofty edifice of four stories. The other three flats are filled with looms. On one side range of one of these are perhaps thirty plain looms in full operation upon tartans, &c.; on the other side range of the same flat, and throughout both ranges of the other flats, are rows of splendid Jacquard harness-looms, or more simply, Jacquard looms. Each weaver has suspended at his elegant loom a fan of quills used for drying the dressing put upon the web. This is the old form of fan which has been reverted to. At one time a circular revolving fan was attached to the side of the loom. Here shawls of all kinds are in progress of being woven. Mr. Kerr's patent double shawl is worked with as much apparent ease as the single fabric, although by this wonderful device two separate and complete shawls are worked at one and the same time. The weaver is paid for this work considerably higher, having harder work and more material to take up. There is a machine for splitting or cutting separate the two shawls, which are woven back to back. It is not a little curious, on comparing what ought to be the corresponding portions of each shawl, that their relative colors are reversed. Thus, the white of the one is represented by amber color in another; the scarlet by black; the dark blue by light blue; the light blue by green. A beautiful portrait of Louis Philippe, King of the French, which the connoisseur of the fine arts can hardly distinguish from the finest line engraving, has even been produced on these looms; and the principle involved in this production has since been carried out by Mr. Kerr in a magnificent new vest-piece of a splendid and intricate pattern.

We shall not pause to describe the numerous operations of finishing, singing, fringing, &c., through which the shawls pass in preparation for the market, since there remains enough to absorb our attention in the enumeration of the various kinds and descriptions of fabrics produced in Paisley, of which, we suspect, except amongst those concerned in the trade, no adequate idea prevails.

Rich white crape shawls, woven plain, are subsequently embroidered by hand in the adjacent country. Some of these shawls are of great value, and the embroiderers alone would receive sometimes as much as five or six guineas for a single shawl. The embroidery alone of a fine one cost 110 shillings. Besides these handsome white shawls of flowered embroidery, there are crimson and colored shawls of the same description. It is here, in fact, that Paisley must be proclaimed unrivaled. All that the French have done in crapes has never to this day come up to what has been and can be done in Paisley. The China crapes, as yet unequaled, are approached nearest by those of Paisley. The fringe of one of these shawls is about one pound in value. The manufacturer receives for them as high as twelve guineas from the retailer, who of course disposes of them at a higher price. It is about twenty-five years since the manufacture of crapes was first introduced into Paisley, where a capital trade in them subsisted for some years, but afterwards declined. An effort is at this moment making to revive this branch of industry. In the instance of Mr. Kerr's establishment, the entire manufacture, from the raw material to the finished shawl, is done upon the premises, the silk being "thrown," wholly prepared, woven, and finished, in the house, from the first stage to the last.

Silk gauze shawls, of bright streaming colors, a well-known branch of the Paisley trade, under which exclusively Fulton's house flourished for an entire century, while the town at large produced little else, are still made, of great delicacy and splendor. A specimen termed "Aërial," shown at the first Corn-Law League Bazaar, in Covent-Garden Theatre, excited great admiration.

Even figured satins are made in Paisley. These exhibit sometimes the novelty of having color thrown in upon the ground, so as to disguise it in the centre in the same manner as in the border of the shawl. In one shawl, of which the body was in reality black, it had been woven all over blue. The bordering of the same shawl was composed of four colors.

Lace shawls are made of a most gorgeous description by being embroidered in colors. These are not only of black lace, but crimson and all varieties of ground. The splendid embroidery on them is diversified by the display of eighteen or twenty distinct colors. It is executed exclusively in Renfrewshire, and for the most part in the country immediately adjacent to Paisley, as for instance in and around the rural village of Kilbarchan. It is found, in this instance, that instead of drawing off the rustic community from domestic avocations, this manufacturing employment, the same magnificent needlework which the Scriptures of old assigned to "king's daughters," and in which the aristocratic recluses of the ancient nunneries reveled, is performed by girls who are frequently called upon to lay it aside for the more pressing emergency of proceeding to milk the cow! And yet these shawls are splendid, brilliant, gorgeous, in the full flush of natural coloring—aye, and something beyond—for art, we are well aware, is permitted to exaggerate. For these few years back the French have tried this branch of art; but the Paisley work is quite fit to stand in competition with the French.

Barège shawls are entirely woven, being a species of gauze.

Massive harness-wove black satin shawls are entirely done in the loom, including isolated figures raised on them in embroidery! These figures are literally sewed in the harness-loom by the shuttle; and actually consist each of a single continuous thread!

Eighty-hundred satins, very rich and very handsome, are done with alternate stripes of such colors as primrose and lavender, or crimson and green, interrupted by similar interspaces of a black ground in fine combination.

Some very curious striped silks are made in alternate brilliant stripes of plain ground and figure, in which a substitution of warp actually takes place.

Figured barèges have generally a strongly contrasted plain pattern, as white upon black.

Crape shawls, elegantly contrasted in the same way, have, raised on the surface, the above-mentioned embroidered figure sewed in the web.

The scarfs called Grecian scarfs are exceedingly brilliant and rich in their stripes; we had almost said in their plumage, for their coloring is gorgeous.

Oswegans, again, have a red ochrey ground and simple blue or yellow stripes, with a singularly wild and transatlantic effect.

The satin crapes are still finer in the double combination of their simple figured stripes, the length and tenuity of the lines giving them grace and character.

Indianas, in the shape of gentlemen's plaids, with a manly substantiality of texture, combine such enduring hues as woad-blue on a pale diamonded pattern or the chequers of the plain and homely shepherd's plaiding.

The tartan plaids for ladies are often made of an exceedingly fine texture.

Amongst the varieties of wove shawls produced—

A plain centre shawl with a harlequin runner has the runner laid off in different large compartments, each including a large object of the pine-apple pattern, beautifully balanced within or towards the centre of the shawl by two smaller objects proportioned to the larger extent of the large one. This shawl is entirely wove, both weft and warp, a thing regarded as very difficult to accomplish, especially in the case of a wool warp.

A harlequin long shawl, of which the ground would be white but that it is entirely woven or covered over with figures, is a remarkably elaborate production. The lady of a distinguished M. P., returning lately from the Continent with two of these shawls, a long and a square, in her possession, both being of Paisley manufacture, had them seized at the Customhouse as being French. It was in vain that their Paisley origin was insisted upon; our native manufacturers could not obtain, in the minds of her Majesty's officials, the requisite credit for having produced any such articles; and Mr. Kerr's agent had actually to go down, exhibit the original pattern, and relieve the property of the honorable member's lady from the consequences of this somewhat earnest tribute to our manufacturing success.

A real Cashmere, weft and warp, worked with wool spottings, possesses a quiet agreeable character and exceedingly fine runners.

A plaid with white centre and large runners evinces exquisitely minute differences of pattern, from being constructed to serve as a double or "half and half" garment, exhibiting one pattern when one way folded, another pattern when folded otherwise.

A scarlet Cashmere square shawl, the finest that is made, being all Cashmere, weft, warp, and spottings, is in its chasteness, disposition, and conception of pattern, particularly owing to a novel curvature in the border, remarkably fine.

Other fine shawls, with beautiful turns in the pattern, evince a singleness of purpose, or rather an unity of design, carried out through the entire runner, and even projected towards the center, not abruptly terminated at the usual line of demarcation.

A harness-finished shawl, two parts white, Mr. Kerr's superintendent, when in London, discovered to have been imitated by the French.

A demure and sober-colored Cashmere might be complained of as being dull, yet suits the taste of many, nor is such taste bad. There is a divine beauty and equanimity in moderation.

The subdued style of shawl is analogous to this. The pattern evinces no decided figure; the pines, employed as the best curve for giving decision, are thrown out; and there is no scarlet admitted into the combination of coloring. These shawls are new. They have generally black and blue centres.

Mosaic shawls are pervaded by patterns in fine flowing combinations; and

The ray shawl receives its name from the emanation of radii from the runners projecting towards the centre.

We are now done. The enumeration just presented, and it is rather a selection of items than a full, true, and particular catalogue of the products of the Paisley loom, is the best method that occurred to us of indicating the nature, extent, and excellence of these celebrated fabrics.

FIRE ANNIHILATOR.

Several interesting and successful experiments have lately been exhibited at the London Gasworks, Vauxhall, before a numerous company of ladies and gentlemen, invited to witness the effective power of Mr. Phillips' new invention for extinguishing fires. After adverting to the inefficiency of water as a means of quenching flame, and the consequent loss sustained annually throughout the Kingdom, by the destruction of property, to the amount of about £2,000,000, he introduced one of the smaller of his own machines, and explained that the agent by which he sought to accomplish his object was a mixture of gas and vapor. After several experiments on a small scale, to show the success he had attained by these means, the attention of the company was directed to a compartment of a large open building, quite twenty feet high inside, which was fitted up with partitions and temporary joisting of light wood, well soaked with pitch and turpentine, and overhung beside with rags and shavings soaked in like manner. The torch was applied to this erection, and the flames, which ascended immediately, at length roared with a vehemence which drove the spectators back to a distance of forty feet, and was already beyond the power of water. The inventor then brought forward one of his hand machines, and threw out a volume of gaseous vapor, which, in half a minute, entirely suppressed all flame and combustion; and, to show that the vapor which now filled the space was quite innoxious, Mr. Phillips mounted into the loft, and passed and repassed through the midst of it, with a lighted candle in his hand. The machine with which this effect was accomplished was rather larger than a good-sized coffee-pot, and consisted of three tin cases, one within another, and mutually communicating. There was a small quantity of water in the bottom of the machine, and in the center case was a composite cake, of the size and color of peat—containing, in the middle of it, a phial of sulphuric acid and chlorate of potash. In order to put the machine in action, this phial is broken, and a gaseous vapor is generated so rapidly and in such quantity that it immediately rushes out from a lateral spout with great impetuosity. Mr. Phillips explained that a machine of any size could be made, according to the purpose for which it was intended, and a company was at length formed to carry the invention into effect. The company present, who seemed taken by surprise, very cordially expressed their satisfaction with the success of the achievements. [Tribune.

MARRIAGES IN RUSSIA.

A numerous family is quite a treasure to a Russian peasant. The number of his sons increases the number of acres which he farms, and his daughters are married off-hand. He is not asked to provide them with a marriage portion; nay, he is sometimes even paid for them. The lower classes, in almost every part of Europe, think it a curse to have many children; in Russia they are a royal road to wealth. Hence the population increases very fast, and would do so much faster if the children were not killed by over-feeding. Ten or twelve children are what one might call the usual allowance of a married couple in Russia, but one third of them die in their infancy. The extraordinary abundance of the necessaries of life is a powerful encouragement to marriage, and old bachelorship and old maidship are things one scarcely ever hears of. Some frightful abuses result from this state of things. A late traveler in Russia tells us of boys six and seven years of age who were actually married to bouncing young women of four-and-twenty. He states the case of wives who carried their husbands about in their arms. These unnatural marriages were a cause of the most disgraceful connections. Though the child was husband de jure, his father was husband de facto. When the boy grew up he found his wedded wife an old woman, and made haste to have one of her sons married to some girl whose age and appearance were more congenial to his taste. Baron Haxthausen confirms this statement, and informs us that though the practice has of late been forbidden by law, it is still upheld by the customs of the country, and by motives of interest. Discovery of a Great Lake.—A great Lake has been discovered in the interior of South Africa during a journey of exploration by two gentlemen, Murray and Oswall. It is situated in longitude 24° east and latitude 19° south, and its limits appear to have been undiscernible. According to the natives, however, it takes twenty-five days to travel round it. The vegetation on its banks is tropical, and palms are abundant, but it contains no crocodiles, alligators, or hippopotami. It is approached by a river, which for some distance is of small size, and which, as it approaches the lake, becomes as large as the Clyde. The lake itself has islands in it, but it is said these are densely populated by a race entirely different from those near the borders of the lake. Pelicans are numerous, as also fish, some of which resemble perch and carp, and weigh between 40 lb. and 50 lb. There are likewise a great number of elephants, although of a much smaller description than those nearer the colony. The natives, whose languege was unlike any known dialect spoken by the other tribes in South Africa, appeared to be of an inferior nature, and to be much afflicted with pulmonary diseases.

Washing made Easy.—Those who engage in the pursuit of washing under difficulties may find the following worth a trial. It is the system about which mysterious advertisements have of late appeared so frequently.

Dissolve ¼ lb. of lime in boiling water, straining twice through a flannel bag; dissolve separately ½ lb. of brown soap and ½ lb. of soda—boil the three together. Put six gallons of water into the boiler, and when boiling add the mixture. The linens, which must have been steeped in cold water for twelve hours, are wrung out, any stains rubbed with soap, and put into the boiler, where they must boil for thirty-five minutes. They are then drawn, (the liquor being preserved, as it can be used three times,) placed in a tub, and clear boiling water poured over it. Rub them out, rinse them out in cold water, and they are ready for drying.

A Shower of Sulphur.—The passengers and officers of the Peytona, from New Orleans for Louisville, observed a very singular phenomenon as the boat was passing Napoleon, Ark., on Sunday morning, the 17th ult., during a shower of rain. The atmosphere was of a muddy yellow color, and the rain had the appearance of liquid sulphur. The rain as it fell on the deck of the boat left a thick scum like sulphur floating on its surface, a large portion of which was gathered by the passengers for the purpose of having it analyzed. The rain was accompanied with much lightning, and at one time the entire horizon was filled with vivid flashes of electricity darting in all directions. In less than fifteen minutes the rain ceased, and the skies became bright and unobscured.

An Astonishing Invention.—The London Mining Journal says there will shortly be brought before the public a new locomotive, in which the requirements of either steam, fire, air, or water, will be dispensed with; its power of traction, while effective, will be perfectly safe—by it one half at least of the present working expenses will be saved. Advocates of universal peace look forward with hope. The agent will exert a powerful influence on all nations. Distant parts of the world, where steamships, from the expense of fuel, have not been, will soon be reached with facility. This motive power will advance all nations by a larger stride than ever steam has yet made.

Curious Circumstance.—When the Station-house of the Rutland Railroad was built at Charlotte, Vt., a well was dug for a supply of water under the tank. After the workmen had dug some ten or fifteen feet, one of them observed on the side of the well a wet spot, into which he thrust his spade. Almost immediately a copious stream of water gushed from the aperture, and before the tools could be all got out of the pit, it had sixteen feet of water in it. It continued to fill until the water run over the top, which it does at this time, making a considerable rivulet. It required great power to pump the well out in order to stone it up. Here is an artesian well at a very slight cost.

The official report of the City Inspector makes the total number of the deaths in New York in 1849, 23,773—an increase over 1848 of 7,854. Under 10 years, 10,176; over 100 years, 7. Of last year's mortality, 12,589 were males and 11,304 females.

LET ME REST.

BY EBENEZER ELLIOTT.

He does well who does his best;
Is he weary? let him rest.
Brothers! I have done my best,
I am weary—let me rest.
After toiling oft in vain,
Baffled, yet to struggle fain;
After toiling long to gain,
Little good with mickle pain;
Let me rest—but lay me low,
Where the hedge-side roses blow;
Where the little daisies grow,
When the winds a maying go;
Where the footpath rustics plod;
Where the breeze-bow'd poplars nod;
Where the old woods worship God;
Where His pencil paints the sod;
Where the wedded throstle sings;
Where the young bird tries his wings;
Where the wailing plover swings,
Near the runlet's rushy springs!

Variety.

M. Lechaire, of Paris, has discovered that the white of zinc is a substitute for ceruse or white lead in oil painting. It saves life, health and expense. The Paris statistics of Saturnine of lead are indeed dreadful. He has tried the substitute in more than six thousand localities, on public and private structures. A committee of the Society for the Encouragement of Industrial Arts has reported the completeness and various advantages of his discovery.

The daughters of Gen. Simco, says the "Builder," an English journal, on the ruins of the old abbey of Dunkswell, near Honiton, have erected a church for which they worked all the stones with their own hands. The same journal adds:—"We have a worthy companion for these ladies, whose name is Miss Rickards, of Stow Langtoft, Bury, who has with her own hands glazed all the windows in her father's church, with stained glass, painted and burnt by herself.

Henry Clay said:—"In all the affairs of human life, social as well as political, he had remarked, that courtesies of a small and trivial character, are the ones which strike deepest to the grateful and appreciating heart. It is the picayune compliments which are most appreciated; far more than the double eagle ones which we sometimes yield."

Mr. N. Potter of East Hamburg, Erie Co., N. Y., has invented a machine which removes heaps on the sides of ruts, and fills them up at the same time. It can also plough up high places or heaps on the road, and by means of moveable scrapers, the dirt can be directed to the middle or from the middle of the road. It is drawn like a wagon, and is otherwise very simple.

Messrs. Webster & Groves, of Rockvillle, Ct. have made an improvement in the Feed Apparatus for Carding Machines, which, from a fair trial, has proved itself of great utility. The difference between this improvement and the common feed rolls, consists in having a concave surface. The wool is finer spread on the breaker, taken up more evenly, and there is far less clogging than by the common way of feeding.

In England, the Duke of Rutland has reclaimed 5,500 acres by means of a skillful course of drainage. They originally yielded only a growth of sedge and worthless aquatic grasses, and were the origin of a destructive malaria. Their first crop was abundant, and repaid all outlays for drainage, cultivation, and the original value of the soil.

It was one of the laws of Lycurgus, that no portions should be given to young women in marriage. When this great law giver was called upon to justify this enactment, he observed, "that in the choice of a wife, merit only should be considered; and that the law was made to prevent young women being chosen for their riches, or neglected for their poverty."

There is, says an exchange, a manufacturing company in Massachusetts, which employs upwards of one hundred mechanics and laborers, each of whom is privileged to subscribe for any two dollar paper or periodical, or any two at one dollar a year, at the expense of the company.

"A Portrait with a Free Pencil" certainly might be written beneath the following description, by a Washington letter writer:—"The blousy, awkward, able, uncouth, impudent, pushing, fluent, dexterous, ambiguous, and declamatory member from Oregon, made a good speech upon the admission of California."

Mr. C. Daboll, of New London, Ct., has invented a whistle that speaks with a most "miraculous organ" whenever its services are required for the purposes of alarm or warning. It is designed for the use of vessels at sea or on the coast, as on our eastern shores, where dense fogs prevail and vessels are liable to come in collision before they are conscious of each other's approach.

In the genuine notes of the State Bank of Ohio, there are as many human figures represented as the bill is worth dollars. If the counterfeiters wish to alter the small bills to large ones, as $1 to $100, they would have to put in ninety-nine human figures—a thing not so easily done.

When boots first came into fashion, a pair was presented to a worthy Mayor in some part of England. He examined them attentively, and concluded they were a new kind of basket. Accordingly, when he went to church next Sunday, he slung one of them round his neck and put his prayer book into it. His wife used the other to bring home her marketing in.

German papers state that Mr. Gunther, the head of the Locomotive Factory at Neustadt, near Vienna, has solved the problem relative to the ascent of trains on inclined planes, and built an engine which will draw, with ease, up an incline of 40 to 50 deg., a train of the weight of 50,000 cwt.

M. de Roulz has made a discovery which concerns the health of the world; a paint, which, applied to the dampest and most saltpetered walls, renders the surface firm and dry.

A facetious old lady, describing the rambling sermons of her minister, said:—"If his text had the small pox, his sermon would never catch it."

There are, in British foreign possessions, about 5,000,000 Christians, 50,000,000 Hindoos, 20,000,000 Mohammedans, and 10,000,000 Buddhists.

Since Father Mathew came to the United States he has administered the temperance pledge to 175,000 persons.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

Sabbath Tracts.

The American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its Depository, No. 9 Spruce-st., N. Y., viz:—

No. 1—Reasons for introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment to the consideration of the Christian Public. 28 pp.
No. 2—Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 52 pp.
No. 3—Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 28 pp.
No. 4—The Sabbath and Lord's Day—A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 52 pp.
No. 5—A Christian Caveat to the Old and New Sabbatarians. 4 pp.
No. 6—Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.
No. 7—Thirty-six Plain Questions, presenting the main points in the Controversy; A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian; Counterfeit Coin. 8 pp.
No. 8—The Sabbath Controversy—The True Issue. 4 pp.
No. 9—The Fourth Commandment—False Exposition. 4 pp.
No. 10—The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed. 16 pp.
No. 11—Religious Liberty Endangered by Legislative Enactments. 16 pp.
No. 12—Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention is invited:—

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pages.

The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.

An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.

Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to George B. Utter, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

SUNDAY RAILWAY TRAINS IN SCOTLAND.

At the half-yearly general meeting of the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railroad Company, held on the 12th of March, a spirited discussion arose upon the subject of Sunday Trains. We copy the report of it given by the North British Mail and Glasgow Daily Advertiser.

Sunday Trains.

The Chairman intimated that the next business was to consider the following motion (notice of which was given at last half-yearly general meeting,) "That a morning and evening train be run on Sundays from each terminus of this railway to the various stations along the line, for the accommodation of such portion of the community as may find it necessary to use these trains, and that the accommodation be effected by attaching 1st, 2d, and 3d class passenger carriages to the Sunday trains now employed in the carriage of letters, parcels, and newspapers, for the Post-office; or that it may be otherwise effected, as the directors may deem expedient."

Mr. M'Clelland said, he saw, by the report, that the directors' opinion on the subject remained unchanged. Was he to understand by this that the English directors agreed to the discontinuance of the Sunday trains?

The Chairman said that some of the members of the board wished the trains run, and some did not; but there was a majority in favor of their discontinuance. At the same time, their opinions remained unchanged.

Mr. Gibson said, that whatever the board did must be by a majority.

Robert Cox, Esq., said—I rise to move "that a morning and evening train be run on Sundays from each terminus of this railway, to the various stations along the line, for the accommodation of such portions of the community as may find it necessary to use these trains; and that the accommodation be effected by attaching first, second, and third class passengers' carriages to the Sunday trains now employed in the carriage of letters, parcels, and newspapers for the post-office; or that it may be otherwise effected, as the directors may deem expedient." The only argument which I mean to employ in support of this motion is, that the public are entitled to demand and receive from us the amount of accommodation which it specifies. I shall confine myself to this point exclusively, because, if the argument can be successfully maintained, as I think it can, without much difficulty, all further discussion of the question upon other grounds will, of course, be unnecessary. The question as to Sunday trains has usually been argued here, and in other railway companies, as if it might, or ought to be, decided on theological grounds. Clergymen and laymen have alike exerted themselves to show what is the will of God in regard to this matter; and, having concluded, to their own satisfaction, that the systematic running of such trains is at variance with the Divine will, they have maintained that, therefore, the demands of other people, who have come to a different conclusion on the subject, should not be complied with. Now, Sir, I respectfully submit, that a meeting of railway proprietors is not a proper field for the fighting of theological battles. As railway proprietors, we are neither called upon nor entitled to decide, what is and what is not according to the will of God in any religious matter whatever. We are here to discuss a civil right, and nothing but a civil right—a right which stands on precisely the same foundation, whether the truth lie in one man's religious views or in another's. All men have equally free access with ourselves to the sources of knowledge of the Divine will. Nobody is the privileged possessor of exclusive means of information on that important subject; and it is not merely the right, but I say it is the duty, of every intelligent human being to study for himself those sources of knowledge of religious truth which are common to all; and it is his right and duty to draw his own conclusions from what he finds there. And not only this, but when he has drawn his conclusions, he is clearly and undeniably entitled to shape his practice in conformity with them, under this sole restriction always, that he shall abstain from violating, by his conduct, the rights of his fellow-men. In a Protestant country like this, it may seem altogether unnecessary to utter a single word in defense of the right of private judgment in religious matters; but I must be allowed to say, that so long as this grand right is acknowledged—only in words, but generally denied in practice—to every man that differs in opinion from ourselves, it will continue to be the duty of the friends of liberty to demand on every fit occasion a real and practical recognition of the principle, that for our religious opinions and practice, while they violate no man's rights, we are responsible to God alone. It is the palpable interest of every one of us—there can be no higher interest—to obtain a knowledge of religious truth; and when a man has done his best to acquire such knowledge, the opinions he adopts are the truth to him; and to whatever extent this truth of his may chance to coincide with that absolute and eternal truth which can be authoritatively pronounced to be such by one supreme tribunal alone—a species of truth which men have always been too prone to confound with the opinions which they merely apprehend to be coincident with it—I say, however much or little of absolute truth may be in a man's religious views, the sincere holder of them is entitled to reduce them to practice, whenever, and wherever, and as much as he pleases, so long as the rights of society are uninvaded; and no man has a right to say to him, what doest thou? But let us see, Sir, what sort of practical recognition this right of private judgment obtains from the party who object to the running of trains on Sunday. "This company," say they, "is bound by a Divine commandment, delivered to the Jews at Mount Sinai, to abstain from carrying passengers systematically on Sundays; therefore, it would be sinful to re-establish the trains which in more sinful times used to carry them; and, therefore, we will not re-establish those trains." This, I think, is the substance of all the arguments employed on that side of the question. But what say the opposite party to this? Why, they tell us that, without in the least calling in question the right of those who hold this opinion to believe as they do, and to act in their own private affairs according to their belief, they must yet take leave to say, that after carefully studying the Fourth Commandment, and the other sources of knowledge of the Divine will, to which both parties alike have access, they, on their side, have come to conclusions in some respects different from those of their opponents. They believe the weekly day of rest to be an institution of inestimable value; but maintain that it is clearly impossible, and would be neither right nor expedient if it were possible, to abstain from every kind of labor on the Sabbath day. To this extent they would be accompanied by most of their opponents; for, with the exception of some few holders of extreme or eccentric views, men of all shades of opinion notoriously perform, or countenance the performance by others, of many kinds of labor on every Sunday in the year. It is rare to meet any one who objects to the performance of a certain amount of work on Sunday by sailors, ferrymen, physicians, surgeons, domestic servants, coachmen, ostlers, dairymen, scavengers, policemen, lamp-lighters, and persons in attendance at gas-works, chemical works, smelting furnaces, and, I might add, malt kilns, were it not that the large, and, I hope, increasing sect of total abstainers, see no need for making malt either on Sunday or on Saturday. In short, all admit that works of necessity and mercy may and ought to be performed on the Sabbath, and I think I am justified in saying farther, that a hearty desire is prevalent among all parties, that labor of this kind should be restricted within the narrowest limits that circumstances will allow, and that it ought, by suitable arrangements, like those adopted in former times upon this railway, when the trains were run, be made to fall as lightly and as seldom as possible upon individuals. But here we reach the critical point where our disputations begin—we come to the question, what is the meaning of that well worn phrase, "works of necessity and mercy?" What works or classes of works does it include and sanction? Who is to determine whether a certain act, which somebody in certain circumstances proposes to do, but which another man tells him he ought not to do, does or does not in reality [illegible] of these privileged classes of works? As the discussion proceeds, it soon appears that there are hundreds of acts concerning which extremely different opinions are entertained by different people in regard to their necessary or beneficial character. In the case we are now discussing, and which is the only one we are concerned with here, one party affirms that neither the systematic running of Sunday trains, nor the using of them when they are run, is a work of necessity or mercy, while another party proclaims its belief that precisely the reverse of this is the truth. Who, then, is to sit in judgment? For my part, I know not any authority on earth that can be competently appealed to; and if this be the case, the only practicable solution of the difficulty is, that each party shall decide for itself, and that neither of them has the shadow of a right to interfere with the decision of the other, or the practice of the other when regulated by that decision. I assert the right of every man to determine freely for himself what he may do upon the Sabbath, consistently with his religious duty; and that if he err in his decision, he is responsible to God alone. Now, it is perfectly well-known, that numerous cases occur in which people find it right and proper to travel on Sunday. No statistics are necessary to prove that; for when our Sunday trains were run, they were actually used to a considerable extent by the public, and at this day the public avail themselves to a considerable extent of the Sunday trains on every Scotch railway which affords the accommodation. In a populous district like ours, there cannot fail to occur, so frequently that non-occurrence is the exception and not the rule, cases where traveling is required for the performance of the duties of benevolence, relationship, and friendship, the duty of preserving health and strength of body or mind, and even the duty of attending the ordinances of Divine worship—for the last of these was the motive which induced many persons resident near the railway, and who either were not within reach of a church, or had not one of their own denomination in the district, to travel regularly to Edinburgh, Glasgow, Falkirk, and other places, in the Sunday trains formerly run upon this line. And, who will deny, that every one of these individuals was entitled to decide for himself whether it was consistent with his duty so to travel? Just consider, for a moment, the endlessness of the controversies as to the extent to which the Fourth Commandment, delivered to the Jews, is binding on Christians—how such controversies have abounded from the days of the Apostles down to our own times, and have elicited the expression of the most diverse opinions from men equally qualified by learning, ability, and integrity, to judge in the matter. In the face of such facts as these, is it not astonishing, that in this so-called enlightened age, and Protestant country, any party of religionists should assume the position of infallible interpreters of the Divine will, whose dicta ought to regulate not merely their own conduct (which no man questions,) but also the conduct of their fellow-mortals, who cannot see with their eyes, or discover the right of any man among them to sit in Moses' seat? Contrast the effects of our present railway arrangements with those of what they were under the former regime. Under that regime, every man was free to follow the dictates of his own conscience in this matter. If he thought he had a good reason for traveling on Sunday, he traveled; if not, he stayed at home. But, in these later times, no such even-handed justice is dealt out to the community; for, although the man who objects to Sunday traveling is still as completely at liberty as ever to remain at home, the man who wishes to travel, must either hire a special train at an expense which it is ten to one he cannot afford, or stay at home against his will. When this company, Sir, obtained its powers and privileges from Parliament, those powers and privileges were given us under the express declaration, that we were to furnish (as the preamble of our Act of Incorporation expresses it) "additional means of communication between Edinburgh and Glasgow, and adjacent places." And, when the railway was opened, the effect, of course, was, that the district through which it passes was immediately stripped of all means within the reach of the great body of the people of traveling on Sunday. We have driven off, not only the two daily mail-coaches between Edinburgh and Glasgow, but the post-horses, and every other available means of traveling. It is evident, then, that we are bound to give the public, at the very least, that moderate degree of accommodation which the present motion asks for, and which, I believe, the public will be satisfied with, and will not, any more than in former times, abuse. I think I am safe in saying, that any man who should travel by the trains on Sunday, while believing that he sinned in doing so, would, in all probability, be at least as sinfully occupied at home if compelled to remain there. But, sinning or not sinning, he alone is accountable for his conduct; and neither we nor our directors, nor any tyrannical "standing committee for Scotland," have the smallest right to prevent him from acting as he does, however much we may be entitled to express our disapprobation of his behavior, and to endeavor, by reasoning and expostulation, to lead him into a better path. Great exaggeration has been indulged in as to the misconduct of persons traveling by Sunday trains. If some few cases have occurred of individuals who were found drinking to excess after such traveling, I really don't see that this would at all prove the bad effects of the Sunday trains. Post hoc ergo propter hoc, is the lamest of all arguments. What reason is there to think that these drunkards would have led a sober life if cooped up in Glasgow or Edinburgh, and that they would not rather have been still more drunken, by means of that additional quantity of spirits which the saving of the railway fares would have enabled them to purchase. (Hear, hear—Oh, oh.) The truth, [illegible] innocent recreation be withheld from the people, they will ever be prone to betake themselves to vicious indulgences—to bad practices, which do not the less exist because they are less within the observation of the virtuous portion of the public than Sunday traveling is. And it is a question which might be advantageously discussed, how much of the drunkenness and profligacy which notoriously prevail to so lamentable an extent in Glasgow and Edinburgh on Sundays, is, in truth, the effect of that peculiar tendency which the Scottish people have to surround their religious observances with repulsive gloom, instead of performing them in that cheerful and thankful spirit which, to me, I confess, appears much more in accordance with the precepts and example of Jesus Christ. (Hear, hear.)

In conclusion, I shall just put a case, which may serve to illustrate the principles I have been maintaining; and, perhaps, be more effectual than any extent of mere argument, in bringing them home to the moral perceptions of the gentlemen opposite. It is proverbially the best way of obtaining a clear view of the rights of our neighbors, to imagine ourselves in their place, and them in our's, and to ask ourselves with what degree of satisfaction we should then accept from them the treatment they are actually receiving from us. This, I say, is the best way of bringing ourselves to the practicing, in addition to the preaching, of the commandment, that we should do to others as we would that they should do to us. Suppose, then, that the stock of this company has been purchased to such an extent by Jewish capitalists, that they have been able to establish a Jewish majority of directors at the Board; which majority, we shall suppose, are not less sincerely attached to their religion, and not less zealous for the honor and glory of God, than the Board we now see before us. And, to complete the parallel, let these Jewish directors be farther supposed to entertain a confident belief that they possess so correct a knowledge of God's will, that other men's opinions must inevitably be erroneous, if different from their own. This, to be sure, is a supposition not very complimentary to the Jews; but, as it is a mere assumption, for the sake of argument, I hope that, if there be any Hebrew gentlemen among my auditors, he will be good enough to pardon the liberty I am taking. (Laughter.) Well, then, what do our Jewish directors proceed to do? Why, the very day of their installment in office, they issue peremptory orders that no trains shall be run upon the seventh day of the week, this being, as they announce, the day appointed by the Divine law to be kept holy by resting from every kind of labor. The new regulation, of course, excites a universal outcry among the Christian members of the community; they are up in arms against so flagrant a violation of their rights; and, at the next meeting of the shareholders, one of them moves that the Saturday trains be resumed, in order that the inhabitants of Edinburgh and Glasgow, and the intermediate districts, and her Majesty's subjects in general, who are all alike interested in the matter, may go about their lawful business as usual. But the conscientious directors are inexorable; they have the efficient support of a large muster of Hebrew shareholders and proxies; and the scruples of every waverer among them are dispelled by the presence of sundry eminent Rabbins, who have taken shares with the view of promoting the honor and glory of God. This compact phalanx is numerically irresistible; but argument, as well as the strength of numbers, is relied on for victory. A learned rabbin proceeds to expound to the meeting what it is that they ought to believe. "Here," says he, "I hold in my hand a copy of the Fourth Commandment, which you yourselves acknowledge to be Divine. What are the words of this Commandment? 'The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God, in it thou shalt not do any work,' and so on. Now, what can possibly be plainer than this—'The seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God?' And, gentlemen, is not Saturday the seventh day, and are we not, therefore, bound by the Commandment to rest from all labor on Saturday? No doubt, you tell us that the original Sabbath day has been abolished, and a new one put in its place; but really, gentlemen, you must pardon us for adhering to our own well-considered and confident belief, that not one title of the Mosaic law has ever been repealed or modified; and we must plainly tell you, moreover, that even on the assumption that the books of the New Testament are an authentic history of alterations of the Mosaic law, we cannot see how this admission would serve your purpose, for we have been told by many among yourselves, and read in the writings of some of your most learned men, that the Christian Scriptures contain no record whatever of the appointment, express or implied, of a new Sabbath-day; and upon looking closely into the matter for our own satisfaction we have found, with surprise, that such is actually the case. Now, gentlemen, if you really do admit the Fourth Commandment to be Divine and of universal application, and if you cannot show that it has been altered by the supreme authority which enacted it, you are bound to observe it to the letter. And any Sabbath, except that which is held on the seventh day, must have quite another foundation than the Fourth Commandment. Your demand is most unreasonable, that we should substitute a festival of human appointment for one which is confessedly Divine. Is it not plain, that the Sabbath which we observe, and not the new Sabbath observed by you, is the one spoken of by our inspired Prophets, when they threaten its profaners with the Divine wrath; and is it not our plain duty, as good citizens, desirous to avert that wrath from the British people, to prevent the desecration of the true Sabbath by others?" (Nonsense.) Such, we may fairly suppose, would be the reasoning of a Jew, holding principles similar to those of the Rev. Mr. Lockerbie or Mr. Blackad- [illegible] such reasoning, I say nothing; it is a point with which we have at present nothing whatever to do; I am willing to assume either that the Jews, or the Rev. Mr. Lockerbie, or the advocates of Sunday trains, are the party who have the good fortune to possess views that are identical with absolute and eternal truth, and I am equally willing to assume that any or all of them are so unfortunate as to mistake error for truth; and having made this liberal admission, I again express the hope, that no gentleman will think it necessary to go through the usual but unpromising labor of endeavoring to impart sound theological views to the meeting. I assume at once that Sir Andrew Agnew was the favored possessor of the truth, and that everybody who rejects his doctrines is in error. But still I ask, what effective answer could Sir Andrew Agnew himself have made to the supposed Jewish argument—what effective answer could be made to it by any man who repudiates the principle that all are entitled to judge for themselves what day is the Sabbath, and what they may lawfully do upon that day? I honestly declare, Sir, that I am unable to imagine a single argument that such a man could employ with the slightest prospect of success. He has thrown away the only weapon with which it was possible to assail the enemy. The question, let me say once more, is not, Shall the Sabbath be observed in Scotland? I know of no man who desires the abolition of the weekly day of rest—an institution so plainly adapted to the bodily, intellectual, and religious wants of human nature, that any attempt to abolish it among us would be a ridiculous failure, even if aided by that round sum of £10,000 which our Sabbath Alliance expected to wield, but which so strangely refused to flow into its treasury. What we oppose, Sir, is not the observance of the Sabbath, but that kind of observance which some call its "better" observance, and others its "bitter," and puritanical, and unchristian observance—a mode of observance which, in the opinion of many earnest friends of religion, is much less calculated to promote respect for so admirable an institution, than to excite the distaste of multitudes towards religion itself, and to drive them into the real Sabbath desecration of vicious indulgences. I cordially respect the zeal and sincerity of every man who demonstrates his sincerity by the accordance of his practice and professions. I admit, to the fullest extent, the right of all who differ from us to argue and expostulate with us from the pulpit, the platform, and the press. But no amount of respect for zeal and sincerity can blind us to the fact, that you are trampling on our rights, and that it is our duty to come forward boldly, on all proper occasions, in their defense. (Cheers and disapprobation.)

Mr. Cox was followed by Mr. Paton, who "regarded the railway as a public road, and thought it would have been just as fair and reasonable to have stopped the mail coaches of former days as now to shut up the railway on Sunday." Col. Dundas, Rev. Dr. Lorimer, Mr. Meiklem, and Rev. Mr. Chalmers, each made remarks in opposition to the motion. The concluding speech, by Mr. George Combe, was in favor of the motion. The Chairman then put an amendment presented by Col. Dundas, that the original motion be rejected, and the matter left entirely in the hands of the Board of Directors. The amendment prevailed, but Mr. Cox gave notice that he should renew his motion at the next half-yearly meeting.

REPORT

RELATIVE TO

THE OBSERVANCE OF THE SABBATH,

MADE TO THE Pennsylvania House of Representatves.

MR. MEEK, CHAIRMAN.

The Committee to whom was referred the Bill from the Senate, exempting the Seventh-day Baptists from the operation of the Sabbath Laws of this Commonwealth, have instructed their Chairman to make the following report:—

The memorialists ask that a law may be enacted to exempt them from the provisions of the first section of an act, entitled "An Act for the Prevention of Vice and Immorality," &c., passed 22d April, 1794, which section provides, that "if any person shall do or perform any worldly employment or business whatsoever, on the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday, works of necessity and charity only excepted," &c., "every such person so offending shall for every such offense, forfeit and pay four dollars," &c., &c.

In accordance with the prayer of your petitioners, the Senate has passed a bill, entitled "A Supplement to an Act," &c., which provides that nothing contained in the first section of the act to which it is a supplement, so far as the same relates to the performance of worldly employment or business on the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday, shall be construed to extend to any person or persons who conscientiously observe the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath, and are guilty of no disturbance of the religious worship of others, &c.

This Bill, thus brought before us, your Committee think, after the most mature reflection, should not receive the concurrence of the House.

The memorialists set forth, that they regard the seventh day of the week as the divinely-appointed Sabbath, and cannot conscientiously regard as the Sabbath the first day of the week. They ask, or rather claim, exemption from the operation of the statute now in force, as a right secured to them by the great constitutional provision of this Republic, securing to all its citizens liberty of conscience.

To this appeal no true republican can be insensible. We hold liberty of conscience to be one of our most valuable rights. Nor can we conceive of any thing more impolitic than for a government to array itself against the consciences of the governed. But it occurs to the Committee, that the plea of liberty of conscience may be urged for the enactment or repeal of laws inseparably connected with the public welfare. We ask, whether the very nature of government does not require, that in some contingencies this liberty should be subject to restrictions? [illegible]ment, it must be the condition of some—often a large minority—to submit to laws to which they are sincerely and strongly opposed, and which they could not conscientiously enact and support if they were in power. But if no law can be enacted and enforced against which a minority may conscientiously protest, there can be no government. One class may object to one law, and another class to another law, until all great public interests are abandoned to utter insecurity.

We admit, that cases may happen in which the law objected to is not to be regarded as conflicting merely with the settled convictions of the objectors, as to what is most conducive to the welfare of the community, considered in a moral, or in a pecuniary point of view; but as directly contravening a clearly revealed law of God, and placing them under the necessity of practically determining whether they will obey God, in violation of the laws of man, or those of man, in violation of the law of God. Hence the question arises, whether cases may not occur in which the interests of the whole community absolutely require legislation upon certain interests in despite of the conscientious scruples of a part.

It may not be necessary to elaborate this point farther than to say, that a very respectable and useful portion of the American community are so opposed to war, under any conditions, that they cannot, without a violation of their consciences, carry arms, or voluntarily bear any of the burdens of war. To either of these acts they prefer fines or imprisonment, or any penalty which government may impose. The law relieves them, with some other classes of citizens not entertaining the same scruples, from the necessity of carrying arms, but still requires them, against their consciences, to contribute to that which has been, not inappropriately, denominated "the sinews of war."

There are some in our own country, who believe that ours is not a Christian government, because it makes no public provision for the maintenance of religion. They hold that religion should be not only protected, but supported by the State, and because our government is delinquent in this respect, their consciences will not even allow them to vote at our elections, or in any way give implied sanction to our national Constitution. To such consciences, it must be admitted, our law-givers can afford no relief. The case is one in which the parties must inevitably endure the inconvenience of having formed conscientious convictions which conflict with the conscience of the mass and the fundamental principles of our social organization.

The consciences of some American citizens have compelled them to go within the bounds of the slaveholding States, for the purpose of inducing and aiding the escape of slaves from their owners. But we think that the success of an application on their part for exemption from the legal penalties incurred by conforming their conduct to their consciences in this respect, would be more than doubtful. The consciences of others require them to interfere with the execution of existing laws respecting the recovery of fugitive slaves. Any one acquainted with the history of this country, cannot be unapprized of the fact, that to conform entirely the laws of the land to the consciences of all its subjects at the present time, would require the dissolution of the union of these States.

Should the gold mines or placers of California, attract to that country a party of Pagans from Asia, whose system of religion requires the offering of human beings in sacrifice, is it conceivable that an American legislator or jurist would so construe the declarations, that "all men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their consciences," and "that no human authority can in any case whatever control or interfere with the rights of conscience," as to make them extend their protection to the horrid rites of this bloody superstition?

The intention of these illustrations is not to attach odium to the memorialists, by placing them in comparison with heathens or those whom they may deem fanatics, but merely to show that there may be instances in which the most liberal and equitable government must of necessity come into conflict with the religious convictions of some of its subjects.

Whether the learned jurists who constitute the highest judicial tribunal of the Commonwealth, and who are stigmatized in pamphlets circulated through the House by the memorialists, as "religious zealots," erred, when, to the regret of the memorialists, they decided that the act of 1794, comes within the spirit and meaning of the foregoing constitutional provision, will depend upon whether the rights and privileges of the community at large would or would not, by a contrary decision, be sacrificed for the benefit of a few.

Can the bill devised by the memorialists, and passed by the Senate, become a law with safety to the rights and interests of the public? Will not the injury done to the many be incalculably greater than the benefit resulting to the few?

The enforcement of the observance of the Sabbath so far as abstinence from secular employments is concerned, by civil statute, is not the result of bigotry or superstition, but results from a profound conviction of its importance to the public welfare. The Sabbath is believed to be of immense value as an occasion of rest from bodily and mental toil, and as furnishing opportunity for religious reading—for private, and for social and public worship, and for the training of children. It is the only opportunity which many laboring men have of being with their families, and instructing and otherwise influencing those for whose character and conduct the Providence of God and the law of the land hold them responsible. It is the time set apart specially for the cultivation of the moral dispositions [illegible] the community, which is believed to be not [illegible] intellect.

To secure these advantages some one day must be agreed upon by the whole community. It is not meant that the selection of the day is left to human expediency, but as different opinions are entertained respecting the day divinely consecrated, this question must be settled for practical purposes. The multiplication of weekly Sabbaths, it is believed, would to a great extent, if not wholly, defeat the design of the institution.

The memorialists claim that the seventh day of the week is the day indicated by divine authority. It is not necessary to discuss here the grounds of this belief. We presume that the arguments which they have presented to the Legislature upon the point, in their tracts and pamphlets, are not designed to make converts, but merely to show that this peculiarity of their faith is not to be attributed to capriciousness, or obstinacy, or incorrigible ignorance, but can be recommended by at least plausible reasoning. It is sufficient for us, that the first day of the week is generally believed to be the true Sabbath. It is the Sabbath of the United States of America. It is the Sabbath of Christendom.

The pursuance of secular business on the Lord's Day, is believed by the committee to inflict great social injustice. Suppose it to be done by farmers, or others, of this persuasion, the effect may be that they will gain real or apparent advantages in the market, and others will be compelled, or will think themselves compelled, to pursue the same course in order to a successful competition. The injury will be greatly augmented, when the principal in business has many hands in his employ. They are denied the periodical rest to which they are entitled; or, if for the convenience of business another day is substituted for the Lord's Day, it cannot supply the religious privileges called for by their moral and spiritual wants. To secure these privileges, as to preserve untainted their consciences, American citizens have been obliged, under circumstances of great hardship, to turn away from employments for which they were specially fitted by their talents and education. It is believed that the Sabbath desecration, which is allowed by the laws of this State, regulating her public works, compels thousands of her best men to relinquish their birth-right or the employment upon which they depend for subsistence.

Hence the necessity of civil legislation respecting the Sabbath. It is necessary to protect the community, the laboring portion especially, in the possession and enjoyment of invaluable rights and privileges, civil and religious, which have descended to them from the Author of their being, and also from the founders of the Republic and of the Commonwealth.

The memorialists object that the laws of which they complain are unconstitutional, because of the nature of an ecclesiastical law, as it assumes to decide what is divine law, and to enforce it as such.

The Committee have no hesitancy in conceding or affirming, that it is not the province of the Legislature to ascertain what are the laws of God, or to re-enact and enforce them by civil penalties when ascertained by others. Nor is this even chargeable upon those by whom the obnoxious Sabbath laws were ordained. The true ground of civil legislation is the agreement or disagreement of measures with the order and interest of society. That legislation proceeding upon this ground should result in a coincidence between divine and human laws, is neither strange nor alarming. It is inevitable. Nor can it be supposed that Christian law-givers will be wholly uninfluenced by the consideration that the modes of action upon which they are required to deliberate, are enjoined or prohibited by the law of God. But it is one thing to make a pre-existent divine law the ground of civil legislation, and another thing to make the fact that God has ordained or prohibited an act, the source or one of the sources of our convictions in reference to its social tendencies. And if to prohibit acts which the divine law has prohibited, be necessarily to pass ecclesiastical laws, and consequently to violate the Constitution of the State and of the United States, then constitutions are violated by the laws prohibiting murder, theft, and polygamy.

The memorialists do not appear to the Committee to be entirely consistent with themselves. They object to Sabbath laws as unconstitutional, because examples of legislating upon religious subjects, and because they determine "when a man shall work and when he shall rest," and yet they profess to approve of "a simple enactment prohibiting all unnecessary labor on Sunday, except in the case of those who keep the seventh day as the Sabbath;" so that they have no objections to ecclesiastical laws, providing that their preferences are consulted by said laws.

The authors of our Sabbath laws are not chargeable with having determined that the first day of the week is the Sabbath, and thus settled by legislative authority a theological question. This point was settled anterior to any legislation upon the subject. They merely ordained that the people should be protected in the enjoyment of the privileges with which the Sabbath is fraught, assuming the theological question to be settled by the only competent authority—the religious convictions of the people.

The Committee would respectfully suggest, that the recognition of some day as the Sabbath by the public authorities is of absolute necessity, as otherwise the public conscience might be broken down, and millions of American citizens virtually deprived of the rights of suffrage, by the appointment of public elections to be held in sabbatic time. Nor can the public recognition of the first day of the week as the Sabbath be regarded as a sectarian measure, inasmuch as there are few articles of belief more Catholic among American Christians, and citizens generally, than that by which this day is consecrated.

The Committee sympathize with the memorialists in their difficulties, and would gladly concur in some feasible plan of relief, but they are not convinced of the expediency of the bill offered for their concurrence. It appears to involve the principle that Sabbath days may be multiplied in the eye of the law, and that each and all of them may be legally subject to such violence as frustrate their designs. It appears to us to be a virtual nullification of our Sabbath laws. We fear that in passing, through sympathy with the few, we should be doing injustice to the multitude. Besides, the law proposed to be superseded does no violation to the consciences of the memorialists [illegible] not require them to desecrate their Sabbath, but merely to pay some respect to the consciences and rights of the great body of American citizens. Nor can we overlook the fact, that we are asked to protect them from the penal consequences of violating a law by making them exceptions to its obligations.

Your Committee, therefore, report the bill referred to them, with a negative commendation.

The Committee offer the following resolution:—

Resolved, That hereafter the whole amount of the several forfeitures in money accruing and becoming due, under the provisions of the act of 22d April, 1794, entitled "An Act for the prevention of vice and immorality, and of unlawful gaming, and to restrain disorderly sports and dissipation," shall be paid to the overseers of the poor of the city, borough, or township, wherein the offence shall be committed, for the use of the poor thereof; and that so much of the twelfth section of said act as gives one moiety of said forfeitures to the person or persons prosecuting for the same, is hereby repealed: Provided, That all other provisions of the said act shall remain in full force and effect.

GOING TO VIRGINIA.—The "Old Dominion" is in prospect of a worse irruption of Yankees than that endured by the Dutch in New York. The Syracuse Star reports that a number of the best farmers in Onondaga are contemplating a removal, and have a deputation exploring the lands. The non-working whites and the slavery-worn blacks will have to decamp before the onward march of Anglo-Saxon civilization. A Washington correspondent of the Evening Post says:—

"The northern people are making the most alarming aggressions upon the South in Fairfax county, over here in Virginia, by buying up the miserable worn-out farms, and turning the desolate 'old field' of the district into green meadows and grain-bearing fields. I am informed that during this very season more than ten thousand acres have been purchased, to be divided into small farms, by northern immigrants, principally from New York. This is a fearful omen for the South. Already this irruption of free soilers has reclaimed half the country, and furnished a population nearly equal to the number of the aboriginal inhabitants."

CHARITABLE BEQUESTS.—The Boston Traveler says, that the late Benjamin H. Punchard, Esq. of Andover, after bequeathing more than $100,000 toh is widow and relatives, made the following bequests of a charitable nature:—For establishing a Free School in Andover South Parish, $50,000; and a reversion, in addition, of $20,000. To the Episcopal Church in Andover, $70,000. To the Foreign and Domestic Missionary Societies of the Episcopal Church, each, $1-000. The said Missionary Societies, and three other charitable societies, are the Residuary Legatees. There is also provision made for the establishment of another charitable institution, in case of a certain contingency.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, April 25, 1850.

ENFORCING RELIGION BY LAW.

In our paper to-day will be found a "Report relative to the Observance of the Sabbath," made to the House of Representatives of the Pennsylvania Legislature, a few weeks since. We have given this Report a careful perusal; and we must say, that the attempt which it makes to show, that the statute making it a penal offense to perform worldly business on the first day of the week is in perfect consistency with the great constitutional provision of this Republic securing to all citizens liberty of conscience, and that it "does no violation to the consciences of the memorialists," is an entire failure. Some of the reasons which have led us to this conclusion, we shall endeavor to set forth.

The Report, after admitting "liberty of conscience to be one of our most valuable rights," and that nothing can be "more impolitic than for a government to array itself against the consciences of the governed," proceeds to argue, that "the plea of liberty of conscience may be urged for the enactment or repeal of laws inseparably connected with the public welfare;" and submits, "whether the very nature of government does not require, that in some contingencies, this liberty should be subject to restrictions." The Report farther maintains, that "if no law can be enacted and enforced against which a minority may conscientiously protest, there can be no government. One class may object to one law, and another class to another law, until all great public interests are abandoned to utter insecurity."

This reasoning will appear to many minds, no doubt, to be quite sound and conclusive. But we respectfully suggest, that conscience has two distinct provinces. In the one it operates to direct us in our duties to God; in the other, to guide us in our duties to our fellow creatures. The method of reasoning employed in the Report strangely overlooks this distinction. Our Seventh-day Baptist Brethren in Pennsylvania had asked to be exempted from the operation of the statute making it penal to perform common labor on Sunday, as a right secured to them by the Constitution, which guaranties to all liberty of conscience. It was, evidently, in reference to the first province of conscience that this petition was made. How came the Report to overlook this, and to answer it by a kind of reasoning which is applicable only to the second? There was no excuse for such oversight, especially as the memorialists make such an emphatic reference to the Constitution, where the terms "conscience" is used in reference to its religious office only. The memorialists may possibly have expressed themselves in language somewhat accuracy. It would have been better, perhaps, had they been more explicit in defining the limits within which conscience ought to be sacred from the coercion of law. But there was no real occasion for misunderstanding them. They asked only for such protection to conscience as the Constitution itself gave them. They asked—or intended to ask, however faulty may have been their language in regard to precision—to be exempt from the operation of the statute complained of, not merely because "they could not conscientiously enact and support such a law if they were themselves in power," but because they regarded the statute as an outrage upon EQUAL RIGHTS.

We shall here undertake to present what we believe to be sound doctrine in regard to the proper province of civil government. It is the doctrine which Seventh-day Baptists generally hold, and the only doctrine which is in perfect accordance with the Constitution of our great Republic. It is this: That government is instituted for the purpose of securing to the governed the enjoyment of those "natural and inalienable rights" with which the Creator has endowed them, "among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness;" and that, in regard to these rights, all the governed stand upon EQUAL footing. Hence, in enacting its laws, government should confine itself strictly to the relations which men sustain towards one another, and not attempt to interfere with the relation in which men stand to their Creator. It may indeed "prohibit acts which the divine law has prohibited," without necessarily "passing ecclesiastical laws and consequently violating the Constitutions of the State and of the United States," as in the cases of "murder, theft, and polygamy." Hence we can readily admit what the Report maintains, that "legislation resulting in a coincidence between divine and human laws, is neither strange nor alarming." But let it be remembered, that divine law embraces two distinct relations, and of course two distinct classes of duties, viz., those which are due directly to God himself, and those which concern the welfare of our fellow creatures. With the latter of these only is civil government concerned. To make our idea perfectly clear, take a few examples.

God says, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." But if I choose to break this law, what right has government to interfere? My acknowledgment of another god does not prevent my neighbor from worshiping the true God, if he pleases to do so. I worship Jupiter or Confucius, as the case may be; but I do not hinder my neighbor, thereby, from worshiping Jehovah. While we both pursue opposite courses, our mutual rights remain equal and unviolated. Again, God says, "Thou shalt not bow down to graven images." But if I choose to break this law, and bow to an image, two, three, or four times a day, what right has government to forbid? Does my adoration of an image compel any one else to do so? Does it hinder my neighbor from dispensing with images, and from offering his worship in the form prescribed by the commandment? Certainly not. His rights are unviolated. I have not deprived him of a single one which he held before. Again, we are prohibited by the Divine law from using profane, blasphemous language. But if I choose to be so wicked and Heaven-daring as to violate this law, why should government take the matter up, and coerce my obedience by fines and penalties? My profanity compels no one else to be profane. It does not hinder my neighbor from cherishing the most devout reverence for the name of the Lord. He may be as reverential as he pleases, and my wickedness, great as it is in the sight of God, does not rob him of a single right which he before possessed. Here, then, is a class of duties lying entirely without the sphere of civil government. They belong to a relation with which the kingdoms of this world have nothing to do. Ever since the abrogation of the Jewish Economy, God has withholden from the governments of the earth the right to punish breaches of the first table of the Decalogue. He will punish them himself, in his own way, and in his own time.

But, on the other hand, there is a class of duties, no one of which can be violated without manifest injury to somebody else besides the perpetrator of the wrong. It is forbidden, for example, that I should steal. But suppose I violate this precept—what then? Evidently, I do wrong to my neighbor. I deprive him of a right which he before possessed. He has as good a right to his property as I have to mine. If government does not interfere to protect him in the enjoyment of his property, it does not uphold equal rights. It is, therefore, a clear case in which government ought to interfere. Again, it is forbidden to commit murder. If I violate this precept, I deprive my neighbor of his right to life—a right which he holds by a tenure as valid as that by which I hold my own. It is, therefore, the duty of government to forbid this crime by its most stringent penalties. Again, the divine law prohibits man-stealing. If I set at nought this law, I take away from my fellow man a right which he possesses in common with me, viz., his right to himself, his right to freedom. Hence this is a case in which the interference of the civil power is called for. So, too, if I slander a man, if I injure him in his character, and thus break that law of God which says, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor," it we live should interfere to protect him by punishing me; for he has a right to his reputation, of which I have no business to deprive him. Now it is manifest, that in these cases, and in multitudes of others which might be mentioned, the rights of men are equal, and in not one such case can a transgression be committed without robbing some one of a right which he before possessed.

Thus have we clearly defined the limits, within which civil government may rightfully exercise its power. Two distinct classes of duties have we presented, one of which admits of governmental legislation, the other forbids it. To which of these classes does the Sabbath belong? That man must be worse than blind, who says that it belongs any where else but to the first. Does my Sabbath-breaking deprive any one else of his right to keep the Sabbath? If I choose to work on the Sabbath day, does that hinder my neighbor from going to church? If I choose to keep the Sabbath on the seventh day of the week, does that hinder my neighbor from keeping it on the first? If I open my store, does that compel my neighbor to come in and buy? If I choose to harvest my grain, or to chop my wood, do I thereby hinder my neighbor from spending the day in prayer? Nothing can be plainer, than that my Sabbath-breaking leaves all the rights of my neighbor untouched. Whatever wickedness I am guilty of, is against God, but not against him. Therefore it is a case in which civil government has no right to interfere; and the very moment that government undertakes to legislate on this subject, it steps beyond its province.

But it is objected, that by pursuing our business on the Sabbath-day we compel the persons in our employ to violate its sacredness. If the persons in our employ were slaves, having no power to resist our will, the objection would have some pertinency. But, under ordinary circumstances, the objection is puerile. Every man who enters into a contract to perform labor for another, has it in his own power to stipulate whether he will work on the Sabbath-day or not. If he agrees to work, he does it voluntarily, and stands on the same footing with his employer. He is not compelled.

"But he will lose his situation, if he does not work." Very well; the rule operates both ways, as every good rule should. The employer also loses his servant; and it is a reasonable presumption, that one suffers about as much loss as the other. It is for the pecuniary interest of the employer that he wishes to have the work done; and if the Sabbath-keeping consciences of those whom he would employ prevent him from getting it done, he is quite as much the sufferer as they. If to this it is replied, that "he is not the sufferer, because he can immediately enlist in his service others who have no conscience about the Sabbath;" we rejoin, that men discharged from service for conscience sake can also immediately find employment with those who will not require them to work on the Sabbath. And the very fact that they were discharged for conscience sake, becomes such a recommendation in their favor, that they are not likely to be idle a single day. This whole talk, therefore, about the Sabbath-breaker compelling those to labor who are in his employ, and robbing them of the rest to which they are entitled, is idle as the wind. No man, except a slave, is compelled to work for another. As long as his service is voluntary, it is his own fault if it becomes a Sabbath-breaking service.

We have said, that government goes beyond its rightful province, when it attempts to legislate upon those duties which we owe directly to our Maker. Our Pennsylvania brethren mean the same thing, when, in their petition to the Legislature, they contend that the Statute, from whose operation they pray to be exempted, interferes with the sacredness of conscience. But the Report which we have under review, attempts to offset this with an illustration which, notwithstanding the earnestness with which it is disclaimed that there is "any intention to attach odium to the memorialists by placing them in comparison with heathens or those whom they may deem fanatics," strikes us as singularly calculated to mislead.

"Should the gold mines, or placers of California, attract to that country a party of Pagans from Asia, whose system of religion requires the offering of human beings in sacrifice, is it conceivable that an American legislator or jurist would so construe the declarations, that 'all men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their consciences,' and 'that no human authority can in any case whatever control or interfere with the rights of conscience,' as to make them extend their protection to the horrid rites of this bloody superstition?"

Now, what sophistry this is! What an adroit substitution of something entirely foreign to the subject, in order to render complex a question which is perfectly simple! The simple question upon which this whole controversy turns is this: Ought government to render penal the performance of those acts which deprive no one of his natural rights? We say, No. But instead of meeting this question in its simple form, the Report jesuitically slips in another, about which there is no dispute. For who has disputed that government ought to prohibit the taking away of human life? The system of religion which the Pagans of Asia are here supposed to practice, not only embraces the acknowledgment of false gods, and, it may be, the worship of images—acts which interfere with nobody's rights; but also the taking away of human life—an act which does rob others of their rights. They are conscientious in offering human sacrifices, it may be, but their conscience, instead of operating only in that province where government has no right to intrude, operates in the province where our relations to one another fall.

The Report under consideration has much to say about "the rights and privileges of the community at large," "the injury done to the many, incalculably greater than the benefit resulting to the few," "sympathy with the few," and "doing injustice to the multitude," &c. But we beg leave to say, that the principle involved is one which does not depend upon the decision of majorities. Constitutions are made to secure the rights of minorities—to protect the few against the encroachments and dominations of the many; and we, as Seventh-day Baptists, plant ourselves upon the broad basis of our country's Constitution, maintaining that, though few in numbers, our rights are pledged to us in that glorious instrument, and that the Sunday statute is a violent wresting of them from us. If religious liberty consists only in practicing according to the faith of the majority, there is as much of it in the dominions of the Russian autocrat as there is in our own land. Religious liberty consists in the power to put in practice just what our republican Constitution guaranties to us, and that, too, whether it pleases the consciences of the majority or not. The assertion of the Report, that "the law proposed to be superseded does no violation to the consciences of the memorialists; it does not require them to desecrate the Sabbath, but merely to pay some respect to the consciences and rights of the great body of the American citizens"—is an insult to common sense. It does "require them to desecrate their Sabbath," under the penalty of incurring the loss of one-sixth part of their labors. It does "violate their consciences," by compelling them to uphold a system of faith which they can look upon in no other light than as making void a divine law. Yes, it robs them of one-sixth part of their earnings, by withholding from them the secular use of the first day of the week, which, were it allowed, would enable them, in some small degree, to make up their loss; and this loss, or four dollars fine, must be rendered as a constant tribute to the faith of the multitude. Yet there is no violence done to the consciences of the memorialists! no injustice! no inequality!

We would have government so framed as to afford equal protection to Jew and Christian, Pagan and Mahometan. And we believe that such was the design of the founders of our Republic. Notwithstanding it has become the stereotyped language of the pulpit and the press, and even of judicial decisions, that ours is a Christian government, we repudiate it, as language which is but little more than vain jargon. It is language which ought never to come from the mouth of a logician. What though the great mass of our people were infidels—what though every man in Congress were an infidel, and every man in the employ of the government, from the President down to the driver of a mail coach—would that necessarily make our government an infidel government? There is just about as much sense in such jargon, as there would be in calling the Empire of Hayti a black government, the Kingdom of Great Britain a white government, or a government of which all the citizens were North American Indians a red government. The truth is, that the righteousness of the citizens cannot be imputed to the government, any more than their complexion. Our political forefathers had no design to institute a Christian government, nor an Infidel government, nor a Mahometan government. Their design was simply to institnte a federative compact, an associative machinery, which should secure equal rights to all; and the government which does this in the most effectual manner, is the most Christian—the most righteous—the most free from sin.

There is one point upon which the Report gives our brethren rather a home-thrust:—

"The memorialists do not appear to the Committee to be entirely consistent with themselves. They object to Sabbath laws as unconstitutional, because they are examples of legislating upon religious subjects, and because they determine 'when a man shall work and when he shall rest,' and yet they profess to approve of 'a simple enactment prohibiting all unnecessary labor on Sunday, except in the case of those who keep the seventh day as the Sabbath;' so that they have no objections to ecclesiastical laws providing that their preferences are consulted by said laws."

We cannot undertake to justify our Pennsylvania brethren from this charge. In our opinion, they erred greatly in not demanding the entire repeal of the obnoxious Sabbath laws. The only consistent ground for us to take, is, that all laws which enforce a Sabbath are violations of the Constitution. On this ground we ought to plant ourselves, and never cease our efforts till such obnoxious enactments are blotted from the statute-book.

EXTRACTS FROM A CALIFORNIA LETTER.

SACRAMENTO CITY, Jan. 31st, 1850.

* * * There is no doubt that the gold here will prove very abundant. The river known as Trinity proves to be a branch only, and the other branches abound with the precious metal. Of this river but little has been known. A vessel is about to start for the Trinity Bay, into which it empties, with stores and armament to build a fort, and so open the river to the [illegible] I have conversed with a man who visited the true Trinity river, and he had so great success that he will return as soon as the roads are open. It rises among the mountains, with the Sacramento, and flows west. The access to it has been over the mountains, difficult and dangerous; but, to a true Californian, nothing is difficult or dangerous but a "grizzly," and with him familiarity breeds fear.

There seems to be a great delusion at home about California, if I am to judge by the papers. I was deceived in some respects. The climate and beauty of the country were misrepresented—(of this I have spoken in a previous letter)—but of the resources of this country in gold, I assure you that the half has not been told. There will be more gold dug this coming season, than all that has been dug before. The few who have come down from the mines bring the most glowing accounts. The crowds are spreading to the sources of the streams, and marking off their ground for operations when the season opens, leaving the old grounds, where men will go now and work over the soil that has been worked before, and do as well as the first operator. Another reason why more gold will be obtained, is because more persons understand the mining operations better. They know what is wanted, and make their arrangements accordingly.

I am not surprised that so many were disgusted and went home. The green ones are fleeced on landing, to begin with. They are persuaded that all they have is not worth the cost of landing, and are thus induced to sell. The knowing ones sell at enormous profits. The adventurer is left destitute, to go to the mines, where he is told he can make his "pile." He hears the most conflicting statements about different mines, and, after being fleeced all the way, he gets to a place where he has been told that men have dug the coveted stuff by the pound. He works half a day at a business he knows nothing about, and finds but a few grains in each pan-full, then tries somewhere else, and so spends half his time in "prospecting." He gives it up in disgust, and is ready to go home; and if he has the means he will do it; if not, he will sit down and curse the country and the gold mines.

The overland men came in destitute, in the midst of the sickly season, too late to secure winter quarters, and have suffered much from sickness and exposure—the most of them living in tents all winter. These will be ready to operate in the spring to advantage. They are the men for it, and, with a long season before them, will gather large sums, some more and some less. Shrewd operators here will make money out of the moneyed men at home, who are so bold as to venture on the fickle, inflated trade. Auction sales will be heavy, and percentages large—everything will go with a rush. * *

I will transcribe a letter received a few days since by S. B. Mulford, of Montrose, Pa., a graduate of Yale College, who is staying with us. It is from a young man with a fortune at home enough to keep him all his life in the indolence he has lived.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 7th.

DEAR SIR,—I heard that you were in Sacramento City, through Mr. C. of Honesdale. I have been in San Francisco about three weeks. I have been to the mines, was sick, made nothing, and returned. I cannot find any employment here, and wish myself out of this God-forsaken country. My object in writing to you is, to inquire what chance there is for employment in Sacramento. I don't know but I may come up there. It riddles a fellow's money out fast to live here without doing any thing. There are four times as many people as can be employed, and more than ought to be in any one place. You being a business man, I did not know but you could give me some information about a chance for business in Sacramento.

As ever, yours, —— ——.

Such cases are plenty here. They are of no account, except when they become a public charge. The country will soon be clear of them, and a better class will take their place. It is a hard trial for any man to be put ashore in a strange, new land, where no one knows him or cares for him, and without money, to shape his own destiny. He sees a multitude around him very busy, and all hurry-skurry, like May-day, only worse; and though any one of them could tell him where and how to make a fortune, they will make use of him as far as they can—fleece him, and let him go. He hears about great sums of money made, but does not see how it is done. He sleeps in a tent on the ground, and fries his meat on the coals.

"The pilot-bread is in his mouth,
The gold dust in his eye."

He thinks of something at home, and, if he is not good pluck, ten chances to one if he don't feel bad, and go home if he can. I am not giving my own experience, but such is often the condition in which the the adventurer finds himself.

"GERRIT SMITH'S CONSTITUTIONAL ARGUMENT."

Such is the title of a thirty-page pamphlet lying on our table. From it we learn, that in February last, petitions were presented to the Senate and Assembly of the State of New York, asking those "Honorable Bodies to give Gerrit Smith a public hearing on the question whether slavery has any legal existence under the Federal Constitution?" The request was granted—Mr. Smith spoke in the Capitol on the 11th and 12th of March, 1850—and here we have the substance of his speech. The first question discussed is, whether there was any legal slavery in this country at the time the Constitution was adopted? Mr. Smith replies in the negative, and establishes his position by showing that the right of property in man was not recognized in England when the Colonial Charters were given, and could not, therefore, have been guarantied by those instruments. He then takes up the Declaration of Independence, and develops the inconsistency of supposing that a document which declares that all men are created equal, and endowed with the inalienable right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, can be made to sanction the existence of slavery. The various articles of the Constitution which are commonly interpreted in favor of slavery, are then brought under review, and from an examination of them it is made manifest, that they are susceptible of quite a different interpretation, and one altogether more consistent with the design for which the Constitution was formed, "to secure the blessings of liberty." In conclusion, Mr. Smith enumerates some of the provisions of the Constitution which he regards as incompatible with slavery—such as, that "Congress has power to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States;" that "the United States shall guaranty to every State in this Union a republican form of government;" that "no State shall pass any bill of attainder;" that "the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when, in cases of rebellion and invasion, the public safety may require it;" that "the free exercise of religion shall be guarantied;" that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law;" that "the right of the people to be secure, in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated," &c.

We have read this report of Mr. Smith's speech with much interest and satisfaction. The argument is clearly stated and well sustained. Many of those who listened to it, we are quite sure, must have been convinced, that the Federal Constitution, when fairly interpreted, is far enough from being a pro-slavery document, and that a faithful execution of all its provisions would endanger that accursed system which it is so often quoted to uphold.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT.—The entire sum of money raised by the churches of Great Britain for missionary purposes, is about $1,750,000; by those of America, $750,000; making together, $2,500,000; and yet this sum scarcely equals the annual gifts at Kalee's temple, Calcutta.

REV. J. W. MORTON, who was recently dismissed from the service of the Reformed Presbyterians, as a missionary to Hayti, in consequence of embracing the Sabbath of the Bible, has accepted an appointment to the Professorship of Languages and Mental and Moral Science in De Ruyter Institute, Madison Co., N. Y.

General Intelligence.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. SECOND-DAY, April 15.

After the presentation of numerous petitions, and the transaction of considerable morning business, the Senate resumed the consideration of the Deficiency of the Appropriation Bill. An amendment proposing to strike out the appropriation for new wings of the Patent Office, was rejected. Several amendments were adopted, including one for a considerable increase of clerks in the Post Office Department. The Senate adjourned without having concluded action on the bill.

House of Representatives.

The Speaker announced the death of the Clerk of the House; and after remarks upon the subject by two or three individuals, the usual resolutions were passed, and the House adjourned.

In Senate. THIRD-DAY, April 16.

The bill to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for 1850 was amended in several particulars and passed. A motion to strike out the appropriation for the outfit of a Charge to Austria was lost—17 to 28.

After some unimportant conversation, it was agreed that Mr. Foote's motion for a Select Committee of Thirteen should be the special order for to-morrow; and then the Senate went into Executive Session.

House of Representatives.

The whole day was spent in an ineffectual effort to select a Clerk. Judge Young, of Illinois, was the principal democratic candidate, and Mr. Prindle, of New York, the principal whig.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, April 17.

After the transaction of morning business, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Mr. Foote's motion to refer Mr. Bell's resolution to a Committee of Thirteen. Several amendments were proposed, with a view to prevent the Committee's taking into consideration the question of slavery in the States, the internal slave-trade, slavery in the District of Columbia, and in the dock-yards, navy-yards, and arsenals of the United States. At length Mr. Benton moved, as a test vote, that the pending business be laid upon the table, with a view of taking up the bill for the admission of California. The vote being taken, 24 were for it, and 28 against it—Col. Benton alone from the Southern States voting against the embryo Compromise, while Messrs. Cass of Mich., Dickinson of N. Y., Sturgeon of Pa., and Bright and Whitcomb of Ind. voted for it. The question was then farther discussed by Messrs. Benton, Clay, Douglass, Hale, and Foote.

While this discussion was going on, a very exciting scene occurred in the Senate. It seems that Mr. Foote was indulging in some very bitter remarks against Col. Benton, when the latter left his seat and walked toward the Mississippi Senator, who deliberately drew from his breast a loaded pistol and cocked it. Several Senators then interfered to prevent a meeting. The pistol was finally taken from Mr. Foote and locked up in the desk of a member. Amid much excitement a motion was put and carried to appoint a Committee of seven to investigate the subject, and the Senate adjourned.

House of Representatives.

The House succeeded in electing a Clerk—Hon. Richard M. Young, of Indiana. Nothing else was done.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, April 18.

The Committee to investigate the conflict between Messrs. Bonton and Foote was appointed, viz. Messrs. Webster, King, Phelps, Rusk, Bell, and Shields.

Mr. Benton moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the California bill. Mr. Clay moved to lay the motion on the table, which was agreed to—yeas 27, nays 24.

The unfinished business of yesterday (relating to the Compromise Committee) was taken up. Mr. Benton's amendment, instructing the Committee not to connect California with any other measure, was rejected—28 to 25.

The vote was then taken upon the question of instructing the Committee not to take into consideration slavery in the States, the slave-trade, &c., and lost.

The final question being then taken upon the motion to refer Clay's and Bell's resolutions to a Select Committee of 13 without instructions, it was adopted; yeas 30, nays 22.

The Senate adjourned without appointing the Committee.

House of Representatives.

Considerable time was spent in an ineffectual attempt to turn out the door-keeper of the House; a committee of five was appointed to investigate the charges against him.

An attempt was made, but failed, to obtain a committee to investigate charges against Mr. Ewing, Secretary of the Interior.

The President's California Message was discussed by Messrs. Ewing and Alston, but no vote was taken.

In Senate. SIXTH-DAY, April 19.

With the exception of a vote to postpone the farther consideration of the California Bill to next Second-day two weeks, (on account of the absence of a large Committee to convey Mr. Calhoun's remains to South Carolina,) the only business of importance transacted by the Senate was the selection of the Committee on the Compromise Resolutions, as follows:—

HENRY CLAY, of Ky., Chairman.

Lewis Cass, Mich.	D. S. Dickinson, N. Y.
Jesse D. Bright, Ind.	Daniel Webster, Mass.
Samuel S. Phelps, Vt.	James Cooper, Penn.
William R. King, Ala.	James M. Mason, Va.
Solomon U. Downs, La.	Willie P. Mangum, N.C.
John Bell, Tenn.	John M. Berrien, Ga.

The N. Y. Tribune, in announcing it, says: "This is a very strong Committee, but not strong for Human Freedom. The Free States, with two-thirds of the voters, and at least five-eighths of the population of the Union, have but a minority of the Committee, and of these Messrs. Cass, Dickinson, Bright, and Webster, have already violated the expressed will of their constituents in their action on this subject. Messrs. Cass and Dickinson have been doing so for years, and the former has procured, through severe application of the party screws, a license to do so from his Legislature by the Lieut. Governor's casting vote. Mr. Dickinson has for years defied the public sentiment of our State, and will do so to the end."

House of Representatves.

Several private bills reported by committees were brought up and remarked upon in the House; but before any action was taken upon them, the House went into Committee of the Whole on the President's California Message. A free-soil speech by Gov. Cleveland, of Conn., occupied the time till the House adjourned over to Second-day.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamer America, from Liverpool, arrived at Boston on Sabbath last, with two weeks later news from Europe.

The English coast was visited by a severe hurricane on the 30th March, causing much destruction of property, and a frightful loss of life. Among other vessels lost was the John R. Skiddy, which was driven ashore on the coast of Wexford, where she was totally wrecked; Capt. Shipley, passengers and crew, saved. A vessel was lost near the mouth of the Thames, and every soul on board, drowned. The coast is everywhere strewn with portions of vessels that have fallen a prey to the elements.

The City of Dublin Steampacket Company's ship Royal Adelaide, Capt. John Batty' plying between the ports of Cork and London, left the former City on the afternoon of Wednesday, March 28, with a full cargo of goods, and about 250 passengers, touched off Plymouth on Thursday evening, left that port for London on Friday morning at 3 o'clock, and was totally lost on the Tongue Sand, off Margate, at 11 o'clock on Saturday night, when there is too much reason to fear every soul on board perished.

Advices to the last of Nov. have been received from Hobartstown, Van Dieman's Land, announcing the arrival there of Smith O'Brien and his associates in the Irish Rebellion of 1849. The felons were granted tickets of leave on condition of their engaging that their liberty should not be used as a means to effect their escape. All except O'Brien accepted the boon. He has been sent under surveilance to Maria Island.

Public order prevailed at Paris, but political affairs had assumed a more threatening aspect. It is said that the President of the Republic is so deeply in debt, that nothing but the possession of the Imperial crown can extricate him, and that he is at present engaged in negotiations with Russia for the purpose of possessing himself of that, to him, now necessary protection.

A recent number of the Roman Observer says, that the return of the Pope to Rome has been definitely fixed for the 6th inst. The speedy return of his Holiness appears to give general satisfaction.

A difficulty between Russia and Prussia is apprehended. An imperious note has been addressed by the Russian Government to that of Prussia, on the subject of the Scheleswig-Holstein dispute. The Prussian Ambassador has been recalled. Berlin is, it is said, to be surrounded with fortified barracks, which have already been commenced near one of the gates of the city.

The Paris Correspondent of the London Standard of a late date says that the Government is said to have received dispatches from Germany, which lead to the belief that a collision between Austria and Prussia is almost unavoidable. The language used by both powers is partaking more and more of a hostile character.

Advices from Lisbon state that Commodore Martin was concentrating his squadron at the Tagus, in anticipation of a hostile visit from the American naval forces, to enforce a settlement of the long-standing claims of the American Government.

The Tuscan Government has refused to accede to Lord Palmerston's demand of indemnity for losses sustained by British subjects at Leghorn last year. The difficulty has been submitted to the arbitration of the Sardinian Government.

Recent advices from Constantinople state that preparations were being made to conduct Kossuth and other Hungarian refugees to Kutotahia, in Asia Minor, where they are to be confined, it is said, five years.

A telegraphic dispatch of the 29th March from Trieste, states that the insurrection in Bosnia is extending its range and increasing in strength. Two thousand Turkish troops were defeated by the insurgents, and compelled to evacuate the fortress of Banjaluka.

BANKING IN PENNSYLVANIA.—The General Bank Bill, regulating the banks of Pennsylvania, that shall hereafter be chartered and rechartered, has passed both branches of the Legislature, and received the signature of the Governor. By this law the liability principle is extended to all issues of banks—all foreign notes, or the notes of other States under the denomination of $10, are excluded from circulation in Pennsylvania—the Directors are made personally liable for the deposits and other debts, in case of the fraudulent insolvency of banks—cashiers are required to give bonds to the amount of one-fifth of the capital, when it is $200,000 and under; in one-eighth, when it is between $200,000 and $500,000; and in one-tenth, when it is over $500,000 and not exceeding $1,000,000. The extent of the term for which each bank shall be chartered, is fifteen years. Banks can be chartered for a less period, but none for a greater, in the aggregate.

LATEST FROM HAYTI.—A schooner arrived at New York the other day, with dates from Port-au-Prince to March 31st. His Imperial Highness, Faustin I., still delights in show and parade. He every morning rides around the city, attended by the Governor, some of his principal officers, and a body guard of dragoons, and the citizens receive his black majesty with uncovered heads, as he passes. He has forced (with but few exceptions) all the young men of the place to become soldiers; and it is reported that he shortly intends to attack the Spanish portion of the Island. Faustin has purchased two more large brigs, which he intends to convert into vessels of war, viz: the Danish brig Otto, and a Swedish brig. The business of the Island appears to be improving. There was a great deal of logwood in the market, and coffee had begun to come into Port-au-Prince in large quantities.

NEW LINE OF STEAMERS.—A new line of steamships is soon to be established between New York and Liverpool, consisting of four first-class vessels—the Atlantic, the Pacific, the Arctic, and the Baltic. The Atlantic is now ready for sea, and will sail on the 27th inst. She is 290 feet on deck, 45½ feet beam, and 42 feet depth. Her dining saloon is 55 feet long by 41 wide, and can be farther extended 15 feet in length whenever required. Her main saloon is furnished in a style of elegance surpassing the most aristocratic mansions. Her state rooms will accommodate about 200 passengers. She was begun some two years ago, and has cost over half a million of dollars. The vessel was built by Wm. H. Brown; the machinery by Stillman, Allen, & Co., of the Novelty Works. E. K. Collins & Co. are the agents of the line.

DEATH FROM INTEMPERANCE.—A Mr. Wilson was recently married at Washington, of an evening, and found dead in his bed the next morning. The following is the verdict of the Coroner's Jury in the case:—

"That the deceased was a man of intemperate habits, and had been, for two weeks previous to his death, constantly under the influence of ardent spirits, and on the night preceding the morning of his death he manifested strong symptoms of delirium tremens, and while in that state, about 10 o'clock at night, he was married, and retired to bed about 11 o'clock; that, after he got in bed, he exchanged a few words with his wife, and then fell asleep, and was found dead in his bed on Thursday morning about daylight; and the Jury believe, from the evidence, that the deceased came to his death by congestion of the brain and stomach, produced by the habitual use of intoxicating drinks."

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.—By the arrival at St. Louis, on the 16th inst., of a gentleman from New Mexico, dates were received from Los Vegas to the 6th of March. Indian depredations in that country still continue. The Americans are living in constant dread and fear, and the savages are daily becoming more daring. A runner, sent by a party of buffalo hunters, arrived at Los Vegas a few days before he left. The hunters had encountered a body of Apache Indians, and an engagement ensued between them. Two of the hunters were killed and three or four badly wounded. The Indians carried off all their animals. Three Mexicans were recently killed by the Indians at Vernal Springs, on the road from Los Vegas to Santa Fé.

STARVATION AND FREEZING.—Mrs. Ireland and her daughter, of Quincy, Ill., came to an awful death by freezing and starvation on the mountains during the past winter. They were on their way to California. The wife and daughter, with the full knowledge of their situation, and after they had burned up their wagon for fire-wood, insisted upon the husband and farther leaving them to their fate and seeking his own safety. He did so.

PREMIUMS FOR LIBERIA.—Elliott Cresson, Esq., of Philadelphia, feeling strongly the importance of cherishing the spirit of agricultural enterprise among the citizens of Liberia, has generously proffered, through the Franklin Institute, to bear all the expenses of providing four silver medals for the encouragement of African farming. The Institute has accepted the overture, and accordingly valuable medals will be awarded for the largest crops of coffee, cotton, sugar and palm oil produced in Liberia in 1851.

SUMMARY.

According to the last Boston Shipping List, the total number of vessels that have left the United States for California, is 337 ships, 303 barks, 242 brigs, 183 schooners, 1 sloop, and 23 steamers. Many more vessels have no doubt left the United States for California, which are not enumerated, not having cleared direct for that place, but for ports on the eastern and western coasts of South America.

Letters from Havana, dated 4th inst., state that there was no little excitement existing there amongst the medical faculty, relative to the cholera, which has commenced its ravages in the military hospital, amongst the troops. To the 1st inst. the average number of deaths was from fifteen to eighteen; to the 4th instant, from thirty-five to forty-five.

In the Mayor's Court at Albany, on the 12th instant, a man was fined five hundred dollars for selling goods without an auctioneer's license. The Judge charged that a clerk of an auctioneer made himself liable to the penalty if he sold a single article without being duly authorized, even if done in the auctioneer's presence.

A Baton Rouge corespondent of the Albany Argus attributes the increase of water in the lower part of the Mississippi river, of late years, to the fact that the river has been shortened more than forty miles by cutting off the bends. The effect is to let down the water faster than the channel below can carry it off, and an overflow is the consequence.

A dispatch from Milwaukie, dated April 15, says that the schooner Lawrence sprung a leak on the 9th inst., in the Straits of Mackinac, off the Island of St. Helena, and sunk almost immediately. There were no lives lost. The L. had 11,000 bushels Wheat on board. The schooner Raleigh, of Cleveland, with 10,000 bushels Wheat, shipped at Southport, went ashore on Friday, on North Manitowoc, Straits of Mackinac.

The ship Champlaine, Capt. Dean, of Philadelphia, for New Orleans, with an assorted cargo, went ashore on the Great Isaacs Bahama Banks, where she became a total wreck. The Captain and crew were saved. Loss about $150,000. Insured for $40,000.

The Herkimer Democrat states that during the past week, about twenty more citizens of that county have left for California. It also hears of many more who are making preparations to leave soon in the same direction.

The Providence Journal says that the creditors of Richmond & Carr, calico printers, who recently failed to meet their liabilities, have held a meeting, at which it was stated that the whole amount of indebtedness was $444,000, of which amount $110,000 is confidential.

The boiler of the locomotive attached to the burden train on the Baltimore and Susquehanna Railroad exploded in the vicinity of Cockrisville, throwing the locomotive 80 feet, and instantly killing the fireman. The engineer escaped with but trifling injury. Insufficiency of water in the boiler was the cause of the lamentable accident.

The citizens of Saginau, Michigan, having got through the Legislature of that State a bill providing for a Commissioner of Emigration, for that section of the country, to reside in New York city, the Governor vetoed it. Thereupon the citizens got together and subscribed over one thousand dollars to support E. H. Thompson, Esq., in that position, law or no law.

Late advices from St. Josephs report that much suffering prevailed among a number of California emigrants, who were quartered there, and that great numbers had died. Diarrhea was the principal cause. The backwardness of the season also added much to their sufferings, and several were preparing to return.

An interesting daughter, 13 years of age, of Mr. R. Lukens, of the Northern Liberties, Philadelphia, died after an illness of a few days, which originated from her pricking a fever blister upon her lip with a pin. The body, after death, exhibited all the appearance of those who die from the effects of poison contracted or imbibed from the bite of venomous reptiles.

Christian Psalmody—Pocket Edition.

IN compliance with requests from various quarters, the publisher of the New Hymn Book—Christian Psalmody—has issued a second edition, on lighter paper and with smaller margins, by which the bulk and weight of the books are reduced about one-third, rendering them much more convenient for carrying in the pocket. The price is also reduced 12½ cents per copy. Those wishing books, of either edition, can now be supplied. Price of the larger edition from 75 cents to $1 50, according to the style of binding. Price of the smaller edition from 62½ cents to $1 00. Orders should be addressed to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Eclectic Magazine for the Year 1850.

THE Eclectic Magazine of Foreign Literature, Science, and Art, aims to present to its readers a complete survey of the whole field of British Periodical Literature, comprising the selections of all the articles of the most able and celebrated Reveiws, Magazines, and Journals, which have any interest or value to American readers. It not only contains the articles which are desirable in those periodicals reprinted in this country, but in the far greater variety of able and popular Reveiws, Magazines, &c., which form so splendid an element of the literature of the day, and which are inaccessible to the mass of American readers, except by some such medium as the Eclectic Magazine. By omitting what is merely local in interest or feeble in character, the ample size of the Eclectic Magazine enables the editor to embody all that is really desirable in the whole range of journalism. As only the best articles of each periodical are selected, it is evident that the contents of the Eclectic Magazine must be superior to those of any one, however great or celebrated; and, taken together, must constitute a more desirable and able body of periodical literature than can be found elsewhere in the same compass.

Each number is embellished with a suberb steel engraving, from the well-known burin of Mr. Sartain, of subjects of elevated character and general interest, including portraits of distinguished living authors and celebrities, making twelve rich and elegant prints in a year.

TERMS.

The Eclectic Magazine is issued on the first of every month, in numbers of 144 large 8vo. pages each, on fine paper, making three volumes a year, with title-pages and indexes. Price $5 per year, if paid strictly in advance—otherwise invariably $6.

☞ The Magazine above described fully sustains the character given to it in the prospectus, and is justly regarded as the best work of the kind to be had. We shall be happy to forward the subscription of any of our friends who may find it more convenient to communicate with us than with the publisher.

History of Romanism.

In a large octavo volume of 750 pages, printed in large type, on the finest paper, and embellished with more than fifty engravings, chiefly from Original Designs, and bound in muslin, extra gilt. Price $3.
THE HISTORY OF ROMANISM, from its earliest origin to the present time, by the Rev. John Dowling, D. D. A new and enlarged edition, with the Author's last additions, and a Supplement, containing a Sketch of the Life of Pope Pius IX., &c.

The best evidence of the intrinsic value of this remarkably popular work is to be seen in the fact that within the comparatively recent period of its first publication, the extraordinary number of 17,000 copies have been disposed of.

The following is an extract from a letter from the Rev. Dr. Giustiniani, the converted Roman Catholic priest, who is abundantly qualified by education, observation, and extensive study, to testify to the fidelity and value of a "History of Romanism."

"If the reader wishes to be acquainted with the errors of Romanism, he has only to open the pages of Dowling's History. If the reader is anxious to read an epitome of the history of the popes, their ambition; their intrigues; their avariciousness; their tyranny; their superstitions, and their mummeries, he can here find all proved and authenticated by the most accredited authors of the Church of Rome." L. GIUSTINIANI.

"It reflects much credit on the skill, patience, industry, and judgment of the author; he appears very justly to have conceived the idea of a work, which has long been regarded as a desideratum by a large portion of those interested in the great controversy with the Romanists."—Protestant Churchman.

"We regard it as a most important addition to the historical and religious literature of the age. Its contents form a rich storehouse of historical instruction, which should be placed within the reach of every family."—N. Y. Christian Intelligencer.

"It presents a succienct, but sufficiently full, history of the rise, progress, errors, cruelties, and present condition of the Papacy, authenticated by reference to the most undoubted historic sources, related in a spirited, engaging, and impressive style, and arranged in the most lucid manner. It abounds in facts and incidents, and, with its beautiful illustrations, is better adapted to furnish a vivid and impressive portraiture of Romanism as it is, than any other book we know of."—N. Y. Evang.

"The detached portions of Romish history which were every where to be met with, needed to be brought together and presented in systematic order. The reading of one book thus becomes better and cheaper than the reading of many."—Boston Recorder.

"It is written with the ready, popular eloquence, for which the well-known author is distinguished, and cannot fail to arrest attention to the controversy of which it treats. It is a strongly Protestant work, and exhibits the deformities of Popery with great power."—N. Y. Recorder.

"The author appears to have brought to the execution of this great work, unwearied industry, genuine and thorough scholarship, and scrupulous fidelity."
RUFUS BABCOCK, late Pres. of Waterville College.

Miscellaneous.

TIME IS NOT OF YEARS.

I saw a castle grim and grey,
Standing alone on a rocky way,
And crumbling slowly to decay,
Its mouldering stone appears;
And a sparkling rill danced on near by,
Blithely, as it had done for aye;
And it seemed to me, as it gushed, to cry,
"Oh! time is not of years!"

I saw the pomp of the lordly great,
Passing away from its ancient state,
Oblivion over their name and fate,
Her sepulchre appears;
And I heard a voice from the mighty past,
Calling the names which forever last,
And shouting loud as the winter blast,
"Oh, time is not of years!"

I saw a girl in her beauty's prime,
Worn with the weight of care and crime,
Mourning the waste of her girlhood's time,
With a woe too wild for tears;
And an old man, tossing a child at play,
With silver hair and an eye whose ray.
As it glanced at the blue sky, seemed to say,
"Oh, time is not of years!"

COUNTERFEIT GOLD COIN.

As the amount of gold coin in circulation increases the liability of all to take base coin, we give the annexed information on the subject of counterfeits, furnished to the Philadelphia Ledger, by an officer of the Mint:—

"The most important class of counterfeits are the imitations of our own coin, and some have been brought to light worthy of especial notice. The varieties include the eagle, half-eagle, and quarter-eagle. The die is very perfect, for although a coiner might discover that the impression is not quite so sharp and decided as the genuine coin, yet none but a practical eye can detect the difference. Even when examined under a microscope, they are found to correspond in the most minute particular to the genuine coin. This shows that the dies must have been transferred from our own coin by some mechanical process not yet known to honest workmen, as the most accomplished artist in the world could not take up the graver and make such a facsimile. The coins have rather a dull sound in ringing, but not as if flawed, although they are actually composed of three distinct pieces of metal. Where they are full weight, they are necessarily thicker than the genuine, but generally the half-eagle rim, is in the good piece, from 55 to 60 thousandths of an inch within the raised rim. They appear to be made as follows: A thin planchet of silver, of Spanish standard, is prepared so nearly of the right diameter, that the subsequent overlaying of the gold plate at the edge will make it exact. Two planchets of gold are then prepared—one of them to correspond with the true diameter of the coin, the other about one quarter of an inch larger. These two plates are soldered upon the silver, the projecting rim of the larger is bent up to meet the smaller, so as to cover the edge of the coin, and the piece is finished by a blow in the coiner press. The half-eagles, which are perhaps the most numerous, bear various dates, such as 1844, 1845, and 1847. Of the quarter-eagle, only one date, 1843, and bearing the O for the New Orleans Mint mark, has as yet been detected, but doubtless there are others in circulation. The value of the half-eagles assayed was from $3 to 3 40, and the quarter do. $1 25. They are so well calculated to deceive, that they have passed undetected through the hands of good judges into the Mint. The only reliable method of detection is by their weight. If they come up to the true standard, their increased thickness will be at once apparent to a careful examiner.

AN ENGLISH SHIP OF WAR AT JAPAN.

In obedience to orders from the Commander-in-Chief, Commander Mathison proceeded in H. M. S. Mariner (12 guns) to the coast of Japan, and anchored off the town of Oragawa, 25 miles from the capital of the Empire, and 3 miles farther than any other vessel of a foreign nation had been allowed. The Mariner sounded all the way across and along the shores.

"The Japanese interpreter on board having informed the authorities of the object of my visit, I sent my card, written in Chinese, ashore to the Governor, requesting him to receive my visit; to which he replied, that, out of courtesy to me, and curiosity to himself, he would have been delighted to pay me a visit, and also entertain me ashore, but that it was contrary to the laws of the country for any foreigner to land, and that he, the Governor, would lose his life if he permitted me to proceed any farther up the bay. When about 8 miles from Cape Misaki, which forms the South-west end of the bay, 10 boats, manned with 20 armed men and 5 mandarins in each, came along side. I allowed the mandarins to come on board, when they presented me a paper, written in French and Dutch, directing me not to anchor or cruise about the bay. Finding, however, that I was determined to proceed, they offered, when within 2 miles of the anchorage, to tow me up, which I accordingly accepted. Several boats were stationed around us during the night, forts were lighted up, and several hundred boats were collected along the shore, all fully manned and armed. In return, I had my guns loaded, and requested their boats to keep at a respectful distance during the night. Othosan, the interpreter, was in great dread; saying, that in case we landed, the Japanese would murder us all, and as for himself, he would be reserved for a lingering death by torture. Oragawa appears to be the key of the capital of the Empire, and contains 20,000 inhabitants. All the junks going and returning to Jeddo must pass the Custom-House there; and with moderate force the whole trade of the capital might be completely stopped. With an armed steamer, the passage up to Jeddo might be surveyed; and I was informed that a ship could approach within 5 miles of the city. Between the capital and the port an excellent road exists. The mandarins here appear of an inferior class, treated us civilly, and were anxious to gain any information from us, but would give none in return. They took sketches of different parts of the ship, sent us some water, vegetables, and eggs, and then were continually inquiring when I intended to depart. Mr. Halloran, the master, having made a survey of the anchorage, I weighed, and proceeded to Semodi Bay, of which an accurate survey was made. I landed at this place, but the mandarins immediately followed, entreating me to return on board. They supplied us with plenty of fish, and 50 boats to tow us out. The Governor of the province came on board at this place. He lives at a town called Miomaki, 13 miles off, and was evidently a man of high rank, from the respect shown him by his suite. The Dutch interpreter from Oragawa likewise came on board with two mandarins to watch our proceedings. They were, however, doubtless acting as spies on each other," &c.

Dr. Gutzlaff hoped that the time was rapidly approaching when the commerce of these two empires would be opened to the world. To Russia the Chinese Emperor, in a secret treaty, has granted the free navigation of the Amur, which will greatly facilitate the communication between the American and the Asiatic possessions of Russia on the Northern Pacific and St. Petersburgh, via Kiakta.

RELIGIOUS CHARACTER OF MR. WIRT.

The Hon. Wm. Wirt, in the later years of his life, took great interest in the promotion of moral and religious institutions, in the missionary labors of the churches, in the extension of Sunday schools, in the success of the Bible Society, and the cause of temperance. At the time of his death, he was President of the Maryland Bible Society.

These years of Mr. Wirt's life furnish the spectacle of a highly gifted, thoughtful, and accomplished mind, stimulated by a fervent and sincere piety, and employed in the promotion of every good work suggested by enlightened benevolence or Christian duty. He devoted a portion of his time every day to the reading of the Scriptures; engaged in a comprehensive study of theology; cultivated habits of prayer and meditation, which he promoted and encouraged in his family, and frequently employed his leisure in the composition of religious essays and records of private devotion. His favorite theological authors were Hooker, Baxter, Watts, Faber, Flavel, Robert Hall, Doddridge, and Jay. Of Baxter he says, in a letter to his daughter, "I took up the 'Saints' Rest' lately, and found it like an old sandal-wood box, as fresh and fragrant as if it had just been made, although it has been exhaling its odor for a hundred and eighty years."

YOUNG MEN.

Redeem time for reading. Perhaps you think this impossible; but the busiest life has some pauses. When I see the large amount of time spent by some over the lowest sort of newspapers, I am convinced that the most industrious young men might obtain a few minutes a day for study; and it is astonishing how much can be learned by a few minutes application every day. What cannot be done to-day, may doubtless be accomplished to-morrow. It is true of time as of money—"Take care of the pence, the pounds will take care of themselves." Or, as Young more poetically expresses it—"Sand makes the mountain, moments make the year."

Do a little every day. Constant dropping wears away rock. When Apelles, the famous Greek painter, was asked how he had been able to accomplish so much for art, he replied: "By the observance of one rule—No day without a line!"

Be not discouraged by difficulties. These are chiefly at the start. The French proverb says truly: "It is only the first step that costs." The tree of knowledge has a rough trunk, but delicious fruit. You must crack the shell, to come at the kernel. Be assured, that a little resolution here will insure success.

Begin at the beginning. Do not smile; the rule is important, and broken every day, in every employment. In unraveling a tangled thread, who does not know that every thing depends on getting hold of the end? Just so is it in learning.

Never be ashamed to learn. And in conformity to this, never be ashamed to confess your ignorance in the presence of those who have more information than yourself. Many of us would be wiser, if it had not been for the conceit of being too wise already.

Value the smallest fragments of knowledge. In manufactories of gold, I have observed that they save the very sweepings of the floors, and put net work at the windows; the little morsels and fine dust of the precious metals thus saved in this city, amount to hundreds of dollars in a year.

Seek associates in learning. Here, as in other concerns, many hands make light work. We love companionship, both in toil and in pleasure. It sweetens study, and adds greatly to its profits. Find out some young friend who has similar tastes, and enlist him in a definite plan for mutual improvement; the benefit will accrue to him, as well as to yourself.

THE INDIANS OF CALIFORNIA.

A Mr. Delano writes to the Ottawa (Ill.) Free Trader as follows:—

"Near each rancho is generally a village of Indians. They are dark skinned, nearly as dark as a negro, covered with dust, living upon acorns, wild fruit and fish. They have nothing of the noble bearing of the Indians east of the Rocky Mountains; they seem to be only a few degrees removed from brutes. Their dwellings resemble almost exactly large coal pits where wood is charred; a pit is dug in the ground, a circular frame work is built, and this is covered with dirt six or eight feet high, with a small hole at the base to creep in and out of, and another at the top to let out the smoke. You will always see numbers of men sitting on the top of their hives, sunning themselves, while the squaws are generally engaged in preparing their acorn flour, or in weaving baskets and pans, in which they are very ingenious. They make them perfectly water-tight. Their acorns are dried, then pounded fine, and mixed with some kind of berries, making a kind of bread which is by no means unpalatable, but it requires a man with the courage to eat a rattlesnake, to taste it. In fact, a man must cross the Plains before he can summon resolution to eat it, especially after seeing them prepare it. The men are very expert in spearing salmon, of which there is the finest here I ever saw, and very abundant. They are now frequently employed in the mines for a mere trifle, and such generally contrive to get a shirt, and a few get rich enough to buy a coat and pantaloons; but since the rains have set in, I have seen hundreds of them wading the streams for fish, or traveling on the plains naked, and paying no more regard to the wet chilly storm than dumb beasts. In the valley they are now inoffensive, as the number of whites overawes them, but in the mountains they sometimes give the miners trouble, and some collisions have taken place. Those in the mountains are treacherous and unsafe, and will be until they become acquainted with the power and strength of their Anglo-Saxon neighbors.

LAST HOURS OF MR. CALHOUN.

A letter written at Washington on Sunday, March 31st, the day of Mr. Calhoun's death, says that during the whole of the previous day, it was evident to those who had access to the sick chamber, that the lamp of life was nearly extinguished, and that, if within a few hours a change did not take place for the better, his demise might be confidently expected. Indeed, he seemed conscious himself that his mortal career was near a close.

About 12½ o'clock at night, a change took place for the worse. He had been unable for some hours previous to raise the matter from his lungs, and his son turned him on his side to afford him some relief. He remarked, "It's of no use; I receive no relief—I am sinking. Place me back as I was. I have no pulse in my wrist; feel it. The medicine (an opiate) has had a charming effect. I feel a warm glow over my system."

He noticed that his son was very much alarmed, and said, "Why do you sit up? You had better go to sleep."

His breathing had become very difficult. He said, "Breathing has become very harrassing to me." His son lay down upon a couch near him, but not to sleep. At about 4 Mr. Calhoun called him, and addressing him, said, "John, come here. I believe all that medical skill can do will be of no avail; feel my pulse; I have none. Take all my loose papers and put them in my trunk."

Mr. Venable, of North Carolina, who was in the next room, was called, and came in. Mr. Calhoun extended his hand; his eyes were very bright, and he was perfectly conscious, but did not speak. Mr. Venable found that he had no pulse, and poured out a part of a glass of Madeira. He raised his head, drank it, and then sank back upon his pillow. Mr. Orr and D. Wallace, of South Carolina, came in. When the door closed, Mr. Calhoun turned his eyes in that direction, and was perfectly conscious of every thing that passed. He squeezed his son's hand convulsively; his lips moved, and his eyes were very expressive. His voice could not be heard, and when some one leaned over him, as if to listen, he moved his head, as if to say, "I cannot speak." His breathing was very hard until five minutes before his death. One hand rested upon his breast, and he raised the other and placed it once or twice upon his head. Probably the last rush of blood pained him. When the breath left the body, it was like a long-drawn breath. It was the last, and all was over. He died as easy as an infant, and was perfectly conscious until the last spark of life had fled.

Bounty Land Warrants.—A Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, under date of April 12, says:—"From present appearances Bounty Land Warrants will be largely increased in number by the action of the present Congress. Yesterday Mr. Cobb, from the Committee on Public Lands, in the House of Representatives, reported a bill allowing Bounty Lands to the officers and privates engaged in the war of 1812, '13, '14, and '15; the Indian wars of 1811; the Florida Seminole war; and the war known as Gen. Wayne's war, of 1792 to 1795, who have not received such bounty lands. This bill was twice read, and then referred to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union. In addition to this large provision for the issuing of additional Bounty Land Warrants, a bill has been reported from the Committee on Public Lands in the Senate, granting the same quantity of land to each seaman engaged in the naval service during the war with Mexico that has been allowed the marines who served upon land. There is also a third bill before the same Committee, and which will be reported favorably upon, allowing to all the officers who served during the Mexican war the same quantity of bounty land that is proposed to be given to the officers of the war of 1812. Of the success of these three several bills I have but little or no doubt. And if they pass, the depreciation in the present rates of warrants will most materially be felt by the holders thereof."

True Independence.—Soon after his establishment in Philadelphia, Franklin was offered a piece for publication in his paper. Being very busy, he begged the gentleman would leave it for consideration. The next day the author called and asked his opinion of it. "Why, sir," replied Franklin, "I am sorry to say, that I think it highly scurrilous and defamatory. But being at a loss on account of my poverty whether to reject it or not, I thought I would put it to this issue—at night, when my work was done, I bought a two-penny loaf, on which I supped, and then, wrapping myself in my great coat, slept very soundly on the floor till morning, when another loaf and a mug of water afforded me a pleasant breakfast. Now, sir, since I can live very comfortably in this manner, why should I prostitute my press to personal hatred or party passion, for a more luxurious living?"

One cannot read this anecdote of our American sage without thinking of Socrates' reply to King Archelaus, who had pressed him to give up preaching in the dirty streets of Athens, and come and live with him in splendid courts:—"Meal, please your Majesty, is a half-penny a peck at Athens, and water I can get for nothing."

The Best Recommendation.—A youth seeking employment came to this city, and on inquiring at a certain counting-room if they wished a clerk, was told that they did not. On mentioning the recommendations he had, one of which was from a highly respectable citizen, the merchant desired to see them. In turning over his carpet-bag to find his letters, a book rolled out on the floor. "What book is that?" said the merchant. "It is the Bible, sir," was the reply. "And what are you going to do with that book in New York?" The lad looked seriously into the merchant's face, and replied, "I promised my mother I would read it every day, and I shall do it," and burst into tears. The merchant immediately engaged his services, and in due time he became a partner in the firm, one of the most respectable in the city.

An Ancient Art Discovered.—At a meeting of the Asiatic Society, London, a human hand, and a piece of beef, preserved by means of a preparation of vegetable tar, found on the borders of the Red Sea in the vicinity of Mocha, and a specimen of the tar, were presented. Col. Hold observes:—"During my residence, as political agent, on the Red Sea, a conversation with some Bedouin Arabs, in the vicinity of Mocha, led me to suspect that the principal ingredient used by the ancient Egyptians in the formation of mummies, was nothing more than the vegetable tar of those countries, called by the Arabs, Katrah. My first trials were on fowls and legs of mutton, and which, though in the month of July, and the thermometer ranging 94 in the shade, succeeded so much to my satisfaction that I forwarded some to England; and have now the pleasure to send for the Society's information and inspection, a human hand, prepared four years since by my brother, Capt. Thomas Bagnold. The best informed among the Arabs think that large quantities of camphor, myrrh, aloes and frankincense were used; these specimens will, however, prove that such were by no means necessary, as the tar, applied alone, penetrates and discolors the bone. Tar is obtained from the branches of a small tree or shrub, exposed to a considerable degree of heat, and found in most parts of Syria and Arabia Felix."

Ninevah Discoveries.—Very late and highly satisfactory accounts have been received from Mr. Layard, in Assyria, giving intelligence of new and important discoveries in the Nimroud Mound. He has made fresh and extensive excavations in parts of the eminence not yet explored, and the result has been the finding of nothing less than the throne upon which the monarch, reigning about 3,000 years ago, sat in his splendid palace. It is composed of metal and of ivory, the metal being richly wrought, and the ivory beautifully carved. It does not appear in what part of the edifice this discovery has been made; but it seems that the throne was separated from the state apartments by means of a large curtain, the rings by which it was drawn and undrawn having been preserved. At the date of his advices, Mr. Layard was pursuing his researches with renewed ardor, in consequence of the astonishing success which has hitherto attended his exertions. No human remains have come to light, and everything indicates the destruction of the palace by fire. It is said that the throne has been partially fused by the heat.

Consumption of Tea.—Great Britain annually consumes fifty million pounds of tea, the importation of which employs about one hundred ships. The duty is most exorbitant, averaging not less than 250 per cent. on the value, and on the low qualities is from 300 to 400 per cent., and on the lowest even from 800 to 1,000 per cent.! The entire importation in 1848 cost ten million dollars, and the duties amounted to twenty-seven and a half million dollars! In England tea is regarded not as a luxury, but as a necessary of life, which is decidedly more important to the poor than to the rich. Here above thirty-seven million dollars are expended in an article which might be dispensed with with little inconvenience and no suffering, and in most cases with decided advantage, the cost of which exceeds by thirty million dollars all the contributions of the Christian world for the gratuitous circulation of the Bible and the various missionary operations at home and abroad! If this is an age of benevolence, it cannot be called an age of self-denial. [Cong. Journal.

Telegraphic Bell.—One of the most ingenious and useful inventions we have seen, says the Pittsburg Post, is a Telegraphic Bell, which is to be put up on a new steamer in Cincinnati. The bell is placed near the engine, and a number of wires connect it with the pilot-house. If the pilot wishes the engineeer to start the boat, he pulls a wire, by which a hammer strikes the bell, and instantly the word "start" appears in front of the bell. If he wishes the boat to go slow, by pulling another wire, an alarm is again made, and the word "slow" appears. In like manner, other signals are given. The great advantage of the bell is this: No misunderstanding can possibly occur between the Pilot and the Engineer, in regard to the alarm, as the command will appear in plain letters, until a new command is given and takes its place.

An Editor Indicted for Abolition Publications.—A searching inquiry was made by the Grand Jury of Cecil County Court, at Elkton, Md., recently, touching certain illegal abolition papers circulated in that town, and an indictment was found against William T. Jeandall, one of the editors of the Blue Hen's Chicken, published at Wilmington, Del. The Whig supposes he will be demanded of the Governor of the State of of Delaware, for trial at Elkton. The particular paper presented bore date the 8th of February last, and the objectionable matter was a resolution purporting to have been passed at a Convention held at Syracuse, N. Y., stating that the slaves of the South would be justifiable in rising in arms to assert their freedom, and that they—the parties who adopted the resolution—would not assist to suppress an insurrection. It was proved that from ten to fifteen copies of the paper came to the Elkton Post-Office, sent gratuitously in most cases.

Melancholy Effects of the Use of Chloroform.—A young lady of this city, says the Rochester Advertiser, who up to that time had enjoyed good health, took some chloroform several weeks ago in order to have teeth some extracted without pain. When the operation was finished, she was quite delirious, and could not tell where she lived, or who she was. She was sent home in a carriage, and soon after she was seized with spasms of the most violent character. These continued without interruption for many days—often threatening immediate death. The best medical skill could not mitigate their severity or their frequency. Recently recourse has been had to mercurial preparations, which have put an end to the spasms, but have left the patient in a state of suffering which no language can describe. Her complete recovery can hardly be expected, though hopes are entertained that the end of her intensest sufferings is not far distant. It is now about three weeks since she took the chloroform, and she has ever since been in the keenest agony.

Galvanism applied to Lighting the Streets.—Several interesting experiments have recently been performed at St. Petersburg by a distinguished savant, showing the application of Galvanism to lighting the streets. The first experiment on a large scale came off December 8, 1849. The three principal streets of the city, which radiate in a straight line from the Admiralty tower, were lighted from 7 to 10 o'clock in the evening. The light was placed in the central gallery of the tower, about the hight of a four story house, and was so bright that the eye could scarcely endure it for a second. Although the night was perfectly clear, and the stars shining, the rays could be seen as they emanated from the light, like the rays of the sun through a small hole in a dark room. The corner houses to the distance of three or four hundred paces from the tower were so illuminated that you could see a fly. The gas-lights looked red and smoky, while the electric light was dazzlingly white. Seen from the street, the luminary looked about 6 inches in diameter, and at a distance appeared like a fire-ball thrown from a bomb and floating in the air. The light often changed its color, and by turns became red, blue and yellow, which made it more tolerable to the eye. Sometimes it would vanish for a moment, and then reappear with new brilliancy. In spite of the gas light, the shadow of the electric light could be clearly distinguished at the distance of about 500 paces, but farther off the gas gained the precedence. [Tribune.

New Postal Enterprise.—We learn by private and reliable information from Washington, says the Detroit Advertiser, that a proposition will in a few days be laid before the Senate, emanating from a company of the highest respectability, for running a line of Post Coaches from Independence, Mo., to California, in 24 days, to be expressed in 12 days. The Company only ask of Congress a strip of land 100 feet in width for the whole distance, with the privilege of purchasing from Government a quarter section of land, for the purpose of stations, once in every ten miles. The Company asks of Government the use of this route for 15 years, and agree to make the franchise and grants of land contingent upon their having the road in operation within six months, and undertake to place three thousand men upon the line at once.

Bird-killing in New Jersey.—The Legislature, during its last session, enacted, that it shall not be lawful in the State of New Jersey for any person to shoot, or in any other manner to kill or destroy, except upon his own premises, any of the following description of birds: the night or mosquito hawk, chimney swallow, martin or swift, whippoorwill, cuckoo, king bird or bee martin, woodpecker, claip or highhole, catbird, wren, bluebird, meadow lark, brown thresher, dove, fire bird or summer red bird, hanging bird, ground robin or chewink, boblink or rice bird, robin, snow or chipping bird, sparrow, Carolina lit, warbler, black bird, bluejay, and the small owl. The penalty is five dollars for each offense, or for the destruction of the eggs of such birds.

Premium to Inventors.—The Government of India has, at the suggestion of the Agri-Horticultural Society of India, announced that a prize of five thousand rupees shall be given for an improved cotton cleaning machine, (unrestricted by any particular mechanical principle) such as, in the opinion of the Government, shall have fully attained the principal objects described by the Society, namely, "To be so perfect in its action in separating cotton-wool from the seed, and possessing such qualities of expedition, simplicity and comparative cheapness, as to render it likely to come into practicel use;" and the Agri-Horticultural Society has determined to adjudge its gold medal to the same object.

A Drink of Beer for ever.—Mr. Emerson, in one of his lectures, tells a story to exemplify the stability of things in England. He says that William of Wyckham, about the year 1150, endowed a house in the neighborhood of Winchester, to provide a measure of beer and a sufficiency of bread to every one who asked it, for ever; and when Mr. Emerson was in England he was curious to test this good-man's credit, and he knocked at the door, preferred his request, and received his measure of beer and his quantum of bread, though its donor had been dead seven hundred years.

Turpentine.—The Savannah Republican, in an article upon the Turpentine business in Georgia, states that there are some fifteen or sixteen persons now engaged in its manufacture, whose united product will amount to not less than 20,800 bbls. during the present season. There are some eight or ten others who have recently embarked in the business, whose labors will add very considerably to this amount. The distillation of crude terpentine is also rapidly increasing in that State; and the time is thought not to be very distant when Georgia will be able to vie with North Carolina in the production of this article.

A Mine of Coin.—Recently, says the Springfield Republican, while several laboring men were working on the bed of the canal near Albany, one of them struck a pile of sovereigns. All hands immediately came the "grab game," shoveling their hats full of mud and gold together. The first discoverer secured $500 and the others not far from $150 apiece. In all, about $1,200 were taken out. It was doubtless the all of some unfortunate emigrant, dropped accidentally in a bag from a canal boat. The laborers "knocked off and called it half a day."

The Wrath to Come.—An irreligious young man heard Mr. Whitefield without any interest, until the preacher suddenly paused, then burst into a flood of tears, lifted up his hands and eyes, and exclaimed—"O, my hearers! the wrath to come!" "These words," said the young man, "sunk deep into my heart, like lead in the waters. I wept, and when the sermon was ended, retired alone. For days and weeks I could think of little else. Those awful words would follow me wherever I went—'The wrath to come!' 'The wrath to come!'" The result was, that the young man soon after made a public profession of religion, and became an eminent preacher.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agricultura Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery. 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

REPORT ON MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

BY A COMMITTEE OF THE S. D. B. WESTERN ASSOCIATION.

Your Committee respectfully report, that they have attentively examined the subject submitted to their consideration, and ask permission to present in detail the conclusions at which they have arrived, and the reasons therefor, so far as may be necessary to justify such conclusions.

They find it rather difficult to point out a uniform course of study, that shall be insisted upon in every instance, as prerequisite to the ordination of a candidate to the gospel ministry. They, however, do feel the necessity of urging a very extended and thorough course of intellectual instruction. The work of the ministry, doubtless, requires more extended and various intellectual attainments, a larger acquaintance with the world, and a deeper insight into the mainsprings of human action, than any other calling. The reason is manifest. The minister is a teacher, in the noblest and highest sense of that term. It is his to teach the science of salvation—a science which, in the magnitude of interests involved, transcends infinitely all other sciences. A simple comparison will illustrate this point. It is the business of the cultivator of the soil, to learn and apply the laws of agriculture; of the mechanic, to know, within the sphere of his particular profession, the uses, properties, and adaptations of materials, the construction of machines, and the use of mechanical tools; of the medical or surgical practitioner, to acquaint himself with the organism of the entire physical constitution, the maladies to which it is liable, and the remedies most appropriate in cases of diseased action; and of the legal practitioner, to comprehend the statute law, and the principles of international communication, and their application to particular cases. The professions of all these have much more to do with the physical than with the intellectual or moral world. Not so with the minister's profession. His commission embraces the entire man—the complete and harmonious development of the intellectual and moral powers, in connection with the physical. The main employment of others has reference chiefly to this life; his to this life and the life to come. As far as eternity transcends the age of man, so far does the minister's employment, in awfulness and solemnity, transcend other employments.

Now, it is a well-established principle, that the more complex any kind of business is, the more talent, and the better the attainments, required of the man who engages in such business. In view of this principle, and in the light of the nature of the minister's employment, compared with the employments of others, it is easy to judge of the qualifications that are demanded in a minister. If, in complicated injuries, or derangements of the physical system, requiring medical or surgical aid, a man is called for who has studied many years, in acquainting himself with all the separate and component parts of the human frame-work—in analyzing, in minute detail, all the organs of its complex structure—in learning their relations and adaptations, and ascertaining the remedies most appropriate as restoratives in cases of diseased action—how much more should it be expected of the minister to study all the separate and component parts of the mental being; to analyze all the elements of mind, the emotions and passions, the ideas and functions of the reason, the motives for determining the choices and volitions of the free causality; to learn their relations and adaptations; to ascertain the means by which their parts and activities may be developed in harmony; the remedies most appropriate in cases of disease; and, above all, how to apply those remedies in the most successful manner! The one deals with the physical and mortal; the other with the spiritual and immortal. By so much as the latter are more valuable than the former, by so much, according to the principle laid down above, ought the minister's attainments to exceed those of the physician or surgeon. If the legal practitioner must laboriously study, for many years, the general and particular facts of national and statute laws, familiarize himself with their special applications, and be able to comprehend and interpret the workings of human passion, how much more should that man whose investigations embrace all laws, study those great moral laws destined to control a universe of intelligent creatures; familiarize himself with their application to human necessities; thoroughly acquaint himself with the sea of human passions, that he may know how to calm, at will, the agitated waves! If the mechanic must serve an apprenticeship of three, five, or seven years, before he can be trusted, as a master workman, to make a fine coat, a pair of boots, or any other article in his particular profession, how many years should that man serve, as a faithful student, who is to be a master workman in building up the glorious structure of the church of God! If the agriculturist must serve an apprenticeship of five or ten years, in the management of the farmer, before he can be expected to get the requisite knowledge to make him a successful and economical farmer, how long should that man serve, who is to be a laborer in God's vineyard—an under-shepherd in the heritage of our Lord—an economical and successful husbandman in bringing out the "glorious product of immortal minds." Or, again, if the ordinary educator, after completing his usual common-school education, must take a full seven years' course of academical and collegiate instruction before he can be deemed qualified to take charge of an institution of an academic grade, how much more careful and extensive should be the preparation of that man who is to be a teacher in Zion, in which the science of all sciences is to be taught! No comments on these very simple interrogatories are called for. They carry with them their proper conclusions. Strange that the opinion should ever have been entertained for a moment, and stranger still that it should ever have so extensively prevailed, that, provided a man has been regenerated, and has felt his spirit stirred within him to do good, no extensive and special preparations are necessary to enable him to preach the gospel successfully. It is not so much a matter of consideration, when, where, or how, a man has obtained an education, as it is that he has it—that he has the moral and intellectual discipline, attainments, and habits, reasonably expected of a minister of the gospel.

To the deductions thus briefly arrived at, your Committee know of but two prominent objections:—

1. That a man ought not to be sent to school to learn to preach.

2. That it takes too much time to get an education.

As these objections are often strongly urged, your Committee deem themselves required to give them a careful consideration. They will be as concise and as brief as the nature of the objections will admit.

1. To the first objection, they would respectfully reply, That they would most sincerely deprecate the notion, if it were ever entertained, that mere knowledge, unsanctified, can serve a man in the ministry instead of piety, and a deep and thrilling sense of his awful and solemn responsibilities. They are not aware that knowledge has a tendency to make men of piety presumptuous, or to extinguish the spark of devotion that may have been enkindled in their bosoms. On the contrary, the whole history of the church, both Jewish and Christian, proves conclusively, that among the most devout and widely useful men that have ever blessed the world, are to be found the most learned men that have ever lived. So far from knowledge having a tendency to make men less devotional, and less ardent in their attachments to the cause of humanity, nothing tends so directly to produce complete consecration to God. Has not ignorance been emphatically the bane, the primal curse of the church? Does any thing so obstruct her career to universal empire as the lack of intelligence? Has not this been the very center and soul of all the sensuality, bigotry, and persecution, that has ever blasted the world? Has it not ever been the right hand agent of the power of darkness for thwarting all that is God-like and heavenly on earth? Has it not been the demon that has spilt the blood of the martyrs, scattered scepticism wide over the face of this fair world, and locked heaven against those who would otherwise enter in? True, learned men have the infirmities of humanity, and often have they shown themselves very wicked men; yet it is more frequently the mere smatterer, who is self-confident, boastful, and proud, who imagines himself to have surveyed the whole arena of sciences, and viewed their heights and depths. True it is, that

> "A little learning is a dangerous thing;
> Drinking deeply sobers us again."

Let the church insist on an educated ministry, if she would keep out pretenders and hypocrites. There is perhaps no employment that gives, in a worldly point of view, so poor a compensation for services rendered, as the ministry. When a man has spent nine to twelve years in close and persevering application to study, he has, under ordinary circumstances, made attainments that will secure to him stations of trust, giving twice or thrice the salary the church is accustomed to pay. Should he then enter the ministry, regardless of worldly emolument, he gives a very strong presumptive evidence of sincerity of purpose. But when only quite limited attainments are required, a church may pay a man in her employment as much or more than he could get in other services. Then he has not the opportunity to exhibit a self-sacrificing spirit, as when the church demands extensive attainments.

Again, the church, both Jewish and Christian, has ever insisted upon a thorough education of her ministers. (1.) At an early period in the Jewish polity, the Levitical priesthood were organized by the authority of the Supreme Head of the Church. They were commissioned to be the teachers and spiritual guides of the people. "They shall teach Judah thy judgments, and Israel thy law." Deut. 33: 10. They had assigned for their special use forty-eight cities, located at different points, convenient for diffusing instruction among the people. These cities constituted so many grand centers, or, more properly, universities of instruction, where the priests, distributed into communities, could mutually aid each other in the study of the law, instruct the candidates for the priesthood in the functions of their sacred office, and then disperse into all the surrounding regions of country and instruct the people. Frequent mention is made of these schools, at a later period, under a somewhat different organization. One of these was at Naioth, in Ramah, over which Samuel presided by appointment. 1 Sam. 19: 20. Another was established at Bethel; and another at Jericho, of which Elijah was at one time president. 2. Kings 2: 3, 5, 7, 15. Elisha was also president of an institution at Gilgal, and had at one time one hundred students under his instructions. 2 Kings 4: 38, 43. It is not to be understood, that these schools were exclusively theological; they were, undoubtedly, both literary and theological, coinciding as nearly with our modern universities as the progress of the age would admit. Now, it is worthy of observation, that these schools originated by the authority of Jehovah, and were superintended and instructed by some of the most eminent men whose names are recorded in the Bible. Such care did the Almighty take, that his church under the dispensation of law should be provided with properly qualified instructors. And it may be fairly inferred, from what is known of the uniformity of the operation of causes in producing effects, that the sources of mental training and discipline required to develop, regulate, strengthen, and mature the moral and intellectual powers of men under one dispensation, would be required under any other. If men educated beyond the ordinary grade, were required for the priesthood under a dispensation of law, there is no conceivable reason why they should not be required under a dispensation of grace. The particulars of instruction would undoubtedly vary with the object and end of the dispensation, and with the increasing light of the world; but the thoroughness and completeness of the instructions would be alike under all.

It would then be natural to expect, that inasmuch as the first propagation of the Christian scheme of salvation designed to supersede many of the traditions, customs, and ordinances, long enshrined in the affections of the people, would call for extraordinary talents and attainments, so extraordinary opportunities of instruction, and special bestowments of grace, would be conferred upon its first advocates. Such is found to be the fact. True, it is the custom of some to represent the apostles of our Lord as a band of illiterate men; but it is quite important to know precisely in what sense this can be affirmed of them. It is undoubtedly a fact, that they were measurably unlearned in questions of philosophy and science of their day; nor is it probable, that they were learned, above the commonality of their countrymen, in the law. But that some of them, at least, possessed a good knowledge of the original languages in which the Scriptures were written, is manifest from the clearness, forcibleness, simplicity, beauty, and (with the exception of an occasional Hebraism) even classical correctness of their compositions. They also well understood the habits, customs, rites, and ceremonies of their times. They were, unquestionably, neither from the highest nor the lowest grades of society, but from the middle class—from the ordinary walks of life. They were plain, practical, common-sense, matter-of-fact men—men of sound, discriminating judgment, and of exalted moral integrity. They seem to have been admirably fitted for the mission to which they were called; but not without special and unusual opportunities for studying attentively, and familiarizing themselves with the doctrines they were about to promulgate. No other men ever possessed such ample means for these purposes as did these favored disciples. This statement will not be deemed exaggerated, when it is remembered, that for three years they enjoyed the immediate companionship of our blessed Lord; witnessed his numerous miracles; listened to his public and private instructions; saw his transfiguration; and, finally, held communion with him forty days after his resurrection. What student in divinity would not gladly forego his regular three years course in a theological seminary, in favor of three years of personal instructions of the Saviour? But the advantages that the apostles had thus enjoyed, great and unusual as they were, were insufficient to fit them for their mission. They were now endued with the plenary inspiration of the Holy Spirit—with such peculiar illuminations as none before had ever experienced, nor could ever expect to again. To this was added the power of working miracles—the last instance in which this extraordinary gift was ever to be conferred upon men. Thus they were, in many respects, relieved from the necessity of close application to study. But it is certainly very unsatisfactory to adduce the example of men who were favored with such wonderful advantages and graces, in support of the position that men need not now study for the ministry. An intimate knowledge of the ancient languages in which the Scriptures were written, and the customs, rites, and ceremonies of those times, is as necessary to success in the ministry now, as it was in the days of the apostles. This the apostles had, when they were first called to be apostles, but the student in divinity now has them to learn, and he may congratulate himself on his good success if he can be pronounced a tolerable classical scholar in half a dozen years of close application. He will still need his full three years course of study in the theological seminary, in imitation of the three years course of the apostles under the personal instructions of their Divine Lord. It has been well said, that Christ himself has expressed his opposition to an unlearned ministry, by teaching them himself. An it is certain, that after his ascension, when he came to choose an apostle for the immediate work, who had not been under his personal instructions, he chose a learned man, and thus evinced his purpose, that those who should be invested with the sacred office should be learned men. This newly-elected apostle having been educated at one of the best seminaries then in existence, and read in the law beyond most of his countrymen, was prepared, on his being divinely illuminated, to enter at once upon the work of preaching the gospel. His superior scholarship, in all that pertained to the science and literature of his age, as well as in all that pertained to the science of salvation, appears abundantly evinced in his numerous epistles.

It is sometimes said, that if an illiterate man is urgently impressed with the duty of preaching the gospel, let him go immediately about it, and God will give him such endowments and graces as shall qualify him for his work. That God can do this, is not denied; but it is certain that there is no evidence that he ever has done it, much less any intimation that he ever will. But an attentive examination of the Scriptures of the New Testament, and also of the early history of the Christian church, may help to decide this question more satisfactorily. The example of Christ, the Great Head of the Church, has been seen; and now, what is the testimony of the apostles? Did they expect that their successors in office, in all time to come, would be illiterate men? Perhaps no man ever insisted more strenuously upon an educated ministry, and upon ministers accustoming themselves to studious habits, than did the apostle Paul. Timothy seems to have been a student of the apostle, and is most affectionately exhorted "to hold fast the form of sound doctrine" heard from his instruction. 2 Tim. 1: 13, 2: 2, 3: 10, 14. "Till I come, give attention to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine." 1 Tim. 4: 13. Again, the Apostle commands him, with paternal authority and tenderness, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." 2 Tim. 2: 15. Again, in enumerating the qualifications of a bishop, the apostle says, "He must be a lover of hospitality, a lover of good men, sober, temperate, holding fast the faithful word, as he hath been taught, that he may be able, by sound doctrine, both to exhort and to convince gainsayers." Tit. 1: 9. It is not to be expected that, in the commotions of a great religious revolution, such as christianity was then producing, seminaries of learning, destined to educate candidates for the Christian priesthood, could be immediately established. Hence such candidates must be educated under the supervision of the settled pastors of the churches, much in the same manner as was the custom in the Congregational Churches of New England till within the last half century. Yet so soon as the church had gained sufficient strength, and sufficient quietude, to admit of her doing so, she proceeded to found her seminaries. According to Jerome, one was established at Alexandria, by St. Mark. To that celebrated school, repaired multitudes of young candidates for the ministry, to listen to the lectures of those eminent teachers, Pantænus, Clement, and Origen. For more than three centuries it continued to send forth streams that watered and refreshed the then domain of the church. Mosheim tells us, that St. John founded a school at Ephesus, and there spent the last years of his life, in qualifying young men for the ministry. Though it is quite probable, that the ancient theological seminaries were founded by the eminent apostles named by the historians, yet it may be admitted, that perhaps, the evidence is not sufficient to place the matter beyond a doubt. Be this as it may, it is certain that they were founded before the close of the first century of the Christian era. The early fathers of the church established similar schools at different points. One was established at Smyrna, over which the distinguished Polycarp presided. There was also another at Antioch, another at Nicomedia, &c. This is a mere glance only at the evidence that may be deduced from Scripture, and from the early founders of the church, in favor of an educated ministry, but it is quite unnecessary to produce more. It is not a little surprising, in view of these facts, accessible to all, that men are found who will appeal to the example of the apostles, and the practice of the primitive church, to sustain the custom of ordaining uneducated men.

In this connection, one other fact should not be overlooked. No great reformation has ever taken place in the church that did not originate with learned men. Luther was an accurate scholar; as extensively versed in the literature and sciences of his times as any of his contemporaries. His immediate and most efficient co-laborers were the learned Melancthon, Carolostadt, and others scarcely inferior to these. Knox, the great champion of Presbyterianism, and Wesley, the great champion of Methodism, and their coädjutors, were men of eminent learning, as well as piety. The same is true in every great movement made for the upbuilding of Zion. Unlearned men have always proved themselves unequal to the task of conducting the church through those revolutions, designed to purge her from her errors and corruptions. It is also to be observed, at the present time, that those denominations are the most prosperous and are gaining fastest in influence in our country, that are most careful in providing for an educated ministry. Those who were formerly indifferent in relation to an educated clergy, but have more recently awoke to its importance, are experiencing its vivifying effects in the increased prosperity of their churches, and in the widening of their influence.

Thus it is believed, that the first objection has been fairly answered, and successfully refuted, from the uniform practice of the church, both Jewish and Christian, through a period of four thousand years—a practice ordered and sanctioned by the Great Head of the church.

THE THREE HOMES.

"Where is thy home?" I asked a child,
Who, in the morning air,
Was twining flowers most sweet and wild
In garlands for her hair;
"My home," the happy heart replied,
And smiled in childish glee,
"Is on the sunny mountain side,
Where soft winds wander free."
Oh! blessings fall on artless youth,
And all its rosy hours,
When every word is joy and truth,
And treasures live in flowers!

"Where is thy home?" I asked of one
Who bent with flushing face,
To hear a warrior's tender tone
In the wild wood's secret place;
She spoke not, but her varying cheek
The tale might well impart;
The home of her young spirit meek
Was in a kindred heart.
Ah! souls that well might soar above,
To earth will fondly cling,
And build their hopes on human love,
That light and fragile thing.

"Where is thy home, thou lonely man?"
I asked a pilgrim gray,
Who came, with furrowed brow, and wan,
Slow musing on his way;
He paused, with solemn mein
Upturned his holy eyes:
"The land I seek thou ne'er hast seen,
My home is in the skies!"
O! blest—thrice blest! the heart must be,
To whom such thoughts are given,
That walks from worldly fetters free;
Its only home is Heaven! [Englishman's Mag.

LONDON BOY THIEVES.

The London Morning Chronicle has for some time been publishing the results of investigations, by agents of its own, respecting the condition and habits of the lower classes in that metropolis. Many of its articles, full, astounding, and heart-rending, we have read with a melancholy interest. A short time since, the young thieves and vagabonds, were invited to meet one of the agents at a public school room. The object was to ascertain, if possible, the home influences that were daily brought to bear upon those children. Here is an account of the meeting. About 150 of the young reprobates attended.

At first their behavior was very noisy and disorderly, but before the close they became peaceable and even respectful in their demeanor. Nineteen had fathers and mothers still living; thirty-nine had only one parent; and eighty were orphans in the fullest sense of the word, having neither father nor mother alive. Of professed beggars there were fifty, and sixty-six who acknowledge themselves to be habitual thieves. The announcement that the greater number present were thieves, pleased them exceedingly, and was received "with three rounds of applause."

When it was announced that one, though only nineteen years of age, had been in prison as many as twenty-nine times, the clapping of hands, the catcalls, and shouts of "bravo," lasted for several minutes, and the whole of the boys rose to look at the distinguished individual. Some chalked on their hats the figures which designated the sum of the several times that they had been in jail.

The boys were interrogated as to their manner of life, &c., and their answers should be read by all who are engaged in the work of ragged schools. Our limited space will not allow of much extract.

A lad about twenty was about to volunteer a statement concerning the lodging-houses, by which he declared he had been brought to his ruin, but he was instantly assailed with cries of "Come down!" "Hold your tongue!"—and these became so general, and were in so menacing a tone, that he said he was afraid to make any disclosures, because he believed if he did so he would have, perhaps, two or three dozen of the other chaps on to him. (Great confusion.)

The agent of the Chronicle. "Will it hurt any of you here, if he says any thing against the lodging houses?" (Yes, yes.) "How will it do so?"

A voice. "They will not allow stolen property to come into them, if it is told."

Agent. "But would you not all gladly quit your present course of life?" (Yes, yes, yes.) "Then why not have the lodging-house system, the principal cause of all your misery, exposed?"

A voice. "If they shut up the lodging-houses, where are we to go? If a poor boy gets to the workhouse he catches a fever, and is starved into the bargain."

Agent. "Are you not all tired of the life you now lead?" (Vociferous cries of "Yes, yes; we wish to better ourselves," from all parts of the room.) "However much you may dread the exposure of the lodging-houses, you know, my lads, as well as I do, that it is in them you meet your companions, and ruin, if not begun there, is at least completed in such places. If a boy runs away from home, he is encouraged there and kept secreted from his parents. And do not the parties who keep these places grow rich on your degradation and your peril?" (Loud cries of "Yes, yes.") "Then why don't you all come forward now, and by exposing them to the public, who know nothing of the iniquities and vice practiced in such places, put an end to these dens at once? There is not one of you here—not one at least of the older boys—who has found out the mistake of his present life, who would not, I verily believe, become honest, and earn his living by his industry, if he could. You might have thought a roving life a pleasant thing enough at first, but you now know that a vagabond's life is full of suffering, care, peril, and privations; you are not so happy as you thought you would be, and are tired and disgusted with your present course. This is what I hear from you all. Am I not stating the fact?" (Renewed cries of "Yes, yes, yes;" and a voice: "The fact of it is, sir, we do n't see our folly till it is too late.") "Now I and many hundreds and thousands really wish you well, and would gladly do anything we could to get you to earn an honest living. All, or nearly all of your misery, I know, proceeds from the low lodging-houses—" ("Yes, yes, it does, master! it does,") "and I am determined, with your help, to effect their utter destruction." (A voice: "I am glad of it, sir—you are quite right; and I pray God to assist you.") The elder boys were then asked what they thought would be the best mode of effecting their deliverance from their present degraded position. Some thought emigration the best means, for if they started afresh in a new colony, they said, they would leave behind them their bad characters, which closed every avenue to employment against them at home. Others thought there would be difficulties in obtaining work in the colonies in sufficient time to prevent their being driven to support themselves by their old practices. Many again thought the temptations which surrounded them in England rendered their reformation impossible; whilst many more considered that the same temptations would assail them abroad which existed at home.

During the course of the proceedings one of the most desperate characters present, a boy who had been twenty-six times in prison, was singled out from the rest, and a sovereign given him to get changed, in order to make the experiment whether he would have the honesty to return the change or abscond with it in his possession. He was informed, on receiving it, that if he chose to decamp with it no proceedings should be taken against him. He left the room amid the cheers of his companions, and when he had been absent a few moments all eyes were turned towards the door each time it opened, anxiously expecting his return to prove his trustworthiness. Never was such interest displayed by any body of individuals. Many mounted the forms in their eagerness to obtain the first glimpse of his return. It was clear that their honor was at stake; and several said they would kill the lad in the morning if he made away with the money. Many minutes elapsed in almost breathless suspense, and some of his companions began to say that so large a sum had proved too great a temptation for the boy. At last, however, a tremendous burst of cheering announced the lad's return. The delight of his companions broke forth again and again in long and loud peals of applause, and the youth advanced amidst triumphant shouts to the platform, and gave up the money in full.

A MISSIONARY CHURCH ITS OWN WITNESS.

A letter from Mr. Oncken, dated Feb. 13, notices the death of Mr. Langê, a beloved fellow laborer, the first fruit of his labors in Hamburg, who "fell asleep" Nov. 19, after having been laid aside, by severe illness, for more than two years. He left a widow, one of the six original members baptized by Dr. Sears, of whom Mr. O. speaks in the highest terms of praise, and five children, poor and in need of assistance.

We have heard an authentic anecdote, which well illustrates the character not only of this excellent woman, but of the mass of those who have embraced Christ under Mr. Oncken's ministry. A physician in Hamburg, of infidel sentiments, who is connected with a Socialist paper, met Mr. Oncken one day, and asked him:

"Mr. Oncken, what do you do to your people, I should like to know, that makes them so singular?"

"Nothing, but to expound the Scriptures, and explain the truths of the Gospel."

"That cannot be all. I know nothing about your Gospel, but I have to go about among a great many poor people, and there are none in Hamburg like yours. They are so neat and cheerful, so intelligent and respectful, their houses are so orderly, and they take such care of their children, that the moment I enter a house I know whether the family are of your congregation. There are none like them."

"Do you know Mrs. Langê?" said Mr. Oncken.

"Mrs. Langê!" he exclaimed, "Mrs. Langê! that angel of a woman! How patient and cheerful! And how admirably she manages her family!"

The physician went away, thinking that this was a very mysterious business, but was so impressed with what he had seen and heard, that he wrote and published a leading article in his paper advocating the fullest toleration for the Baptists of Hamburg, on account of the beneficial influence of the church.

It is thus that the Gospel vindicates itself in the persons of those who are the subjects of its divine energy. It is not easy to estimate the power exerted by a church like that at Hamburg, now numbering about five hundred members, not so much by direct exertion, as by the silent, insensible influence of its members in their daily lives. Not that this is peculiar to that church, or to that city. It is one of the universal fruits and undeniable evidences of the truth of the Gospel, wherever it is preached and believed. [Macedonian.

Heart-rending Mortality!—We do not remember having ever been pained to record a more heart-touching instance of mortality than is afforded in the following notice, copied from a Baltimore paper; eight children taken from one family in less than a month, and by the same disease!

NEW TRANSLATION.

Considerable agitation has been had among our First-day Baptist brethren in regard to the expediency of putting into circulation, under the auspices of the American and Foreign Bible Society, a revised translation of the Scriptures. We do not intend to take any part in this controversy; but we must be permitted to say, that—believing the inspiration of the Scriptures to reside in the Hebrew and Greek originals—we are not among those who hold the common version in such veneration as to think that it cannot be improved. That it is an excellent one, none will deny; but that it contains some errors, every scholar will admit. Some, it is true, will say that these errors do not affect the fundamentals of Christianity. But this is rather a loose way of talking. There is not an item of divine revelation, which stands so completely by itself, that it has no connection with the rest. It may seem not to be related to any fundamental point, but the want of connection is, generally, more in our own minds than in reality. As the range of our intellectual vision becomes widened, we discover connections which, before, were quite concealed; and the Divine Mind, doubtless, sees a connection between what we call essentials and non-essentials, and knows that false views in regard to the latter will lead to errors in regard to the former, as soon as the understanding becomes sufficiently enlarged to push premises to their legitimate conclusions. It is evident, therefore, that a person of great intellectual powers, embracing fundamental heresy, might render available to the defense of his heresy some erroneously translated passage of the Bible, which those of smaller intellect had, heretofore, supposed to have no bearing upon any thing essential. If it be unlawful to call in question the received translation, this teacher of error is invulnerable. He stands fortified by what all admit to be the Word of God. But if we are furnished with a correct translation of the passage which he has availed himself of, he no longer wears the appearance of being clad with heavenly armor. One of his props is taken away, at any rate, and the controversy with him is, consequently, reduced to narrower limits. And we think that it will be found to be true of most, if not of all the controversies that agitate the Christian community, that one party or the other presses into his service some faulty renderings of Scripture, thus widening the field of debate unnecessarily, and retarding the day when party divisions shall cease.

That a new translation, got up under the auspices of any one sect of Christians, should succed in displacing the received version from general use, it were little short of madness to expect. What then shall be done? Our plan would be something like this: Let a Convention be called for the purpose. Let this Convention be composed of all religious denominations, not only of those usually termed orthodox, but of those who are some times called heterodox. Let each denomination be represented by such as are confessedly the most learned in its ranks. To render the enterprise as complete as possible, let the representations be from England as well as from America; from every province, indeed, where the English is the prevailing language. Let the Convention then resolve, that such amendments of the present translation shall be adopted, as they can unanimously concur in, and that where there is any objection whatever to the adoption of a proposed amendment, such amendment shall be rejected, and the common translation shall remain as it is.

Some may think that a translation, with only such amendments, would hardly be worth the trouble and expense of bringing it about. But we think differently. For, though there would still remain many passages, about which there would be conflicting views as to the translation, still many faulty renderings would be remedied, and, as far as these faulty renderings had lent a collateral support to errorists, the controversy with them would be brought within narrower limits. What learned man, of any denomination, would object to rendering the Greek term diatheke by the word covenant? Yet it is well known, that the term is, in several places, rendered testament. In Heb. 9:15—20, it is so rendered, to the manifest obscurity of the idea which the writer intended to convey. We venture the assertion, that no mere English reader gets a correct understanding of the passage from the common translation. The rendering of the whole passage, indeed, needs to be remodeled. Translated as it ought to be, no person could fail to see the clearness and consistency of the writer's argument. As it is, all is obscure. The term diatheke occurs some twenty times in the New Testament, and is uniformly rendered covenant, except in the history of the institution of the Supper, and in 2 Cor. 3:6, and in Heb. 7:22. But is there any good reason why the term should not always be rendered by the same English word? Does not such variation tend to confusion? But this fault of rendering the same Greek word by different English terms, is much more common in the ordinary translation than is generally supposed. In the passage, "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal," (Matt. 25:46,) the words everlasting and eternal answer to the same term in the original—aionion. Why, then, were two different terms used in the translation? Our translators may have considered the two terms perfectly synonymous; but some, in more modern times, have fancied a shade of difference in their signification. Everlasting has been supposed to be a word not quite so strong in its signification as eternal; and hence, in discussions of the doctrine of universal salvation, the argument which this text furnishes for the eternity of future punishment, has been somewhat shorn of its strength. But we hazard the opinion, that no learned teacher, of the Universalist persuasion, would object to the word aionion being rendered uniformly by the same term; and, upon the supposition that there are other passages of Scripture similarly circumstanced, it is easy to see that such amended translations of them as might be unanimously concurred in, might have the effect to bring the controversy upon this important subject within more contracted limits. And, certainly, the narrower the limits within which a controversy is brought, the more flattering is the promise that it will soon be brought to a close.

On the whole, we should be glad to see a new translation of the Bible brought into use. But such a translation ought not to be the work of any one denomination of Christians; it ought to be the undertaking of entire Christendom. Till it can be brought about in some such way as we have proposed, we shall be content to use the good old version of King James, believing it to be the best extant, and better than any one denomination would be likely to produce.

"A COLLEGE—PRACTICAL VIEW."

An article in the Recorder of April 18th, with the above caption, makes some strictures on the educational resolutions of the last Conference. If the views entertained by the Conference had been correctly set forth in those strictures, no reply would have been called for. But the brother labors under a misapprehension. Had he been present, and heard the discussion on the resolution that he quotes, and others pertaining to education, he would, it is believed, have had no occasion to oppose them. Those resolutions were not adopted hastily, nor inconsiderately, as would seem to be the opinion entertained by the brother, from the comparisons with which he starts off. They were thoroughly and deliberately discussed, by the oldest and wisest heads, both among the clergy and lay brethren—by men whose years and experience entitle their opinions to consideration—by men who are accustomed to foresee some, at least, of "the preliminary contingencies"—by men to whom we have been accustomed to look for counsel in promoting our various interests as a denomination. Others, of less experience and less favorably known, participated to a limited extent in those discussions, but their influence was small, except as it coincided with their elder brethren.

It was seen, that the founding of a College and Theological Seminary must be a work of time; that the denomination, as yet, had not probably felt the want of such an institution; that funds were not abundant for founding it; and that we had not a very large number of youth to resort to it, if founded. But, at the same time, it was felt, that to neglect to improve on what we have, and to anticipate, to some extent, the future, would be the surest way to keep our denomination as at the present. It was urged, that the time had fully come when a beginning should be made. It was stated, by brethren who were supposed to know, that many young men who were looking forward to the ministry, in various parts of the denomination, were anxious for theological instruction. It was believed to be expedient to take measures for raising a sufficient fund to support at least one theological professor, who might, perhaps, be connected with some one of our academies, and who should take the supervision of the theological education of such young men as might have the ministry in view. This would constitute a nucleus around which, in process of time, to build up a College and Theological Seminary, that should do honor to the cause of education in general, and to ourselves as a denomination in particular. This course was regarded as wise, judicious, and practical, and one which the wants of our people, at the present time, called for. It was well known, that many of the most distinguished colleges in the country had had a much more humble origin than this would have. Not far from one hundred and fifty years ago, there assembled in the study of an old-fashioned clergyman at Saybrook, a small number of ministers of the colony, and, as each laid upon a table in the center of the room a few volumes selected from his own scanty library, he pronounced these words, "I give these books towards founding a College in this colony!" From that very humble origin the renowned Yale arose to occupy a front rank among American Colleges. A beginning was required; it was made, without waiting to make all the people feel the want of the institution proposed, or till wealth and population had sufficiently increased to insure an immediate endowment and an extensive patronage. And thus our brethren at the Conference intended to take a "practical view" of the educational wants of the denomination, and to adopt such preliminary measures as should ultimately secure the permanent endowment of an institution of a high order. They did not hope for the consummation of so desirable an object in one, five, or perhaps ten years; but they did believe, that a beginning might, nay, ought now to be made. They did not suppose that they had the wisdom to foresee all the contingencies, and to provide in advance for the numerous obstacles, that would necessarily arise in accomplishing so great a work. They did not intend to adopt any hasty plans of action. However desirable the speedy organization of a theological class might be, it was proposed to take ample time to ascertain the wishes of all parts of the denomination, and secure the largest coöperation. Hence the request for the Associations to appoint committees to act in concert with the one appointed by the Conference.

This much briefly to justify the doings of Conference from the charge of heedlessness and inconsiderateness, embraced in the several comparisons in the first half of our brother's article. What is meant by the "one whistle" that our denomination has purchased, is not quite evident, and therefore its pertinency to the question is not clearly perceived. Again, the article contains other statements which, however conscientiously expressed, seem to do injustice to the advocates of a College. The amount of funds for founding and endowing a College is, doubtless, stated correctly at $150,000. And "cool deliberation" will say, that such a sum might be raised in the course of ten or twenty years, at most, without "embarrassing our movements in other matters." It is to be presumed, that no one ever contemplated that these funds could be raised at once. The founding of a College, as above indicated, is a great enterprise, and must be a progressive work. Hence the propriety of commencing early, and pushing the project deliberately, carefully, and judiciously, to a successful issue. But it is again said, that "with all this outlay, we have not laid aside a dollar to aid an indigent young man or young woman in his or her struggle for knowledge." And does not the endowment of a College lay aside $100,000 for that very purpose? The tuition fees in our Colleges constitute a heavy item in the expenses of a student—amounting to from thirty to fifty dollars per annum. But the endowment of $100,000, the income from which shall be devoted to sustain the professors, would make a free College, at least to all students sent by donors, or to all whose pecuniary circumstances should require free tuition. This would be laying aside for the benefit of the indigent quite a handsome sum indeed.

"But suppose the college endowed, and each professor in his chair," "comparatively few of our youth can now be induced to take even a thorough academic course; how many would add a college course?" Let it be observed, that the average number of Seventh-day Baptist students in all our academies, is now not less than two hundred; and though the number who take, or are taking, a thorough academic course, is not very large, yet it is large enough to be very encouraging; and many others are spending six months, or a year, or more, in such a course, and are thus having their sympathies and interests enlisted in favor of a higher education. Thus our academies are doing a great and good work. The process is slow, silent, and unobtrusive, yet it is efficient. Now let it be asked, how many of our youth attended academies previous to the organization of our own? Not many. And do but very few of our youth go from our academies to college? It is fair to presume, that they never will, till we have a college of our own. Say what we will of the advantages that other colleges hold out to our youth, there are insuperable barriers in the way, to prevent any considerable numbers of our youth availing themselves of such advantages. Parents are not so far interested in the institutions of other denominations, as often to persuade their sons to attend them; nor are our churches likely often to advise their young men of promise and talent to attend those institutions. The experience of other denominations confirms the assertion, that while destitute of a college ourselves, we need not expect to have many graduates. The Baptists and Methodists of this country had not many while they had no colleges of their own. It were as proper to expect that the children of a given town would be generally educated, while the town is destitute of primary schools, as to expect many thoroughly educated men in a denomination that has no college. And it were as wise to hope that a denomination thus destitute, would take an honored position among the denominations of the land, as to expect such a town to wield a mighty influence in the councils of a nation.

Again, "judging from the past, what number of the twenty or thirty Seventh-day Baptists who have set out for a college course, will elude the snares of Hymen long enough to be crowned with bacheloric honors." Perhaps not many of them. And if this admission prove true, it will be because snares of greater potency than those of matrimony will be laid for them. The great snare to be dreaded in preventing our youth from completing a full course of studies, is not that of matrimony, but the persuasions of our brethren. We are confessedly deficient in the number of educated men among us, and ere a young man has half finished the course of education marked out for him, he is pointed to some important vacancy, in a school, or in a church, or in a mission field, and is urged, with a pertinacity that will seemingly take no denial, to supply such vacancy. Feeling his own incompetency, he at first resists the temptation, but argument after argument is added to induce him to yield. The circumstances are peculiar; the vacancy ought to be immediately filled; and no other man can be obtained that is equally qualified for the place. He need not abandon his studies. He can now get along for a time very well without an instructor, and, by and by, if thought advisable, he can get a release for a few months, and attend college long enough to graduate. He is now struggling with poverty, and the situation will, at least, give him a competency. He is already encumbered with some debts, and now there is a chance to free himself from these, and once more be an independent man. He is conquered; he yields; and soon he is fairly immersed in the busy world of action, and would now be much to be censured, indeed, if he did not get married. This is the short of the whole story. Say not, then, that he was ensnared with matrimony, but by the mistaken kindness and mistaken zeal of his brethren. Oh, it is sad to see so many noble-hearted and self-sacrificing young men, of fine talents, diverted from their well-laid plans, and their future life very much circumscribed, by this erroneous policy. But we may rely upon the continuation of this policy, so long as we are deficient in the means of a higher education. The demand for educated men in the denomination is already much greater than the supply, and the disparity must continually increase till we provide such means of education at home. "We have no election." If we would, we can not avoid the issue. An educational interest among our people has been awakened, strong, steady, firm; and that interest is demanding some educational provisions in advance of any thing hitherto furnished.

Once more, the potency of a "thorough college, of long standing, in the formation of literary character," is conceded. But let it not be forgotten, that all old colleges were once young, and that what young colleges sometimes lack in the quantity of brick and mortar, in the extent of library and apparatus, &c., and in the number of students, is frequently much more than made up by the energy and efficiency of their professors.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

Inquiries are occasionally made respecting the operations and plans of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society, in answer to which the Corresponding Secretary and General Agent begs leave to make the following statements.

1. The Society was organized in May, 1849, by the adoption of the Constitution prepared by delegates from the several Associations. The officers provided for in that Constitution were then duly elected, and at once entered upon the discharge of their duties. Their first business was to arrange with the Committee under whose direction the Sabbath Recorder had formerly been published, for a transfer of its subscription list to the Society. This was soon accomplished to mutual satisfaction, and the Society became the owner of the Recorder, and assumed its publication, with the commencement of the sixth volume, in June, 1849. Subsequently, the officers of the Society purchased from the Committee all the old accounts of the Recorder, and thus took the whole business upon their hands. The General Agent was instructed to make it his first aim, during the year, (besides continuing the paper,) to collect the money subscribed towards a Publishing Fund, and to settle the old accounts as far as possible. This he has endeavored to do, and at the close of the first year of the Society's operations, a full report will be prepared for presentation at the second annual meeting.

2. At the first meeting of the Society, in May last, the time and place of holding the next meeting was referred to the Board. In view of the difficulty of obtaining a full attendance in May ensuing, and of the advantages of holding the meeting after the volume of the Recorder is completed, the Board have decided that the second annual meeting shall be held at Alfred, N. Y., in September next, being the time and place of the anniversaries of our Missionary and Tract Societies.

3. The Board have under consideration a plan for publishing, at an early day, a History of the Seventh-day Baptist Denomination, and a series of books and a periodical designed to promote the interests of Sabbath Schools among us, &c.

4. It is important that all those who have subscribed, or desire to subscribe, to make themselves members of the Society, should forward the amount before the close of the year on the 14th day of June, 1850, so that the report to be made out at that time may include a complete list of members. It is also important, that those indebted to the establishment for papers previous to the close of vol. 5, should remit what is due, so that the Agent may be saved the necessity of reporting them as delinquent.

Wills made on Sunday.—A case was recently decided by Judge Lewis, of Pennsylvania, which involved a question as to the validity of a will made on Sunday. The decision of the Court was, first, that a will made on Sunday, while the testator was in danger of immediate death, or entertained a well-grounded belief that such danger existed, is valid; and, second, that if a will was made on Sunday, under no such pressure, the Court would, in the absence of proof, presume that circumstances of necessity existed to justify the act.

The Rights of Churches in Matters of Discipline.—A trial is now before the Supreme Court of Massachusetts which involves the question whether a clergyman has the right from the pulpit to charge with crime any one of the congregation, even though the church directs to do so in the administration of the church discipline. The case is that of a woman, who was read out of church because suspected of a violation of the seventh commandment. The action is for damages for a libel.

[The Court has decided, in the above case, that there is no ground of action, the alledged offense being only a proper statement of facts, in a proper and usual manner.]

A CHRISTIAN SLAVE MOTHER.

Several weeks ago we published some account of a handsome and intelligent slave girl, named Emily Russell, who was confined in the prison of Messrs. Bruin & Hill, at Washington, while her mother, Mrs. Cartwright, was making an effort to raise money to purchase her freedom. The effort to redeem her failed, and the poor girl was sent off to a southern market. It seems, however, that the Almighty interposed to release her from the grasp of avarice and the touch of pollution, by taking her to that land where the distinction between servant and master is unknown. The Independent gives the following touching account of the manner in which this news was received by the Christian slave mother:—

"When she was finally compelled to give up all hope of redeeming her beloved daughter from the dreadful doom to which she had been sold, and when she learned that the coffle had actually departed for the South, the hopeless mother drooped like a stricken woman; she no longer lifted up her head, or took a part in the privileges of life. Her mind was with that daughter—'gone, gone, sold and gone'—on her weary way to her dreadful destiny. At length, one day, our informant called on her. 'Have you heard any thing from my daughter?' 'Yes, I have,' was the reply, 'a letter from Bruin & Hill.' 'And what is the news?' The friend thought best to give a direct answer—'Emily is dead.' The mother immediately lifted up her eyes and raised her hand toward heaven and exclaimed—'Thank the Lord; this is what I have prayed for, most earnestly, that if she could not be liberated, she might die before she reached the market.' She said she considered it an answer to her prayers; and that she had all along felt a confidence that God would not lay on her a burden she could not bear. He had been so good to her at all times, that she had still trusted in him; and he did not deceive her hope. Here she recounted some of the leading events of her life to show what God had done for her, in every exigency. She is distinguished for the habit of referring all events to the hand of God, 'who doeth all things well.'"

Funeral Processions on Sunday.—Scarcely a Sunday passes without our seeing large funeral processions pass through the streets of New York, preceded by bands of music, and followed by crowds of idle men and boys. On Sunday last there was a grand procession, got up in honor of a fireman who recently lost his life in the discharge of his duty. It consisted of the whole fire department, and one company of United Americans, to say nothing of the vast throng that lined the streets, and the countless gazers from windows and balconies along the line of march. While the procession was in motion, all the fire alarm bells tolled, and the numerous bands played dirges suited to the occasion. No doubt such a pageant is a very fitting recognition of the heroism of the fallen fireman. But we thought, while looking upon it, that the sticklers for "the sacred stillness" of the Sunday, might find here a much better field to display their valor, than in hunting up ragged newsboys or unobtrusive Sabbath-keepers.

Voting Thanks to God.—The editor of the Rochester Daily Advertiser says, that although it has become the custom in this country to vote thanks under almost all circumstances, he never knew of an organized meeting passing a formal vote of thanks to God until quite recently, when, at the close of the funeral exercises of Rev. Dr. Adams, of Syracuse, a meeting of the clergy was held, and a resolution passed, "that thanks are due to the Great Head of the Church, that our departed brother was enabled to give triumphant testimony to the sustaining power of that Gospel which, for a quarter of a century, he had been proclaiming." The Evening Post, however, says "this is not the first time that such a thing has been done. After the steamer Great Western had passed through a terrible blow, a year or two since, Drs. Cox, Balch, and other clergymen who were on board, passed a resolution that 'their gratitude was due to Almighty God and the Captain' for their deliverance."

Sunday Travel in Pennsylvania.—The stopping of Sunday trains on the Pennsylvania railroad has given rise to a sharp controversy among the stockholders upon the subject. A letter from Philadelphia, written on Sunday last, says: "The vote yesterday on the Sunday travel question was for daily lines 114 stockholders, 1,463 shares, against 52 stockholders, 584 shares—a majority of 879 shares for daily lines. Majorities thus far for daily lines, 368 stockholders, 4,490 shares. To-morrow is the last day of voting."

Jewish Missionaries.—The Natchez (Mississippi) Courier notices the sojourn in that city of Nessim Bar Shemalah, one of a party of Jewish missionaries, who left Persia to travel and raise money in different parts of the world, to liberate a large body of their brethren, including some Christians, said to amount to twenty-thousand souls, who are at present held in slavery in the Persian empire, and who can only be liberated by the payment of a ransom.

Embarkation of Missionaries.—On the 13th of March, Mr. John Adams Butler, formerly of South Boston, and Mrs. Butler, of Chelsea, Mass., sailed from Boston in the bark Hamilton, Captain Hurd, for Cape Town, whence they will proceed to Port Natal to join the South African Mission. Mr. Butler is expected to take charge of the press, and thus permit Mr. Wilder to give himself wholly to the work of the ministry.

The First Steamboat.—How few of the strangers visiting this great commercial emporium, are aware, as they pass in front of the Halls of Justice, in Centre Street, that they are upon the identical spot where once a pond existed upon which was set in motion the first steamboat! Yet such is the fact. In 1793, John Fitch put in operation the first steamboat propelled by wheels or screws, upon a pond then existing, called "Collect Pond," which, in extent, was about equal to the four blocks each way from the corner of Centre and Leonard Streets, and about 60 feet deep. The boat was about the size of a ship's yawl, 18 feet long by 6 feet wide. The boiler was an iron pot of 10 or 12 gallons, with a cover of plank; and the engine had a cylinder of wood strongly hooped with iron. The screw and the wheel, the present rival instruments of propulsion, here had their beginning together, for they were applied to the same boat, and upon this pond. Truly a small beginning for so vast an application of steam to navigation as now we see upon the waters of the whole earth. T.

A Great Gift.—A correspondent of the Western Christian Advocate says that "God has given the valley of the Mississippi to the Methodists—this is now indirectly, though most plainly, conceded by those who owe no good will to Methodism." Our will is very good toward Methodism, and we should be happy to concede its right to the Western Valley as a gift from God, if proper evidence were furnished. But when we think of the fighting, gambling, slavery, and other forms of wickedness, which prevail there, we are inclined to think that the personage who offered to our Savior "all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them," has not yet relinquished his claim to a large share of that territory.

The Opium Trade in China.—An essay on the opium trade between India and China, has recently been published in Boston. It was written by Nathan Allen, M. D., of Lowell, and embodies some astonishing facts communicated to him by a near relative who is laboring as a missionary in the East. It appears that the trade, which is comparatively recent in its origin, will reach this year about 60,000 chests, each containing from 125 to 140 lbs., and averaging in value $550 per chest, or in all $32,000,000, which is all, or nearly all, to be paid in "sycee silver," making a drain of specie from the Chinese treasury which no other people could bear, especially when we remember that during the last half century four hundred millions of dollars, in specie, have evaporated from the nation in opium smoke. This immense sum has mostly gone into the pockets of the English, through the medium of the East India Company, who have a large monopoly in the growth of opium. It is said that the clear profit of the British government from the smuggled and contraband sale of opium to the Chinese, for the last year, has reached the very handsome sum of $15,487,000.

Bibles and Tracts in Italy.—The Executive Committee of the American and Foreign Christian Union have issued an appeal, calling the attention of the Christian public to the facilities now afforded for the circulation of Bibles, tracts, and other religious works, in Italy. Italians who have renounced the Papacy are ready to engage in this work; and in almost every town of Italy are now employed in the distribution of fly-sheets assailing the Papal system with facts, history, arguments, and apt quotations of Scripture, which produce a powerful impression on the masses of the people. The appeal says, that already the cities of Italy are well indoctrinated with anti-Papal sentiments; and her leading patriots are convinced that the country can be emancipated only by a thorough religious reformation. Now is emphatically the seed-time for truth in Italy.

Manorial Trial.—A trial has recently been held at Hudson, N. Y., to test the validity of the patents by which the Livingstons hold their Manor on the banks of the Hudson River. After occupying nearly two weeks in the investigation of the case, the parties agreed to settle the difficulty by referring the whole subject, the fact of possession as well as the legal points, to the decision of a special court to be held for the purpose at Albany, commencing on the 27th of May.

Sabbath Convention at Berlin.—The Sabbath Convention recently held at Peterboro, adjourned to meet at Berlin, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., on the 15th and 16th days of May. It is hoped that the friends of Sabbath Reform will make their arrangements to attend as far as practicable.

Departure of Missionaries.—The bark L. & A. Hobart, which was cleared at Boston, last week, for Malta and Smyrna, took the Rev. E. Bliss, wife and two children, the Rev. H. J. Van Lennep and wife, and Rev. J. W. Parsons and wife, as missionaries to the East.

Dying Words of Mr. Calhoun.—An authentic report of the last words of Mr. Calhoun, in the Charleston Mercury, states that a few hours before his death, he uttered the following remarks:—

"I cannot avoid thinking of the political affairs of the country. If I could have but one hour to speak in the Senate, I could do more good than on any previous occasion of my life."

General Intelligence.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. SECOND-DAY, April 22.

After the presentation of petitions, and the transaction of morning business, an animated debate took place on Mr. Benton's motion, instructing the Select Committee to report separately on the resolutions of Mr. Clay and Mr. Bell, which were referred to them. Mr. Clay, Mr. Benton, Mr. Cass, and Mr. Borland, participated in the debate. Mr. Benton's motion was finally laid on the table.

The Senate bill providing for making treaties with the Indians in Oregon, and extinguishing the Indian title to lands west of the Cascade Mountains, was then taken up and passed.

House of Representatives.

A motion to suspend the rules of the House for the introduction of Mr. Conger's resolution, instructing the Committee on the Post Office to report a bill reducing postage and abolishing the franking privilege, failed.

A long and exciting debate then arose on Mr. Richardson's asking leave to introduce his resolutions of inquiry concerning the alledged payment of certain rejected claims, by Mr. Ewing, Secretary of the Interior. The resolution was adopted; yeas 95, noes 73.

Mr. Van Dycke, of N. J., from the minority of the Committee on Elections, made a report in favor of the admission of the Delegate from New Mexico to a seat in the House.

In Senate. THIRD-DAY, April 23.

Mr. Webster gave notice that after next week he would take the earliest opportunity, without interfering with the California bill, to move the Senate to take up his resolution in relation to giving lands to actual settlers.

After the consideration of considerable morning business, the Senate took up the bill for the relief of William Darby, the geographer, which was debated and passed.

The Senate then took up Mr. Bradbury's resolution in relation to removals from office, upon which speeches were made by Messrs. Bradbury, Bell, and Bright.

House of Representatives.

The Committee to investigate the charges against Mr. Ewing were announced, as follows: Messrs. Richardson, Vinton, Brown of Miss., Rockwell, Hall, Evans of Md., Ross, Alston, and Dunham.

Mr. Brown, of Miss., from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported a bill to incorporate the Grand Lodge of the Order of Odd Fellows of the District, and moved to refer it to the Committee of the Whole. A motion to lay it on the table was lost, and the bill was referred.

The California question then came up, upon which Mr. Morehead, of Kentucky, made a southern speech, and Mr. Peck, of Vt., advocated the admission of California, and Governments for the Territories, with the Wilmot Proviso.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, April 24.

A resolution presented by Mr. Webster was then taken up, viz: That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire what measure it may be most expedient to adopt to facilitate and increase the coinage of the United States. Mr. Webster stated, that only a million of coin was allowed to be placed in the Mint to be exchanged for bullion; that there is now in the Mint about eight millions of bullion awaiting coinage, while there is nine million of coin lying idle in the Treasury. He desired some provision for the purchase of bullion, so that it need not be sent out of the country for coinage, to save delay. The resolution passed.

House of Representatives.

A resolution was adopted, instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the expediency of further increasing the Army by raising another regiment of Cavalry, to carry out the treaty stipulations with Mexico, and protect the frontiers.

Mr. Ewing, from the Military Committee, reported a joint resolution, giving constructions to various acts relating to the bounty lands and extra pay to soldiers engaged in the Mexican War, so that honorable discharge may mean any discharge not for dereliction of duty and crime.

The Census Bill was then taken up, and considerable discussion was had between Northern and Southern members—the latter desiring that the bill shall only provide for enumerating the inhabitants, while the former wish to include statistics of the wealth and intelligence of the country.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, April 25.

A report from the Committee on Printing, gave rise to an uninteresting debate, but no vote was taken.

A communication was received from the Secretary of State, in reply to a Senate resolution, calling for information in relation to the barbarous treatment of American seamen, wrecked on the coast of Japan and the Independent Oriental Nation.

House of Representatives.

Three subjects occupied the attention of the House, and led to rather spicy conversation, but no action. First, about office-holders writing political letters. Next, about Mr. Grinnell's Expedition to search for and try to rescue Sir John Franklin and his long-absent crew. Last came the Census Bill, against which a good deal was said by those who are afraid of an exhibition of the comparative education, productive energy, progress and comfort of the Free and the Slave States.

SIXTH-DAY, April 26.

The Senate was not in session.

The House spent the whole day in debating about the expedition in search of Sir John Franklin. The debate was concluded by the adoption of the resolution previously offered by Mr. Stanton, of the Naval Committee, authorizing the President to receive the vessels prepared by Mr. Grinnell, and detail from the navy such commission and warrant officers and seamen as may be necessary and willing to engage therein, supply them with suitable rations for not exceeding three years, and give the use of all necessary instruments as can be spared from the navy—the officers and men in all respects to be under the laws of the navy until their return, when the vessels shall be delivered back to Mr. Grinnell.

The Receivers of the State Bank at Morris, N. J., have advertised to the creditors of the said bank, to bring in their claims within 6 months from the 12th of April.

STEAMBOAT DISASTER ON THE OHIO.

On Monday night, April 22d, the Steamer "Belle of the West," on her way from Cincinnati to St. Louis, was burnt to the water's edge, near Warsaw, Ill., and from fifty to one hundred lives were lost. She had on board one hundred and fifteen registered cabin passengers, not including a number of children attached to families, whose names were not registered, and on deck there were about one hundred emigrants and others, whose names had not been taken down. She was also fully freighted, and had on the luggage and moveables of numbers of emigrants, and some forty or fifty persons on their way to California.

The fire was first discovered in the hold, by the smoke issuing from the aft hatchway, and is supposed to have been occasioned by carelessness in leaving a candle burning. Efforts were made to suppress the flames without giving the alarm, but the fire gained so fast that the officers and crew were compelled to yield to it. The engineer called to the pilot, through the trumpet, to run the boat ashore, which was immediately done, and the alarm was given. The greater portion of the passengers being asleep in their rooms, the officers of the boat rushed into the cabin, into which fire and smoke had already commenced pouring, and those that could not be awakened by the alarm, were dragged from their beds. The doors were burst open; numbers, who were insensible from fright, were carried out by the crew.

The boat was totally enveloped in flames, fore and aft, in less than four minutes, and amid the cracking roar of the consuming fire, the shrieks of the hopeless and the doomed to certain death, were distinctly heard, the voices of men, women and children, mothers, fathers and offspring, mingling in the roar of death and horror.

Many, in the insane fright of the moment, leapt into the water from the hurricane deck, their egress being cut off below, preferring to stem the current of water to the current of flame; others jumped overboard from the guards and the after part of the boat. Some saved themselves by swimming ashore, while others only escaped the fire to perish in the water.

The bow of the boat only struck the shore, the stern swung around, the boat stuck, and the only chance was in reaching the shore by the bow. So great was the rush of deck and cabin passengers, that many were prevented from saving themselves through that channel. Many were jostled and trampled upon, and so rapid was the progress of the flames, that notwithstanding the communication with the shore, it is estimated that not less than from fifty to one hundred passengers perished by fire and water.

ACCIDENTS IN NEW YORK.—On Monday last, two fatal accidents occurred in New York from the falling of walls.

About ten o'clock in the morning, while a number of laborers were at work in the upper part of the old Chemical Bank building on Broadway, removing the walls, and also a number of carpenters engaged below in the work of demolition, some of the props were cut or gave way, and a great portion of the walls and ceilings came down,, burying somewhere about a dozen persons in the wreck. A large number of men immediately went to work to remove the rubbish, and in the course of an hour, took out seven persons, all of whom were badly injured, and two of them probably fatally.

Before these men were extricated, news was received that the walls of No. 33 Water St.. one of the warehouses burnt last week, had also fallen in. It seems that a number of men—variously estimated from seven to eleven—had been engaged since an early hour in the morning, in removing the burnt cotton, and clearing away the ruins of the store, and had made good headway in their work, when suddenly, at about 10½ o'clock, the gable of the building fell over, instantly burying the unfortunate workmen under many feet of brick and mortar. Three of them were taken out before 12 o'clock—one dead, and the other two barely alive.

LIQUOR IN MASSACHUSETTS.—The Legislature of the Bay State has passed an act somewhat increasing the stringency of the enactments heretofore existing against the sale of Intoxicating Liquors, except for medical purposes. The Senate bill was concurred in by the House—Yeas 171; Nays 50; Absent 74. No doubt of Gov. Briggs' signature.

The provisions of this bill engraft upon the present law the "intoxicating" instead of "spirituous" liquors, which may not be sold at retail without license—allow County Commissioners to license the sale of less than twenty-eight gallons at a time for medicinal and mechanical purposes—while at present the Commissioners cannot give anything but a general license to sell for any occasion; and they punish infractions of the present statute by obliging those who violate it to give security, after a third conviction, in a sum not less than $100, and not more than $1,000, that they will obey the State law thereafter.

FATAL EXPLOSION IN A DISTILLERY.—A West India paper gives an account of a fatal explosion on the Hazelymph Estate, in Jamaica. The residents on the estate were suddenly alarmed by the report of what at first appeared to have originated from the discharge of a very heavy piece of ordnance, the sound of which was heard at two miles distance; and on their rushing to the place whence it issued, they were met by a heart-rending scene which baffles all description. A sea of liquid fire met their affrighted view, emerging from which, in a mass of flames, were seen four human beings wrapped in spirits in a state of ignition, and screaming in all the agony which the torments natural to so horrible a situation would produce. On they ran until they reached the river, into which they madly plunged, in the hope of extinguishing the flames, and affording them some relief to their pain. The water certainly did at once quench the fire that was outwardly consuming them, but only to leave them in the consciousness that no hope was left them, and to show to the alarmed spectators the certainty of their fate. The book-keeper, the head distiller, and two coolies, died from the effects of the explosion.

"BLESSING CHILDREN."—An article so headed has been going the rounds of the papers, setting forth that Rev. Dr. Fuller, of Baltimore, was in the habit of performing certain ceremonies over little children, in imitation of Christ's example of blessing them. In a note to the editor of the Presbyterian, the Doctor thus corrects this statement:—

"I am sure that it will give you pleasure to know, that you have been entirely misinformed. I have neither introduced nor practiced any such ceremony; nor have I ever heard of any such. In common with all ministers, I constantly kneel with parents, and implore the blessing of Christ upon their offspring. Had I done more than this—had I performed, upon either child or adult, any rite not clearly commanded by Christ, I should be justly exposed to the censures you have uttered, and to censures much more severe."

MISSIONS AMONG THE BAPTISTS.—The Macedonian (an organ of the American Baptist Missionary Union,) after announcing that the receipts of the Union equal the expenditures for the financial year just closed, says:—

"And now the work of evangelizing the world must go forward. The missions planted in Asia and Africa, in Europe, and among the Indian tribes of our own continent, must be sustained. God says this, in giving increasing magnitude and hope to their work, and in calling men to go forth and reap the ripening harvest. Mr. Schauffler, of Hamburg, is ready to leave a more lucrative service, for the purpose of becoming the fellow-laborer of Mr. Oncken in the German mission. Two young men, now under appointment, desire to be sent the ensuing summer to reinforce the mission in Assam. Several others have manifested a willingness to go to some of the Asiatic missions—and, including Mr. Kincaid, four of the returned missionaries wish to sail in July for their respective stations.

DROWNING OF ELEVEN PERSONS.—The Kingston (Jamaica) Journal, of April 10th, says: It appears that on Saturday last [the Sabbath] the sloop Caroline left Morant Bay for Kingston, with a large number of passengers, among whom were Mr. and Mrs Duffus and four children, of St. Thomas in the East; Miss Cooper, daughter of Deiderick Cooper, Esq., of St. Andrew; Misses Kirkland, and several other ladies and gentlemen. The sloop before leaving the harbor got on a reef, and became a wreck. The passengers were then got into a boat, which pulled for the shore, but before they could reach it a heavy sea capsized it, and—pained are we to record the melancholy circumstance—seven persons, including Mrs. Duffus and her four children, Miss Cooper, and one of the Misses Kirkland, met a watery grave. Mr. Duffus, and several gentlemen who were passengers to this city to serve as jurors in the present Assizes, were saved.

INDIAN WAR IN YUCATAN.—Dates from Campeachy to the 5th of April, state that the Indians had renewed the war, which it was hoped had been terminated, and that they seemed determined to carry it on with increased activity. Capt. Vidal, in two expeditions from Valladolid, had killed 37 savages, and succeeded in rescuing four white prisoners. The insurgents, in large numbers, had attacked the town of Centillo, and set fire to a number of new buildings in the public square, which were consumed. Lieut. Corres collected a few men, and after a sharp contest repulsed the assailants, with a loss of 3 killed and a large number wounded.

THE CAPITAL PUNISHMENT QUESTION.—A bill has been introduced into the Massachusetts Senate by Mr. Walker of Worcester, in substance similar to that now in operation in Maine, viz: That a person convicted of murder shall remain in the State Prison for one year, and then, if the Governor shall issue a warrant therefor, shall be hung. In Maine, since the passage of this law, at least three persons have been convicted of murder, but neither of them was hung at the expiration of their year of imprisonment.

FEARFUL MORTALITY.—The brig Boston, from Bahia, the 10th ult., announces that the yellow fever had been raging terribly at Bahia—sweeping off seamen belonging to vessels in port, and great numbers of the slaves. A government report makes the total mortality in the Province 8,000. Previous to the sailing of the Boston, there had been a severe thunder storm, which had cleared the atmosphere, and caused the disease to abate. It was thought that it would be totally extinct in a few days.

AMERICAN INTERESTS IN THE EAST.—Mr. Clayton, the Secretary of State, laid a communication before the Senate on Thursday last, recommending a full Minister to China, a paid Consul at Singapore, and commercial agents to Japan and other Oriental Nations, to make treaties. He presented a mass of documents, showing the value and magnitude of the Asiatic trade, and the importance of diverting it to San Francisco and the United States, in exchange for our produce.

STATE CONVENTION OF THE LIBERTY PARTY.—A Convention of the Liberty Party of the State of New York will be held at the city of Syracuse, on Wednesday and Thursday, the 3d and 4th days of July next, for the purpose of considering and discussing their duties in the present interesting state of public affairs. Also, to perfect a State organization, and make a nomination of State officers, to be supported at the Fall election, if it is thought best then to make nominations.

GOLD AND GRAVES.—The N. O. Crescent says: A gentleman who has just returned from California, having been absent from the States about fourteen months, states that when he reached California, curiosity led him to visit a graveyard, where he found only eleven graves; nine months from that time he followed the remains of a friend to the same graveyard, and during the time intervening between the two visits there had been no less than fourteen hundred persons interred in the same yard.

In England and Wales it is said the expense of funerals in a year amounts to the enormous sum of twenty-five million dollars.

SUMMARY.

The Texas Indians are daily committing the most atrocious depredations and murders, and a public meeting has been held at Brownsville for the adoption of measures to suppress their movements. Among those who have lately fallen victims to their cruelty, is Mr. Kemp, a highly-respected and well-known citizen, who was attacked and murdered near Laredo, and also the San Antonio mail rider.

Black River, Mich., is a small river running westerly into Lake Michigan, about eighty miles due west from Lansing, the new State Capital. Six miles up the river widens into 'Black Lake on which is Holland, a Dutch settlement of five thousand inhabitants, soon to be joined by as many more of their countrymen, with One Million Dollars in hard cash, beside other property.

The Committee on Manufactures in the House of Representatives of Massachusetts have reported a bill forbidding any person or Corporation to use any steam boiler without a fusible safety plug, and authorizing, for this purpose, Ashcroft's "Protected Safety Fusible Plug." The penalty for removing the plug, or substituting for it any material less fusible or for a boiler without it, is a thousand dollars.

There is but little doing in Land Warrants; holders are not disposed to sell better than $130, and buyers prefer knowing more of what will be done at Washington in relation to Public Lands before they purchase. In this unsettled state of the market, we quote them $120 a $130; 40 acre Warrants, $41 a $45.

A cautious man might suppose, from the following, that the Smiths and Duncans were soon likely to get so confused in the town of Marcellus, that it would be difficult to tell who was who:—Married, in Marcellus, New York, on the 28th ult., Mr. Sylvester Smith to Miss Lydia Duncan; Mr. Sereno Smith to Miss Cothia Duncan; and Mr. Charles Duncan to Miss Emma Smith, all of that place.

The Montreal papers state that a man has just returned to Laprairie, Canada, who left that place for the West fourteen years ago. He was in California during the first year of the gold discovery, and amassed about $300,000, which he has brought home with him. In addition, some land belonging to him in Sacramento City he has leased to the Government for $10,000 per annum.

The Legislature of Mississippi has appropriated $200,000, for which the people are to be taxed, to be distributed among the several counties, in proportion to the number of children, to establish a system of free schools. Steps are also being taken to procure an accurate return of the number of children between the ages of six and twenty years.

A company, with a capital of $80,000, has been formed in New York for the purpose of mining in the gold-bearing rocks of California, and a number of machines for crushing quartz have already been shipped around the Horn. A house in Philadelphia, which possesses the exclusive patent for improved stamping-machines, is unable to supply the orders that are sent in from all quarters.

The Worcester (Mass.) Spy says: We learn that a project is on foot in this city for the establishment of a "Mechanic's Life and Health Insurance Company," a peculiar feature in which will be, the loaning of the funds to mechanics, instead of investing them in stocks, as is practiced by existing associations.

The town of Provincetown, Barnstable county, Mass., has now twenty-five vessels employed in the whale fisheries, and we have been informed by some of the most enterprising men of that place, that whaling is now considered the most important branch of business there, having outgrown the cod-fishing interest in a great degree.

Henry E. Hutchins, a native of Massachusetts, was arrested at Savannah, April 20, charged with being an Abolitionist, in consequence of making use of certain expressions about Slavery. He was, however, discharged on condition of leaving the city in 48 hours. He was said by some to be half-witted.

A small child of Mr. Bennet, a colored man, died suddenly in Harrisburg, Pa., on Thursday last. It had jumped the rope 250 times successively, by which it became heated, then drank cold water, and immediately expired. Another child lies dangerously ill from the same cause.

By one of the laws of the State of Delaware, persons who have contracted debts in other States may be arrested and committed to prison, if found within its limits. A movement is afoot to secure the repeal of this law, as its action has been found to be most pernicious to the true interests of the State.

We learn from Quincy, Ill., that the steam flouring mill occupied by Wyers & Hazard, in that place, but known as Kimball's Mill, was burned early last month. The loss of mill and stock is estimated at $10,000. Insurance $6,000.

A man named James Stevenson has been arrested at Pittsburgh, charged with forgery on the Bank of Steubenville, Ohio. The amount was $1,300. He has been committed at Steubenville to await his trial.

The Burlington (Iowa) Hawkeye, of the 4th ult., learns that a war had broken out in Keokuk between the Settlers and Decree Party, about disputed titles, and a general riot was expected.

The scarlet fever is very prevalent in Philadelphia and its neighborhood. We have heard of one family in the country that lost eight children in six weeks, and all by this terrible disease.

Mr. O'Reilly is in St. Louis, making preparations to continue his line of Telegraph to Columbia, Boone County—another long step towards the Pacific.

The family of President Taylor, says the Newport News, have engaged a suite of rooms for their use at that pleasant resort during the Summer.

The voters of Springfield, Ill., have decided against licensing any more groggeries in that city, by 247 majority, viz: License, 176; No License, 423.

The steamship Ohio sailed from New York for Chagres on the 27th inst., taking 467 California-bound passengers.

The Philadelphia Mint is turning out about two millions of coin per month. An appropriation of $20,000 has been made by Congress to the Mint to increase the refining and assaying facilities, when the officers of the Mint are quite confident of their ability to furnish coin to the amount of three millions five hundred thousand dollars per month, or forty-two millions per annum.

From Pawtucket to Milbury, in the Valley of the Blackstone River, (Mass.,) a distance of 30 miles, there are 115 Cotton and Woolen factories, besides 16 large Machine Shops, two large Ax factories, and 3 extensive Scythe works, giving a total of 126 manufactories. Many of these are very extensive, the largest Woolen Mill and Cotton Mill in the United States being among the number.

In Pittsburg, on the 24th ult., a little girl, seven or eight years of age, died from the effects of over-exertion in skipping the rope. Thursday last a spirit of emulation arose between her and her playmates as to which could jump the greatest number of times consecutively, and by extraordinary exertion she was enabled to accomplish three hundred and fifty. Her life proved the forfeit.

There are three springs in Potter county, Pa., rising within three miles of each other, the water of one of which finds its way to the ocean by the Allegany, Ohio and Mississippi rivers, and the Gulf of Mexico; another by way of the Susquehanna river and the Chesapeake Bay; and the third by way of the Genesee river, Lake Ontario, and river St. Lawrence.

A treaty has been concluded between the United States and British Governments, by which all differences relating to Nicaragua are satisfactory arranged. It is now before the Senate.

The first man who pegged a shoe in this or any other country, is said to be now living at Hopkinton, Mass. The value of boots and shoes now made in Massachusetts alone is estimated at $18,000,000 annually.

The National Preacher for May,

CONTAINING excellent discourses from Rev. JOHN DOWLING, D. D. and Rev. M. W. JACOBUS, is now ready. Clergymen and others, visiting the city during the anniversary season, are invited to call and examine this work. Although it has attained the age of nearly a quarter of a century, it will be found to be as acceptable and valuable to the Trinitarian minister or general reader as ever it was in its earlier youth. The old friends of the National Preacher will please not confound this work with a new publication of a similar title, but established on a very different doctrinal basis.

Yearly subscription to the National Preacher $1,00. Bound vols. each, $1,25.

History of Romanism.

In a large octavo volume of 750 pages, printed in large type, on the finest paper, and embellished with more than fifty engravings, chiefly from Original Designs, and bound in muslin, extra gilt. Price $3. THE HISTORY OF ROMANISM, from its earliest origin to the present time, by the Rev. John Dowling, D. D. A new and enlarged edition, with the Author's last additions, and a Supplement, containing a Sketch of the Life of Pope Pius IX., &c.

The best evidence of the intrinsic value of this remarkably popular work is to be seen in the fact that within the comparatively recent period of its first publication, the extraordinary number of 17,000 copies have been disposed of.

The following is an extract from a letter from the Rev. Dr. Giustiniani, the converted Roman Catholic priest, who is abundantly qualified by education, observation, and extensive study, to testify to the fidelity and value of a "History of Romanism."

"If the reader wishes to be acquainted with the errors of Romanism, he has only to open the pages of Dowling's History. If the reader is anxious to read an epitome of the history of the popes, their ambition; their intrigues; their avariciousness; their tyranny; their superstitions, and their mummeries, he can here find all proved and authenticated by the most accredited authors of the Church of Rome." L. GIUSTINIANI.

"It reflects much credit on the skill, patience, industry, and judgment of the author; he appears very justly to have conceived the idea of a work, which has long been regarded as a desideratum by a large portion of those interested in the great controversy with the Romanists."—Protestant Churchman.

"We regard it as a most important addition to the historical and religious literature of the age. Its contents form a rich storehouse of historical instruction, which should be placed within the reach of every family."—N. Y. Christian Intelligencer.

"It presents a succienct, but sufficiently full, history of the rise, progress, errors, cruelties, and present condition of the Papacy, authenticated by reference to the most undoubted historic sources, related in a spirited, engaging, and impressive style, and arranged in the most lucid manner. It abounds in facts and incidents, and, with its beautiful illustrations, is better adapted to furnish a vivid and impressive portraiture of Romanism as it is, than any other book we know of."—N. Y. Evang.

"The detached portions of Romish history which were every where to be met with, needed to be brought together and presented in systematic order. The reading of one book thus becomes better and cheaper than the reading of many."—Boston Recorder.

"It is written with the ready, popular eloquence, for which the well-known author is distinguished, and cannot fail to arrest attention to the controversy of which it treats. It is a strongly Protestant work, and exhibits the deformities of Popery with great power."—N. Y. Recorder.

"The author appears to have brought to the execution of this great work, unwearied industry, genuine and thorough scholarship, and scrupulous fidelity."

RUFUS BABCOCK, late Pres. of Waterville College.

TIME.

'Time's a hand-breadth; 'tis a tale;
'T is a vessel under sail;
'T is an eagle in its way,
Darting down upon its prey;
'T is an arrow in its flight,
Mocking the pursuing sight;
'T is a short-liv'd, fading flower;
'T is a rainbow on a shower;
'T is a momentary ray,
Smiling in a winter's day;
'T is a torrent's rapid stream;
'T is a shadow; 'tis a dream;
'T is the closing watch of night,
Dying at the rising light;
'T is a bubble; 'tis a sigh;
Be prepar'd, O man! to die.

Francis Quarles, 1631.

IMPORTANCE OF LITTLE THINGS.

"Since trifles make the sum of human things,
And half our misery from our foibles springs—
Since life's best joys consist in peace and ease,
And though but few can serve yet all may please—
O, let the ungentle spirit learn from thence,
'A small unkindness is a great offense.'
The mild forbearance at a brother's fault,
The angry word suppressed, the taunting thought;
Subduing and subdued, the petty strife,
Which clouds the color of domestic life;
The sober comfort, all the peace which springs
From the large aggregate of little things;
On these small cares of daughter, wife, or friend,
The almost sacred joys of home depend—
There, Sensibility, thou best may reign;
Home is thy true, legitimate domain."

SUGAR EATERS.

The French people are great eaters of sugar, always carrying some of it with them in their pockets and reticules, and generally putting five or six lumps into each cup of coffee. M. Chassat reports that sugar, when used as the exclusive or principal article of diet, produces quite opposite effects in some persons, according to the difference in their systems; for, while it fattens some, it creates bile which induces diarrhœa and a wasting of the solids in other persons. The celebrated Bolivar had, by fatigue and privations, so injured the tone of his stomach that he was unable, at times, to take any other food than sugar, which, in his case, was easy of digestion. His personal friends assure us, that in some of his last campaigns he lived for weeks together upon sugar alone as a solid, and with pure water as a liquid; but, probably, in nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of a thousand, this diet would soon have brought the person adopting it to his grave; for, on those whose digestion is feeble, a large or exclusive allowance of sugar adds to their grievance, because the excess of nutriment not being generally absorbed by their weakened systems, becomes converted to bile, and causes great debility and wasting of the body. In seventeen experiments made on dogs, M. Chessat observed that, when the sugar diet fattened them, there was a general tendency to constipation meanwhile; and, on the contrary, when it produced an excess of bile in other dogs, their bowels were relaxed. Why English children suffer in their digestion after eating largely of sugar plums, comfits, &c., is chiefly owing, however, to those delicacies being composed of the refuse of starch works, mixed with plaster of Paris, pipe clay, or chalk, and having, indeed, as little sugar as will suffice to give them a palatable sweetness, and they are often colored with gamboge, and sometimes with red-lead, verdigris, and other mineral poisons.

Every where, the beasts of the field, the birds of the air, the reptiles, the fish and insects, are found to have a great liking for sugar and honey. Mr. Martin says he has tamed the most savage and vicious horse with sugar, and has seen the most ferocious animals domesticated by being partly fed upon it. The tamers of lions and tigers owe their power chiefly to a judicious use of sugar and other sorts of sweets, and also of lavender water, and various other perfumes, of which feline animals are remarkably fond. In the sugar season in the West Indies, the horses, mules and cattle soon acquire plumpness and strength by partaking of the leavings of the sugar cane after the manufacturer has done with them. In Cochin, China, the elephants, buffaloes and horses are all fattened with sugar. We learn from the "Memoirs of Dr. E. Cartwright," (1843,) that the ingenious man used to fatten sheep on sugar. To birds this diet proves so nourishing that the suppliers of the European poultry markets find that sugar, along with hemp seed and boiled wheat, will greatly fatten ruffs and reeves in the space of a fortnight.

FACTS IN NATURAL HISTORY.

A globe of water or air, in moving, meets with resistance, and its velocity will be retarded. If you alter the globe to the form of an egg, there will be less resistance. And then there is a form, called the solid, of least resistance, which mathematicians discovered was the form of a fish's head. Nature had "rigged out" the fish with just such a figure.

The feathers of birds, and each particular part of them, are arranged at such an angle as to be most efficient in assisting flight. The human eye has a mirror on which objects are reflected, and a nerve by which these reflections are conveyed to the brain; and thus we are able to take an interest in the object which passes before the eye. Now, when the eye is too convex, we use one kind of glass to correct the fault; and if it is not convex enough, or if we wish to look at objects at a different distance, we use glasses of entirely another description. But as birds cannot get spectacles, Providence has given them a method of supplying the deficiency. They have the power of contracting the eye, of making it more convex, so as to see the specks which float in the atmosphere, and catch them for food; and also of flattening the eye, to see a great distance, and observe whether any vulture or enemy is threatening to destroy them. In addition to this, they have a film or coating, which can suddenly be thrown down over the eye to protect it; because, at the velocity with which they fly, and with the delicate texture of their eye, the least speck of dust would act upon it as a penknife thrust into the human eye. This film is to protect the eye; and the same thing exists to some extent in the eye of the horse. The horse has a large eye, which is very liable to take dust. The coating in the horse's eye is called the haw, or third eyelid; and if you will watch closely, you may see it descend and return with electric velocity. It clears away the dust, and protects the eye from injury. If the eye should catch cold, the haw hardens and projects, and ignorant persons cut it off, and destroy the safeguard. [Prof. Mapes.

ROMANCE IN REAL LIFE.

The Lewisburg (Pa.) Chronicle announces the marriage, on the 14th ult., of John Johnson and Mrs. Mariah, Miller of Chillisquaque township, and tells the following romantic story respecting the happy pair:—

The groom, who now works at the boatyard here, was formerly a sea-faring man. The bride is from South Carolina; and her father, and her former husband, both of whom have been dead many years, were wealthy planters. Some five years ago, the young widow made a visit to England, in company with her brother, a Southern gentleman of fortune, and on the return voyage they embarked in a vessel in which the groom was serving as a common sailor. By some accident she was knocked overboard in the harbor of Liverpool, sank to the bottom, and was given up for lost. Our hero, however, did not abandon the search. A slight change in the position of the vessel discovered her, the water being remarkably clear, lying on the ground twenty feet below the surface, and apparently dead. He instantly plunged to the bottom, seized her by the hair, and brought her to the top; a large lock of hair being pulled out in the attempt, and which is still preserved. After some hours of persevering exertion, she was finally brought to and perfectly restored. She was deeply grateful to the preserver of her life, and on the homeward voyage she formed a strong attachment for him, and a union for life was resolved upon. Their plans were, however, frustrated, and for several years they never met. In the meantime her fortune became impaired. Some three or four months ago she heard of his location here, and immediately came on from Charleston to see him. Her uncle, however, overtook her and carried her back. She came on again, some three weeks ago, but was confined to bed for some time by sickness. Recovering, on last Sabbath evening the long-deferred nuptial knot was tied, and the rescuer and rescued are now united in a life-partnership, for better or for worse.

THE UPPER REGIONS.

Mr. J. Wise, the aëronaut, has recently published a work entitled "History and Practice of Aëronautics," from which the Philadelphia Inquirer derives the following interesting facts:—

"In one place he makes us acquainted with the still quiet of the heavens, thus:—A bee was let off at 8,000 feet, which flew away making a humming noise. At the altitude of 11,000 feet, a great linnet was liberated, which flew away directly, but soon, feeling itself abandoned in the midst of an unknown ocean, it returned and settled on the stays of the balloon; then, mustering fresh courage, it took a second flight and dashed down to the earth, describing a tortuous yet perpendicular track. A pigeon let off under similar circumstances afforded a more curious spectacle. Placed on the car, it rested awhile, measuring as it were the breadth of that unexplored sea which it designed to traverse; now launching into the abyss, it fluttered irregularly, and seemed at first to try its wings on the thin element, and after a few strokes it gained more confidence, and whirling in large circles or spirals, like the bird of prey, it precipitated itself into the mass of extended clouds, where it was lost from sight. In one of his ascents, he held a distinct conversation in the clouds with Mr. Paulin, who ascended with another balloon about the same time."

PRIVATE LIBRARIES.

It is surprising how many very large and excellently selected private libraries have been collected in this country. In most parts of Europe, public libraries are so common, and so accessible, that there is comparatively little need of private collections, except upon specialities; but here, for the most part, public libraries are few and meagre, and of so miscellaneous a character as to be of little value for special uses. Among the largest private libraries with which we are acquainted, is that of Rev. Dr. Smythe, of Charleston, containing about 17,000, very rich in theology; Hon. Mitchell King's, in the same city, nearly as large, and abounding in the choicest classical productions, in the best editions, as well as books of art; Mr. Barton's, in Philadelphia, say of 10,000, containing the best collection of Shakspere editions, commentaries, illustrations, &c., to be found in the world; Dr. Redmon Coxe's, in the same city, about 20,000; E. D. Ingraham's, ditto, of 13,000, altogether the most curious in historical, biographical and juridical literature to be found in this country; George Tickner's in Boston, the best in the world of Spanish literature; Mr. Douse's, of Cambridge, of more than 10,000; Dr. Francis's, of ditto, large and very rich in old English literature; Theodore Parker's, in Boston, large and admirably selected.

In New York the number of good libraries is very large. Dr. Moore's, we believe, has more than 12,000 volumes; that of Edwin Forrest (collected chiefly by the late William Leggett) is nearly as large, and is very rich in the best English literature. The library of Mr. Lenox is large, and of extraordinary value, having cost, probably, more than any private library in the country. Mr. Bancroft has the best historical Library in the city, and the best collection of MSS. illustrative of American History, in the possession of any individual in the world. Very extensive and valuable libraries are owned by J. W. Francis, and Rev. Drs. Hawks, W. R. Williams, Bethune and Griswold, the last having contained, before the destruction of a portion of it recently by fire, more than 13,000 books, chiefly American. [Tribune.

LUNAR DAGUERREOTYPE.

At a meeting of the Cambridge Scientific Association, December, 1849, five daguerreotype pictures of the moon's surface were exhibited to the Society by Mr. Wells. These pictures were taken by Mr. S. D. Humphrey, of Canandaigua, N. Y., with a half-size American camera, on a medium plate. The first picture was obtained by an exposure of two minutes, the camera remaining permanent. During this short interval, the earth had moved forward so rapidly, that the figure of the satellite was elongated so as to form an oval or egg-shaped picture. The same peculiarity was also noticed in the pictures obtained by an exposure of one minute, and also of thirty seconds, though in a less degree. In these pictures, the configurations upon the moon's surface were not delineated, but in the fourth picture, obtained by an exposure of three seconds, the representation was strikingly clear and distinct. The figure was round, and the representation of the surface so perfect, that its appearance, when examined under the microscope, somewhat resembled the full moon seen through a telescope. The fifth picture was obtained by an exposure of only half a second, and was little more than a shadow. The powerful agency and presence of the chemical principle were sufficiently indicated by it. These several pictures were all taken upon one occasion, on the night of the 1st of September, a few hours before full moon. They conclusively show, that lunar light possesses the chemical principle, or force, in a high degree, and it is to this source that we may reasonably attribute its supposed action in producing phosphorescence and other changes in animal or vegetable substances.

AUDUBON'S BIRDS, AND HIS HISTORY.

An ordinance passed the New York Board of Aldermen recently, in concurrence with the Board of Assistants, for the purchase of the last copy of this celebrated work, which the distinguished author has at his disposal. It was purchased for the City Library, at an expense of $1,000. This will be a welcome relief to him in the evening of life, when his labors are suspended by the extinction of his sight. He at present resides on the banks of the Hudson.

Alderman Shaw, who has a personal acquaintance with Mr. Audubon, briefly alluded to his great sacrifices in accomplishing his researches in natural history, and the obstacles he had to surmount in securing its publication. More than forty years of his life have been devoted to the accomplishment of this unexampled enterprise, and for eight successive years he was shut out from civilization, while stuying the habits, character and plumage of the birds of America. When his toil was over, and the work ready for publication, it could not be done in this country. Competent artists could not be found here. Audubon went to Europe, and as soon as he had secured two subscribers, he began the hazardous task of its publication, without friends or resources. He resolutely applied himself to the work of procuring more subscribers, and among the crowned heads and the nobility of Europe he obtained 178! He reserved but two copies for himself, one of which has now been secured for the City Library of New York. The plates cost Mr. Audubon $150,000, but no more copies can be furnished, as most unfortunately they were destroyed by the great fire.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

The British Museum has reached its present state through a very large expenditure of public money. The buildings alone, in which this vast collection is deposited, have cost, since 1823, nearly £700,000. The sums expended in purchases for the various collections, either from annual or special grants, from 1755, independently of the buildings since 1823, considerably exceed £1,100,000; and of that sum £345,000, at least, has gone directly to the purchase of objects now forming part of the collection. The contributions made by munificent and patriotic individuals have been of great value. The secretary estimated those which have been received for the twelve years preceding 1835, including the munificent library collected by his Majesty George III., and presented by his Majesty George IV., and the bequest by the late Richard Payne Knight, Esq., of medals, coins, and bronzes, at a sum little short of £400,000, and Mr. Greenville's late gift of a library, which cost upwards of £50,000, shows the extent of increase that may be looked for from similar sources. At present the government of the museum, including the superintendence of all the departments, and the execution of all matters which do not fail to be immediately conducted by the heads of departments, is vested in a board of trustees, in number 48, of whom one is directly named by the Crown, 23 are official, nine are named by the representatives or executors of parties who have been donors to the institution, and 15 are elected by the board of trustees.

GREAT NAVAL WORK IN RUSSIA.

In the month of February last the great naval basin at Sebastopol was completed, and the largest ships of war in the Russian Navy can now be docked with the greatest ease at that port. Some idea may be formed of the magnitude of the works when it is stated that the basin covers an extent of ten acres of ground, and has seven dry docks, three on one side, and four on the other. The water in the basin is 30 feet above the level of the Black Sea, and the vessels are taken into it by means of three locks, the iron gates of which are 64 feet broad, the breadth of the locks, being 28 feet deep. A large reservoir has been constructed at some distance from the basin, and the former is constantly supplied with water, by allowing a river to enter it, while the quantity of water in the basin is regulated by sluices from the reservoir. Each of the dry docks has a sluice, which can be opened, and the water emptied out in a very limited period, without the trouble of pumping, the plan adopted at the docks adjoining basins in this country when it is found requisite to empty them at high water. The Emperor of Russia is reported to have about 50 ships of war at present at Sebastopol, and has recently received the best description of machinery for making blocks and other purposes.

Comfort for timid Travelers.—In the two years ending December, 1848, the total mileage of the passengers on the railways of Great Britain, was 1,830,184,617 miles. The number of accidents to passengers, attended with loss of life, arising from causes beyond their own control, in the same period, was 28. Dividing the same mileage, therefore, by 28, we obtain the quotient, 65,363,736. Hence it appears, that if a passenger travel one mile, the chances against his suffering an accident fatal to life are 63,363,735 to 1. In the same period the number of accidents attended with bodily injury to passengers, arising from causes beyond their own control, was 215. Dividing this in the same manner into the total mileage, we find that the chances againt such an accident in traveling one mile are 8,512,486 to 1. In each case we find the chances for greater distances by dividing these numbers by the distances respectively.

AN INDIAN BREAKFAST.

On the 17th, we were paddling along at daylight. On putting ashore to breakfast, four Indians on horseback joined us. The moment they alighted, one set about hobbling their horses, another to gather small sticks, a third to make a fire, and a fourth to catch fish. For this purpose the fisherman cut off a bit of his leather shirt about the size of a bean; then pulling out two or three hairs from his horse's tail for a line, tied the bit of leather to one end of it, in place of a hook or fly. Thus prepared, he entered the river a little way, sat down on a stone, and began to throw the small fish, three or four inches long, upon the shore as fast as he pleased, and while he was thus employed, another picked them up and threw them towards the fire, while the third stuck them up around in a circle, on small sticks, and they were no sooner up than roasted. The fellows then sitting down, swallowed them—heads, tails, bones fins, and all—in no time, just as one would swallow an oyster. Now all was but the work of a few moments; and before our man had his kettle ready for the fire, the Indians were already eating their breakfast. When the fish had hold of the bit of wet leather, or bait, their teeth got entangled in it, so as to give time to jerk them on shore, which was to us a new mode of angling; fire produced by two bits of wood, was also a novelty; but what surprised us most of all was the regularity with which they proceeded, and the quickness of the whole process, which actually took them less time than it has taken me to note it down. WIFE OF GEN. JACKSON.

The influence of this woman over her husband is said to have been very extraordinary. She was of obscure origin and uneducated. Yet she inherited from nature those fine and noble traits of her sex to such perfection that her power and fascinations were very great. Gen. Jackson was attached to her in early life, but by some means or other the matter was interrupted and she married another, who proved a villain and the connection most unhappy. General Jackson became again interested in her; the consequnce was a divorce, when he was married to her. She is said to have possessed none of those accomplishments that are supposed to adorn fashionable life; reared in the backwoods, seeing and knowing little of elegant and refined society. Yet her fine person, strong affections, and good sense, the three great essentials of a woman, enabled her to take and hold with irresistable force the passions of the bold, turbulent, fiery warrior to whom she was wedded. It was the Lion held in the embrace of the Fawn. The influence she exercised bordered on the superstitious. He imagined that no power or acts of his could succeed, or be carried out, averse to her will or in opposition to her feelings. She seemed his guardian angel, by day and by night; holding in her hands his life, his fate, his all. An intimate friend of his, says, that so long as he lived he wore her miniature near his heart, and never alluded to her except in a manner so subdued and full of reverence, that the listener was deeply impressed with her transcendent worth.

Medical Discovery.—It has been ascertained, that the true source of scorbutic disease, as it shows itself in our ships and prisons, is the want of potash in the blood; that salted meat contains little more than half the potash in fresh meats; and that, while an ounce of rice contains only five grains of potash, an ounce of potato contains 1,875 grains, which accounts for the great increase of the disease since the scarcity of the potato. In patients under this disease, the blood is found to be deficient in potash; and it has been ascertained by repeated experiments, that whatever be the diet, such patients speedily recover if a few grains (from twelve to twenty) of some salt of potash be given daily. Lime juice is regularly ordered in the navy, as a specific for the disease, and the reason of its efficacy is not the acid, but the amount of potash, being 846 grains in an ounce. On these facts, it seems possible to found a slight, but very salutary improvement in the navy. Let a portion of tartrate of potash be ordered regularly to be mixed with the lime-juice that is given out for use; and let arrangements be made for boiling the salt meat in steam. A large portion of the salt would thus be eliminated, and the food made more wholesome. A similar course might be adopted in work-houses and prisons. If so simple a remedy is in our hands, it is criminal to neglect it.

The Rich Men of Boston.—According to the pamphlet published by John H. Eastburn, of persons, copartners and corporations who were taxed on $6,000 and upwards in 1849, there were eight who were taxed for over half a million of property; seven between $400,000 and $500,000; fourteen for between $300,000 and $400,000; twenty-five for between $200,000 and $300,000; and one hundred and twenty-five for between $100,000 and $200,000. The following are the names of those taxed for over half a million; Abbot Lawrence, $1,032,400; Robert G. Shaw, $829,400; David Sears, $752,600; Jonathan Phillips, $688,000; Josiah Quincy, Jr. $619,000; John Wells, $616,000; Thomas Wigglesworth, $556,000; John Bryant, $549,700.

A Wrecking Expedition.—The schooner Rio Grande, Captain Thurlow, and Hydrangea, Capt. Jordon, sailed recently from Boston for the of Bay Fundy, for the purpose of recovering property from several ships which were sunk or shipwrecked there some years since. This expedition is got up by two enterprising young men, who have gone to great expense in importing machinery, submarine armor, and men, (as divers,) from England. The same party were at work last season, recovering property from the British brig of war Plumper, which was wrecked some thirty-seven years ago, and were pretty successful in raising a considerable amount of silver dollars, iron, &c. This season they have gone into the business with all the necessary "fixins" to make a successful business of it.

The Greenfield (Mass) Democrat says the following note, verbatim et literatim, was sent to the presiding Judge of a Court, in that County, recently:

to the Honorable cort
Sir your juris canter Gree.

The Use of a Single Hill.—The hill immediately back of Cannelton is the most serviceable one that we have ever seen, says the Cannelton (Ia.) Democrat. It rises some 250 feet from the plain; at its base is pure soft free-stone water. First comes a bed of fire clay from ten to twenty feet thick; on this rests the stratum of coal; on the coal lies a layer of the best building sandstone; on the top of the hill is a place neatly formed by nature for a vast reservoir for water. The hill will supply us with heat, light, water, and building materials, to say nothing of the charming prospects to be had at various points on its summit.

Cotton in India.—The London Times says: "The one great element of American success—American enterprise—can never, at least for many generations, be imparted to India. It is impossible to expect of Hindoos all that is achieved by citizens of the States. During the experiments to which we have alluded, an English plow was introduced into one of the provinces, and the natives were taught its use and superiority over their own clumsy machinery. They were at first astonished and delighted at its effects, but as soon as the agent's back was turned, they took it, painted it red, set it up on end, and worshiped it.

ITEMS OF FOREIGN NEWS.

Gleaned from papers received by the last steamer.

A faithless spouse recently returned to her husband, who resides at Tutbury, England. As soon as the villagers heard of her return, they surrounded the house, and commenced the confused din created by blowing cows' horns, beating pans, &c., and then, seizing her, dragged her by a rope round her waist to a pond, where they ducked her several times in the presence of her husband, after which they marched her back to her residence. It appears, that at Tutbury, all wives who forget their marriage vows are similarly treated.

Sir Roderick Murchison, lecturing lately before the Royal Society, showed that gold was usually found upon the earth's surface, and in patches; and thus, while gold-washers realized fortunes, gold miners were as often ruined. This fact, he states, was known thousands of years ago. For example:—Job says (xxviii. 1) "Surely there is a vein for the silver," and (xxviii. 6) "earth hath dust of gold."

In the accounts of the expenses of some old municipal pageants and processions for the city of Chester, England, occurs the following items:—"Paid for keeping hell head, (a representation of the mouth of hell,) 8d; for keeping a fire at hell mouth, 4d; paid to the demon, 21d; while the angels are paid only 8d each; paid Pilate, the Bishops and Knights, to drink between the stages, 9d; paid for half a yard of Red Sea. 6d."

The New York packet-ship Fidelia, Capt. F. W. Abeel, 969 tuns, was discharged in the Waterloo Dock, Liverpool, in 28 hours. Her cargo, which was all passed by the landing waiter, and delivered, consisted of 10,000 bushels corn, 2,000 packages of lard and tallow, 620 bales cotton, 700 packages provisions, 500 barrels flour, and 10,000 staves. Within the 28 hours she had also 100 tuns of her outward cargo put on board.

In the Crown Court, before Mr. Aaron Alderson, a juryman, on the oath being administered, addressing the clerk, said:—"Speak up, I cannot hear what you say." Aaron Alderson: "Stop! are you deaf?" Juror: "Yes, of one ear." The learned judge: "Then you had better leave that box, for it is necessary that jurymen should hear both sides."

There is at present residing in Southampton an old man named Ward, the last survivor of Capt. Cook's companions in his voyage round the world. He is 99 years of age, and is in possession of all his faculties. He was present at Capt. Cook's death, and himself received a spear wound from one of the Islanders.

At a recent sale by auction, in Hull, Eng., of exotics and other plants brought from Ghent, a rhododendron arborentum (elegantinum) was exhibited, which had upwards of 150 blooms. The plant measured 17 feet in circumference, was 6 feet in diameter, and 6 feet in hight.

The Plymouth (Eng.) Journal relates an anecdote of a troop of seamen who lately landed there bearing a coffin filled with real Havanas. En route to the railway, they met a Customs officer, and begged to know the way to the burial ground. Shortly afterward the contraband store was secure in the country.

Seventeen Arabs have just quitted the Chateau of Amboise, to return to Africa. Among them is an old man 100 years of age, the uncle of Abd-el-Kader; and one has become so initiated in French manners and customs, as to be a very accomplished dancer of the polka.

On Monday was exhibited before the Lord Mayor of London, the lady mayoress, and several of their friends, in the justice-room, the American churn, which, in ten minutes, produced four pounds of butter from four quarts of cream. The butter was washed and completed in the churn.

In London there are 12,000 children under regular training to crime; 30,000 thieves, 6,000 receivers of stolen goods; 23,000 persons picked up in a state of drunkenness; 50,000 habitual gin-drinkers; and 150,000 of both sexes leading an abandoned life.

A gold fever has broken out at Grenada, in Spain, owing to the discovery of the precious metal in the sands of the Douro. Companies have been formed for the washing of the sands, and men women, and children are poaching on the auriferous domain.

There lives in Edinburgh a lady, in the use of all her mental faculties, whose brother by the same mother died 122 years ago, in the fourteenth year of his age. She is upward of 100 years old. The brother died in April, 1728.

The Council of Government of Malta has lately been occupied with an important discussion on religious affairs, and the priests have carried their point—fixing the Roman Catholic Religion as the dominant one.

During the late fine weather Lord Ross has been able to make use of his splendid telescope to great advantage, and has added three new nebulæ to his former discoveries.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50 will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

REPORT ON MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

BY A COMMITTEE OF THE S. D. B. WESTERN ASSOCIATION.

[Concluded.]

2. The second objection is the want of time to get an education. Stated in detail, the objection runs somewhat as follows: "The fields are already white for the harvest, and the young man ought not to remain cloistered within the walls of a college or theological seminary, while souls are perishing for the lack of the bread of life." That these exclamations are honest, is not doubted, but they unquestionably arise from an incorrect view of the ministerial work. It seems much like a mistaken zeal, that urges a man to assume the most sacred responsibilities, with a course of preparation so brief as would hardly give time to prepare for the most ordinary kind of business. The intimations of the Scriptures upon this subject, though not particularly definite, are, nevertheless, sufficiently explicit. Under the Jewish economy, no man entered the priesthood till he had attained the age of thirty years. Num. 4: 23, 30, 35, 37, 39, 47. Christ himself conformed to this well-ordered regulation. Luke 3: 23. This practice seems to have been founded upon a correct knowledge of man's mental and physical constitution. It gave precisely what was wanted—ample opportunity for storing the mind with a knowledge of men and things, maturing the judgment, and giving that firmness and vigor to the body that should render it capable of great endurance. How does the hastiness with which young men often rush into the ministry, contrast with the custom of the Jewish priesthood! It is difficult to avoid the conclusion, that such zeal is not "according to knowledge." For, were not the fields white for the harvest in the days of our Saviour?—and did he not tarry till the age of thirty years? Did he not also retain with him, for three years, his apostles, instructing them in their ministerial functions? Their examples are instructive, and worthy to be well pondered by every candidate for the ministry. It would prevent much of that precipitancy that is now some times so painful. It is not here pretended, that any particular age is fixed, or ought to be, under the Christian dispensation, as was the case under the Jewish economy. Doubtless some constitutions naturally mature much earlier than others, and the same is also true of the mind; but it may be seriously questioned, whether any man, under the age of twenty-five or thirty years, ever has the firmness of physical and mental constitution, soundness and correctness of judgment, and acquaintance with the world, that a clergyman ought to possess. It may, then, be well to urge young men not to be so far misled by an undue anxiety to do good, as to take upon themselves to discharge the most sacred duties, while they have neither the knowledge nor experience requisite for such duties. Rather let them tarry for a few years, at the "schools of the prophets," and "get wisdom," and "get understanding."

Again, it is not quite sure, that the man, who thus hastily, without due preparation, enters the ministry, will labor more years than one who takes time to get ready. For he who has all the duties of the pastor of a church, or a missionary, to perform, and, at the same time, is obliged to study very hard to maintain a respectable standing in his official station, is likely to make a demand upon his energies that they are ill able to sustain. It is not too much to say, that many a man, prematurely brought forth to ordination, has prematurely sunk to the tomb by overtasking his energies. The amount of study, required of one whose advantages, previous to ordination, have been all that could be desired, will be sufficient to tax his utmost powers of endurance, without having to make up for previous deficiencies. But suppose his days are not shortened, has a man any assurance that he can do more good by engaging in the ministry measurably unprepared, than he could by taking the necessary time for preparation? Was any thing ever lost by taking time to prepare the ground for the seed? What though literally the fields are already white for the harvest; shall not time be taken to sharpen the sickle? It is not possible to compute the probabilities with mathematical accuracy, yet it is quite evident, that many a man goes on embarrassed through life, by the deficiency in his preparatory education, does not as much in twenty or thirty years as he might have done in a fifth part of that time, had he been wise enough to have got ready before he went to work. It must be observed, that in the ministry the result does not depend upon the number of days' work done, but upon the skill and efficiency with which it is done; and the skill and efficiency depend, under God, upon the attainments—the intellectual and moral discipline of the man.

But an objection different from either of these, is often presented, and merits a careful consideration. The objection admits that clergymen should have a most intimate and accurate knowledge of the Bible, and of the rules of biblical interpretation and criticism; but it denies that they should make "human science and literature" matters of investigation, and that most of the time spent on them beyond the rudiments of a common school education, is uselessly thrown away. Your Committee are ready to concede all that can be rationally said in favor of the most careful study of the Scriptures, biblical literature, and the rules of biblical interpretation and criticism; nor can they doubt but that, in many instances, the branches of ministerial education are neglected to a censurable extent. Yet it is difficult to perceive, in this age of light and progress, how any man can be regarded as having a good education, without a pretty extensive knowledge of mathematics and the sciences. Who needs, so much as the minister, to be a master in the knowledge of human nature? And how can he become such, without an intimate acquaintance with man's physical, intellectual, and moral functions and powers? In order to get this, he must carefully study the sciences of physiology and psychology; he must study the master spirits who have made these sciences the business of their lives; he must study also the causes and workings of human emotions and passions, as they are manifested in the endlessly diversified relations of men in their daily intercourse with each other. Nor, again, can it be doubted, but that the minister ought to be a light in the community in which he resides—a leading spirit in all that can ennoble, exalt, dignify, and grace humanity. Such he cannot be without a good knowledge of the general routine of studies pursued by the youth of almost every community. It will be no easy task for that man to secure and retain the esteem and respect of his parishioners, who, in point of intellectual acquirements, is far inferior to many, or perhaps a large proportion, of his congregation. Time was when ministers were emphatically the educated men of each community, and were enabled to secure the respect and reverence for their calling that corresponded with its sacred dignity. And it is believed, that nothing has so much contributed to diminish the respect once entertained for the ministerial office, as crowding into it a multitude of unlearned men. An illiterate man, however God-like he may be, can hardly expect to inspire that respect and reverence for a cause that should be sought for by the minister. Eminent godliness, and extensive intellectual attainments, together, can do it, but neither of them separately.

But, aside from these considerations, is it not the solemn duty of the candidate for the ministry, to acquire a good knowledge of mathematics and the sciences generally? The mathematics claim his attention, because they serve better than any other studies to train the mind to closeness, carefulness and [illegible] and because they are so practically useful in the study of the sciences. The sciences claim attention, because the study of them is the study of God, as he has manifested his wisdom, power, and love, in the beautiful and grand mechanism of all his works. He who made the world, with its countless forms of beauty, and of vegetable and animal existence, made also man, and furnished him with reason, ideas, and functions, adapted to know all the forms, adjustments, and activities of the outer world—capable of penetrating alike the laws of inanimate matter and organic life. Of all created objects, man alone was designed to know God in the exhibitions of his power and love as revealed in creation. Now, the sciences are simply the arrangements and classifications of natural phenomena. All the materials for their construction pertain to the Deity, and the arrangements and classifications are made by the reason, given by the Creator for this very purpose.

1. Resolved, That this Association recommends young men who are looking forward to the ministry to take, as a preparatory step, a regular course of academical and collegiate studies, equal to that required for the first degree in the colleges or universities of this country; and, secondly, to take a regular theological course, equal to that marked out for the graduate course in the Union Theological Seminary of New York, or some similar Seminary.

2. Resolved, That in case a candidate for the ministry finds it entirely impracticable to go through with a regular collegiate course, he is recommended to take the following course, as preparatory to the study of theology: (1.) A good knowledge of the usual branches of common school education. (2.) Mathematics, embracing algebra, geometry, trigonometry, and conic sections. (3.) Natural Sciences, embracing mechanics, hydrostatics, pneumatics, acoustics, electricity, magnetism, optics, chemistry, anatomy, physiology, geology, botany, astronomy, &c., &c. (4.) Psychology, embracing intellectual philosophy, moral philosophy, and the doctrine of the will. (5.) Rhetoric, logic, and criticism. (6.) History, ancient and modern, and political economy. (7.) Elocution. (8.) If possible, two years study of Greek and Hebrew.

Then a regular three-years theological course, as recommended in the first resolution. But if it be found impracticable to do this, the following course of theological studies is recommended:—Study, in connection with the Bible, Horn's Introduction to the Critical Study and Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures; Dick's Theology; Watts' Theological Institutes; Clarke's Christian Theology; Wilson's Evidences of Christianity; Paley's Evidences of Christianity; Keith on the Prophecies: Townley's Biblical Literature; Goodwin on Atheism; Fletcher's Works; Treffey on the Eternal Sonship; Watson's Witness of the Holy Spirit; Kingsley on the Resurrection; Merritt's and Fisk's Discussion on Universal Salvation.

3. Resolved, That while, in some instances, circumstances may justify the ordination of a man to the ministry who may not have completed either of the above courses of study, yet this Association would earnestly advise candidates to make all reasonable exertions to reach the highest attainments mentioned in either of them.

The Committee are aware that the course of theological study proposed in the second resolution is in many points very defective, and, at the same time, presents quite different views; yet it is deemed rather an advantage than a disadvantage to study the views entertained by different theological writers.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

MAY IS COME!

BY MARY HOWITT.

May is come, and May is flying!
Spring is here, and spring is dying!
Shout a welcome, frank and flowing;
Say farewell! for she is going.

'T is the hour when life is deepest;
'T is the time when most thou weepest;
'T is the day when flowers in numbers
Strew the sainted in their slumbers.

Buds are breaking; love is waking;
Time our very breath is taking.
We are jocund; we are drooping;
Summer comes, for Spring is stooping.

Love her! bless her! as she goeth,
Ere the grass the mower moweth;
Ere the cowslip hath departed,
Kiss sweet May, all tearful hearted.

For she goes to all the perished—
Goes to all the dearly cherished;
Sails the sea, and climbs the mountain,
Seeking Spring's eternal fountain.

May is come, and May is flying!
Spring is here, and Spring is dying;
Shout a welcome, frank and flowing;
Say farewell! for she is going.

GEORGE COMBE ON SUNDAY TRAINS.

At the recent half-yearly meeting of the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway Company, George Combe was one of the speakers upon the question of resuming Sunday trains. His speech was a very concise statement of the views entertained by that large and growing class to which he belongs, and we therefore copy the report of it furnished by the North British Mail. In this country, the advocates of laws to enforce the observance of Sunday have had much to say about the necessity of a weekly rest-day as inscribed on the organization of the human body and mind. It would be well for these men to study Mr. Combe's argument from their own favorite principles, and learn therefrom the danger of grounding the claims of the sabbatic institution upon reasons of their own invention instead of that given by the Author of the Sabbath.

Mr. George Combe, in supporting the motion for Sunday trains, said that the civil law interposed no obstacle to Sunday traveling. The Sheriff of Forfair sanctioned a steamboat sailing before and after service from Broughty Ferry to Dundee on Sundays, and the decision was never reversed. No greater extent of traveling was asked here. Did the religious law interdict it? He asked, where was the record of the laws of religion? The Sabbatarians pointed to the Bible and the Fourth Commandment. He joined issue with them on two questions in reference to the religious law; first, of the the right to enforce the interpretation of it which may be arrived at. The worst feature of Catholicism was the right claimed by the Pope and Council of that Church, to interpret the Scriptures by their own decrees, to the exclusion of the understandings and the consciences of laymen; and the grand feature of the Reformation was, that it successfully disputed that pretension as a spiritual usurpation, and asserted the right of every layman to read and interpret the Scriptures for himself, and to act on his own convictions. He stood here, therefore, to claim and to exercise the inherent right of a Protestant, and he told the gentlemen opposite that, after the best consideration of the Scriptures, and of a great extent of commentary upon them, in relation to this question, he had come to the conscientious conviction, that it was lawful, by the spiritual law, to travel, on works of necessity and mercy, on Sundays. It was sufficient for this argument, that he had the right, as a Protestant, to judge of this point for himself; but he might be permitted to observe, that he was supported in his interpretation by the practice on the majority of the railways of Scotland, and by the practice of England, Ireland, Protestant Holland, Germany, and America, in all of which he had traveled, as well as by that of all Roman Catholic countries. On this point, therefore, a knot of Scotchmen stand in antagonism to nearly the whole of the Christian world besides, and proclaim themselves as right, and all the others wrong. He said nothing of the modesty which characterizes men in such a position; but he asked them, in the second place, by what authority they claim a right to enforce their decision against any who differed from their opinions? The Roman Catholic hierarchy, claiming infallible authority in interpreting the Scriptures, consistently employed physical force to compel men to obey their interpretations. But the Protestant enjoyed the privilege of private judgment, and the civil law respected this right, and refused to interpose its arm of power to prevent Sunday traveling. To the consistent Protestant, therefore, who believed that it was sinful in man to travel on the Sunday, only one means of enforcing his opinion on his neighbor's observance remained; it was that of moral suasion and reasoning. If he was able to convert all to his opinions, the trains would be laid aside, because nobody would desire to use them; if he cannot convince, he must either leave others to follow the dictates of their own consciences, or seat himself in the chair of the Pope, for from that seat alone could he consistently employ physical force as a substitute for moral suasion in controlling his neighbor's actions.

Did he propose to abolish the Sabbath? Certainly not. The necessity for a day of rest was inscribed by God on the organization of the human body and mind before He instituted a Sabbath on the tables of stone, and it stood in all its original and indelible freshness in that living record still. God annexed the penalty of physical and mental exhaustion, moral and intellectual degradation, disease and premature death, to ceaseless, anxious toil, but he left each of his rational creatures free to judge of what constituted rest to himself. The Sabbatarians, in their dogmatic, literal interpretation of the Fourth Commandment, set the real law of rest, written by God in our constitution, at defiance. The Jews were a nation of shepherds and ploughmen, with little of literature, science, or manufactures to occupy their minds, and a day in seven of cessation from bodily toil was prescribed to them, and this was in harmony with the law of rest written in their organization. Their muscular system alone was exhausted by their labors, and simple rest was the adequate restorative. But the handloom-weaver, the shoemaker, the tailor, the book-printer, and our numerous artizans, who pass their lives within walls and under a roof, without locomotion and contact with the fresh breezes of heaven—did not find rest for their exhausted organisms, in being forced to sit within walls and under a roof during the whole of the seventh day also. After devoting a reasonable portion of the day to the direct worship of their Heavenly Father, they would best fulfil his law of rest by using the bath, and seeking health and strength in locomotive recreation. The care-worn man of business, exhausted by professional toil, would not find rest in adding a seventh day of mental study in dark theologies to his six days of intellectual labor; but he, too, needed recreation. The Christian religion liberated mankind from the rigid fetters of Judaism, and bestowed on them the freedom of rational beings. The Sabbatarians were the great Sunday desecrators. Turning a blind eye to the law of God, written in the human organism, and shutting their ears to the crying wants of human nature, they fixed on the letter of a Jewish commandment, and, by their narrow interpretations of it, labored to kill both the bodies and the minds of toiling people. They rendered the Sunday a weariness and a burden to hundreds of thousands, for whom a merciful God meant it to be a day of moral and religious instruction, combined with social and physical enjoyment and recreation. The consequences of their abandoning the rule of moral suasion alone to enforce their opinions, are similar to those which were exhibited by the Papists when they followed the same course. The Roman Catholic hierarchy, proud in their pretensions to infallibility, and arrogant in the exercise of temporal power, forget their own duties as Cristians and men. If Sabbatarians would relinquish the use of force, and rely on moral suasion, their own hearts would be softened and their understandings opened; they would cease to drive their own cabs and carriages on Sunday, and allow reasonable recreation to the toil-worn sons of commerce and manufactures. All Christian obedience must flow from the heart. An abstinence from traveling produced by locked gates and chained wheels, was not a tribute of respect to God's law, nor did it operate bene- felt himself degraded, from the condition of a free worshiper of God according to his conscience, into a slave, compelled by other men to obey their wills, and to yield to their conviction in place of his own. This produces hatred and rebellion in the mind, and not love, and peace, and joy. The Sabbatarians affirmed that it was proposed to compel the railway servants to violate their consciences in running trains on Sunday. He asked them whether they violate the consciences of their coachmen and cab-drivers when they required them to drive them to church and chapel, irrespective of their convictions, or surrender their places? His principles led him to the conclusion, that the railway servants who declined to accommodate those who desire to use the Sunday trains, should do as the Sabbatarians compel their servants to do, resign, and allow other men—whose consciences saw their duty in another light—to discharge the offices necessary for the welfare of society.

PRESENT STATE OF THE SEVEN CHURCHES.

At a recent meeting of the Asiatic Society, the Secretary read a memoir, by Capt. J. T. Newbold, on the present condition of the seven churches of Asia, mentioned in the Revelation, which the writer has recently visited. He observes, that the history of these interesting localities is well known, but their present condition has been little adverted to.

He begins his account with the church of Ephesus; the first mentioned by St. John, and that which still maintains its ecclesiastical superiority in giving a title to the Greek Archbishop, while the others have only Bishops at their head, though it is low in statistical importance. The port of Ephesus is now choked up by a pestiferous morass, and lonely walls, tenanted only by the jackal, occupy the site of the once populous city. The village of Ayasalux stands about a mile from the ruins, and contains about forty scattered cottages, one only tenanted by a Christian. The mosque of the village contains only four granite columns, said to have belonged to the great temple of Diana, whose ruins are still visible near the port. The mosque is going to decay, like the Christian church, and every thing appears to be in the last stage of dissolution. Capt. Newbold noticed that some of the granite which formed part of the ancient temple had exfoliated, evidently from extreme heat; and he suggested that this might have happened when the temple was consumed by fire.

Smyrna, the most flourishing of the whole, is an increasing city. Its population, which, twenty years ago, was about 77,000, is now 130,000, and is rapidly increasing. There are five Greek, three Latin, and two Protestant churches. The Greeks have numerous schools, and the Latins a large college; but the Protestant schools have failed. The Greek church at Smyrna continues in a flourishing condition.

Pergamos is the most prosperous of the cities, after Smyrna. The population is 16,000, of whom 14,000 are Turks, and nearly all the rest Christians. The Christian quarter contains two Greek churches and one Armenian. Close to the ancient church, Capt. Newbold found a Greek school, where the pupils were seated on marble tombstones, which formed the pavement of the school. He gives copies of three of the inscriptions there, none of which have hitherto been published.

Thyatira is still a flourishing town. It had been lost to the Christian world from the fall of Constantinople, under the Turkish name of Akhissar, until brought to light in the seventeenth century. The population is above 19,000, of whom 2,000 are Greek, and 120 Armenians, each having a church; the former said to be on the site of the apocalyptic church. Capt. Newbold copied several inscriptions there.

Sardis, the ancient capital of Crœsus, is now more desolate than even Ephesus. Scarcely a house remains. The melancholy Gyræan lake, the swampy plain of the Hermus, and the thousand mounds forming the necropolis of the Lydian monarchs, among which rises conspicuously the famed tumulus of Alyattes, produce a scene of gloomy solemnity. Massive ruins of buildings still remain, the wall of which is made up of sculptured pieces of Corinthian Ionic columns, that once formed portions of the ancient Pagan temples.

PEACE.

BY REV. I. EAST.

Oh, let their peace who love Thy law be mine,
  Peace such as theirs, who wait around Thy seat,
To catch Thy thoughts untold, Thy will divine,
  Then speed their ready course as lightning fleet.

Then am I blest with undisturb'd repose,
  When nature makes no struggle to be free
From the light yoke Thy holy laws impose,
  And ev'ry thought submits itself to Thee.

Pleasure and pain, toil, ease, the Cross, the crown,
  Alike be welcome, since from Thee they come;
The world may kindly smile, or sternly frown,
  If Thou art near to lead me safely home.

THE BIBLE IN MY TRUNK.

A few evenings ago, I was present at a tea-table where the conversation turned upon praying "before folk," some of the party contending that, where two travelers lodge in the same room for a night, it would look Pharisaical for one or the other to kneel down and "say his prayers" in the presence of the other; while the other party defended the propriety of it, and asserted it to be a duty. As an illustration, an incident was related, where two members of our church—at home, good men enough—both got into bed prayerless, for fear of praying before the other's eyes. This conversation, which was very interesting, and in the course of which many striking illustrations were brought up to prove the healthy example of never neglecting prayer, led a clergyman present to relate the following anecdote, perhaps may do some good:

"When I was a young man," said the clergyman, "I was clerk in Boston. Two of my room-mates at my boarding-house were also clerks, about my own age, which was eighteen. The first Sunday morning, during the three or four long hours that elapsed from getting up to bell-ringing for church, I felt a secret desire to get a Bible, which my mother had given me, out of my trunk, and read in it; for I had been so brought up by my parents, as to regard it as a duty at home to read a chapter or two in the Bible every Sunday. I was now very anxious to get my Bible and read, but I was afraid to do so before my room-mates, who were reading some miscellaneous books. At length my conscience got the mastery, and I rose up and went to my trunk. I had half raised it, when the thought occurred to me, that it might look like over-sanctity and Pharisaical, so I shut my trunk, and returned to the window. For twenty minutes I was miserably ill at ease. I felt I was doing wrong. I started for my trunk a second time, and had my hand upon the little Bible, when the fear of being laughed at conquered the better emotion, and I again dropped the top of the trunk. As I turned away from it, one of my room-mates, who observed my irresolute movements, said laughingly,

"'I——, what's the matter? You seem as restless as a weather-cock!'

"I replied, by laughing in my turn; and then, conceiving the truth to be the best, frankly told them both what was the matter. To my surprise and delight, they both spoke up, and averred that they both had Bibles in their trunks, but were afraid to take them out, lest I should laugh at them.

"'Then,' said I, 'let us agree to read them every Sunday, and we shall have the laugh all on one side.' To this there was a hearty response, and the next moment the three Bibles were out; and I assure you we all felt happier all that day for reading in them on that morning.

"The following Sunday, about ten o'clock, while we were reading our chapters, two of our fellow-boarders from another room came in. When they saw how we were engaged, they stared, and then exclaimed,

"'Bless us! what is this? A conventicle?'

"In reply, I, smiling, related to them exactly how the matter stood; my struggle to get my Bible from my trunk, and how we three, having found we had all been afraid of each other without cause, had now agreed to read every Sunday.

"'Not a bad idea,' answered one of them. 'You have more courage than I have. I have a Bible, too, but have not looked into it since I have been in Boston! But I'll read it after this, since you have broken the ice.'

"The other then asked one of us to read aloud, and both sat and quietly listened till the bell rang for church.

"That evening, we three in the same room agreed to have a chapter read every night by one or the other of us at nine o'clock, and we religiously adhered to our purpose. A few evenings after this resolution, four or five of the boarders (for there were sixteen clerks boarding in the house) happened to be in our room talking when the nine o'clock bell rang. One of my room-mates, looking at me, opened the Bible. The others looked inquiringly. I then explained our custom.

"'We'll all stay and listen,' they said, almost unanimously.

"The result was, that without an exception, every one of the sixteen clerks spent his Sunday morning in reading the Bible; and the moral effect upon our household was of the highest character. I relate this incident, to show what influence one person, even a youth, may exert for evil or good. No man should ever be afraid to do his duty. A hundred hearts may throb to act right, that only await a leader. I forgot to add, that we were called the 'Bible clerks!' All these youths are now useful and Christian men, and more than one is laboring in the ministry." [Banner of the Cross.

OUR DAILY BREAD.

From "The Mercy Seat," by Dr. Spring.

"Give us this day our daily bread." This prayer regulates the amount of our wants, and the measure of our desires. They are limited to a competency. If God's will so decide our destiny, "having food and raiment," we should "learn therewith to be content." We should be willing to live from day to day, fed by God, and from his table. Where our own duty is faithfully performed, we may not be anxious for to-morrow's bread; God would have us ever coming to him. We are not sure of to-morrow; we may not need his bounty then—for "what is your life; it is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little while, and then vanisheth away." Time flies, the stream of life is ebbing away. That distant, uncertain thing, to-morrow, would have crowned the most ardent hopes, but for the grave. When it came, it brought only a cypress wreath. While we covet the good things of this world, the almond tree flourishes on our head, the shroud is weaving for us, and the dark and narrow house becomes our home. Whatever other Scriptures may justify a prudent forethought for the things of this world, the petition which we are amplifying obviously gives no countenance to the spirit of hoarding up. If a Christian man were to make the experiment, he would find it a very difficult thing to pray for great wealth. The spirit of covetousness and of prayer do not dwell together in the same bosom. We are instructed to ask only as we need; there is danger in asking more. God may give more, but it is not safe to ask for more, lest he should say of us as he did of his restive and grasping people of other days—"I gave them their request, but sent leanness into their souls."

POOR, BUT RICH IN FAITH.

Mr. Le Brun, of Port Louis, Mauritius, stances of Christian liberality among the poorest of his flock:—

"We are now busy in collecting shillings and pence for the chapel. The other day a poor African came to my door, with his two children, the one eight, the other ten years old.

'Well, my good man,' I said, 'what do you want?'

'Sir, I was yesterday at chapel, and I heard you say that you would be happy to receive some trifles for the debts of the chapel. Well, sir, on my way home I was saying to myself, could I not do something—could I not give two shillings? My conscience said, Yes, and more too; thou couldst easily give eight shillings. Those little boys of mine said they must also give something too, and they have brought two shillings each.' So I received twelve shillings.

A poor woman, who used formerly to pay one shilling every month, had not made her appearance for this purpose during the year, though she attended regularly at the chapel. I said nothing to her, knowing her poor circumstances; but at length she came to see me.

'Well, Mary,' I said, 'I have not seen you bringing your shilling regularly every month, as you used to do.'

'No, sir,' she replied, 'but I am now come to pay for the year, and two months more, for I did not pay the last two months of the other year;' and she then placed in my hand fourteen shillings.

'My good woman,' said I, 'that is too much for you to give; I know you are poor—take half of this money back.'

'No, sir,' she said, 'I cannot; the money is not mine; it is the Lord's, and I could not persuade her to take back even one shilling.'

Liberality of Burmese Christians.—A Baptist missionary, writing from Maulmain, under date of October 30, gives the following account of the operations of a Missionary Society there, composed of Burmese Christians:—

"For the past four years it has sustained two domestic missionaries all the time, and part of the time three. The Burmese church, with which the society is connected, has averaged during those four years one hundred and fifty members. And the society has raised during that time, among the Burmese members, the sum of seven hundred and eighty-seven rupees and eight annas; which is an average of one rupee five annas—sixty cents—annually for every member of the church. These are facts for more enlightened Christians to ponder."

Dr. Chalmers says, in his Lectures on Romans: "The sum and substance of the preparation needed for a coming eternity is, that you believe what the Bible tells you, and do what the Bible bids you."

A generous man will, in his treatment to an enemy, resemble the sun, which pours light all around it—even upon the clouds that try to dim its luster.

The Sabbath Recorder.

RECEPTION OF CHURCH MEMBERS.

We believe it is not universally understood, that when a person makes application to be received into a church, the unanimous consent of the members present is necessary. Some appear to entertain the idea, that nothing more is requisite than the consent of the majority. We hold, that this idea is erroneous. The directions given in the eighteenth chapter of Matthew, in regard to the manner of adjusting difficulties between brethren, clearly show, that any unwillingness on the part of one person to treat another as a brother, is not allowable in the house of the Lord. There must be no divisions; they must all love and care for one another as members of the same body. Suppose, for illustration, that A. wishes to unite with the church. He is examined as to his religious exercises and faith in the Lord Jesus, and upon the question being taken, a majority vote to admit him to fellowship. B., who is already a member, does not, however, feel willing to receive him. What, then, is the consequence? The unwillingness which existed in B.'s mind becomes immediately developed in the form of a grievance, and hence there immediately arises a necessity for the same steps to be taken towards an adjustment, which are enjoined in the 18th chapter of Matthew. If these steps are followed out faithfully, the result will be, either a reconciliation, and hence the very unanimity which ought to have been insisted on in the first place, or else an expulsion of one or the other from fellowship, that unanimity may be preserved. It is clear, therefore, that though a majority vote may bring a person into the church, he cannot be retained there, without a constant violation of the law of Christ.

Sometimes, upon the question being submitted whether a person shall be admitted to fellowship, the majority will give an affirmative vote, while some will not vote at all. Their silence is, of course, construed into consent. It is, at all events, a fair presumption, that they feel no objection. After a few weeks or months, however, the person who has been received is found not to wear well. His conduct is such that his brethren begin to stand in doubt of him. Immediately some of those who kept silence, and refused to vote, when he first offered himself, are heard to say, that "they never felt willing that he should be a member of the church;" "they never voted for him," &c. Now we can but condemn such behaviour on the part of church members exceedingly. If they did not feel willing that the proposed union between the candidate had any justifiable ground for such unwillingness, it was their duty to speak. No person can keep silence under such circumstances without guilt. When the bans of marriage are proclaimed, it is expected that whoever knows cause why the union should not take place, will make it known, or else forever after hold his peace. A person who professes, weeks or months after a brother or sister has been received into fellowship, to have entertained some objection from the first, may think himself entitled to some praise for having had superior discernment to the rest of the church; but he does not consider that he proclaims, at the same time, his own wickedness. He might as well say, that he has, all along, been cherishing a secret unwillingness to regard the person of whom he speaks as a brother in Christ. He might as well say, that though he knew him to be no Christian, he did not choose to act the part of faithfulness towards him. This is a great evil; it too often occurs, and we hope it will receive attention. In receiving members into the church, every one should give an unequivocal and decided vote, yea or nay.

If our remarks on this subject are according to truth, they afford no inconsiderable evidence in favor of the congregational system of church government. For if, by the law of Christ, it is necessary that there should be entire unanimity in the reception of members, the idea of a church session, synod, or any other tribunal apart from the entire congregation, for the management of all cases of discipline, is utterly precluded.

THE ANNIVERSARIES.

With the present week commenced the anniversaries of the great benevolent and reformatory Societies which center in New York. The early hour at which our paper goes to press, renders it impossible to give a full account of them in the present number. Next week, however, we hope to present such a sketch as will make our readers familiar with the operations of the principal Societies. Meanwhile we give below a condensed statement of what has taken place up to the time of writing this.

On Sunday evening, the Annual Discourse before the American Bible Society was delivered at the Tabernacle by Rev. Dr. Holdrich. It was a very able and eloquent illustration of the superiority of the moral system contained in the Scriptures over all other ethical codes that have been presented to the acceptance of the world. On the same evening, Rev. Gardner Spring preached the Quarter-Century Sermon of the American Tract Society; and Rev. Dr. Adams preached before the American and Foreign Christian Union. Rev. Geo. B. Cheever was to have delivered a discourse, that evening, on the position and importance of the Sandwich Islands as a missionary station, but it was postponed on account of the inclemency of the weather.

The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions held a meeting on Sunday evening, at which an abstract of the Annual Report was read, and a sermon was preached by Rev. E. D. Smith. From the Report, we learn that the income of the Board, during the year, has amounted to $126,103 37, while the expenses have been $124,838 12, leaving the Treasury unembarrassed with any debt. Four devoted Christian women, missionaries of the Board, have died within the year, viz. Mrs. Ramsey, of the Choctaw Mission, Mrs. Loughridge, of the Creek Mission, Mrs. Rudolph, of the Lodiana Mission, and Mrs. Freeman, of the Allahabad Mission. Twenty-two persons are reported as having been sent forth as missionaries and assistant missionaries during the year, nine of whom were ordained ministers of the Gospel. The Missions to the Indian tribes of our country are now planted among the Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, Seminoles, Iowas and Sacs, Otoes and Omahaws, Chippewas and Ottawas. Thirty-five laborers are connected with these missions, of whom ten are ministers of the Gospel. In the African Missions of the Board, the most important event of the year was the sending forth of two ministers of the Gospel and their wives, to form a new mission on the western coast, near the equator. The three missions of the Board in India have a force of about sixty American and native laborers, not counting assistants who are not converts. Of these laborers twenty-four are ministers of the Gospel. The Mission of the Board in Siam consists of five persons, two of whom are ministers, and one a physician and licentiate preacher. These brethren were called to witness a terrible visitation of Providence, in the cholera at Bangkok, which carried to a heathen grave about thirty thousand persons in less than three weeks. The labors of the mission have been conducted as in former years, and a church has been organized, though with but one native member. In China, twenty-two persons are connected with the Canton and Ningpo missions, twelve of whom are ordained ministers, and one is a physician. Four of these laborers were sent forth during the year. In the schools, ninety-three children are receiving a Christian education, all excepting twenty supported by the missions. The press at Ningpo has issued over two millions of pages of the sacred Scriptures and religious tracts. The church at that city contains eight native members. A new mission is contemplated at Shanghai, to be formed in part by brethren sent from the Ningpo Mission. In Papal Europe, the Board has conducted its operations on the same plan as in former years. Funds are entrusted to Christian gentlemen of the highest character, who are themselves natives of the countries to be evangelized; and, by their agency, sums equal to the support of twenty colporteurs, have been expended for the spread of the true religion in Roman Catholic countries. Among the Jews, there are now three missionaries, two in this city and one in Philadelphia.

A COLLEGE—WHAT IS NEEDED.

In a former article, I endeavored to show the impropriety of a direct effort for a denominational College. Whichever way we turn, the position is strengthened. The great objection to it is, that it will stand directly in the way of educating the people. Had we a College, few, very few, compared with the whole, could avail themselves of the facilities. This few might indeed be useful in carrying forward the enterprises of the denomination, but they would be continually embarrassed for want of a corresponding advancement on the part of the people with whom and for whom they would be called to labor. Many of their plans, productions, thoughts, and sympathies, would be above and beyond those of the people, and therefore lost; and much of the vivacity and pathos of their own characters would evaporate for want of aliment in a kindred sympathy.

Another very objectionable feature is, that those who build the College must do it under the inspiration of hopes that are based on ideal premises; and when those hopes are delayed or disappointed, a state of apathy or absolute aversion will ensue, and my experience goes to satisfy me, that it is easier to build on unoccupied ground than amid the rubbish which such prejudices supply.

It is said, that our candidates for the ministry must have these facilities; but that is a meager view of education, which anticipates improving the few and neglecting the many. To be what we may, and to do what we ought, the people, the whole people, must be educated, as well the poor as the rich, as well laymen as ministers, as well our daughters as our sons. Give us educated mothers, and we shall have educated children; give us an educated laity, and, my word for it, we shall not be without an educated ministry. The people as really give character to the ministry, as the ministry to the people, and on the character of both depends the reputation and influence of the truth they profess.

In perfecting our plan, we must meet the wants of the people, or suffer the mortification of a disheartening failure. We cannot make a school of any kind. All that we can do successfully, is to furnish facilities for those actually requiring them, and such too as they can appreciate and embrace. No scheme can be practical which proposes that our youth shall migrate en masse from all parts of the denomination to any one point to receive their education. Though traveling facilities are multiplying, they cannot be made available without funds; and, as Yankees, we have a right to guess we can whittle out a cheaper way.

Our common schools are assuming something of the character they ought to maintain, but there are many who do not appreciate their importance, or lend a hearty cooperation in perfecting them. Unceasing vigilance to elevate these "people's colleges" should mark our steady zeal. Give all our youth a high standing in the best of primary schools, and you may as well dam up the waters of a swollen river, as to stifle their clamors for further opportunities. Academies they must have, and such too as keep pace with the progress of the times; and though it may be profitable for young persons to go abroad for a part of their education, yet for the mass these facilities must be at hand, approachable without great sacrifices of time or money. Ten good academies can be endowed and sustained more easily than one College, and each one of the ten would be far more efficient, in the present state of our denomination, than ten colleges could be without them. In fact, twenty good academies are necessary to supply materials for one College.

What we need, then, is, First, That our present academies shall be made as efficient as possible, and others added wherever there are youth enough habitually to fill them. Second—The spirit of enterprise must be aroused, and, as far as possible, all must see and feel that the work entrusted to us cannot be accomplished without the aid of that moral power which is the legitimate fruit of sanctified knowledge. Third—The aspiring, struggling poor, must be looked after, the faint-hearted encouraged, and all impediments, as far as possible, removed, so that all the young may at once embark in a campaign for knowledge which looks to no retreat. Finally, when our youth cannot be accommodated without a sacrifice of principle, or a greater sacrifice of other interests than would be required to build a College, let us count well the cost, and go up as one man to lay the foundation, and continue our work till we see it crowned with a cap-stone on which shall be inscribed "Holiness to the Lord."

Ways and means must be a theme for my next. JAS. R. IRISH.

WHERE SHOULD OUR YOUTH BE EDUCATED?

This question, long of deep solicitude to many, has received additional interest from the resolutions passed at the last Conference. The opinion of the Conference, as expressed in those resolutions, seems to have been, that the place was among ourselves, and that we needed a College and Theological Seminary for that purpose. There has lately appeared in the Recorder an article advising us to continue doing as we always have done—send them away to receive their education among those who are opposed to us in what we consider some of the most important principles of religion. Many have [illegible] an instructor of our youth—a guide to "Castalian fountains"—himself quaffing largely at Pierian springs. To some, regarding him thus, it came as a cold, damp, death-like blast upon their high and ardent hopes for the future advancement and prosperity of our educational interests.

Doubtless there are arguments both for and against educating our youth at Institutions sustained by the denomination. These should be adduced and compared, and, if possible, their relative importance ascertained. With this view the following reasons are offered.

Our young men are, or have been, scattered like sheep without a shepherd; some at Brown's University perhaps, some at Yale, some at Union, some at Madison, some at Oberlin, some at Beloit, and some—the denomination scarcely knows where. Thus scattered—with but little or no acquaintance with each other—without any central rallying point, save a common religious belief—without even knowing, in some instances, what the denomination is doing, or wishes to do—how can any thing bespeaking union, strength, or concert of action, be expected from them? In order to have our young men bound together by the indissoluble ties of Christian friendship—of a Christian brotherhood—it is necessary for them to consult together over their mutual interests—over the interests of religion—sing, and weep, and pray together over the interests of the world. They need to be at some place where they can be frequently visited by the ministers and other leading men of the denomination, and receive their counsel and encouragement. They also need to be where they can spend their vacations and short respits from study in the midst of our churches, or else be sent by them on agencies and missionary tours. By being thus situated, our youth would not be, as some have been, who, upon finishing their education, were not personally acquainted with scarcely half a dozen of our ministers, and knew not as much about the history and operations of our own denomination as of other denominations. They would be acquainted with the denomination, and the denomination would be acquainted with them, and know about what station they were best fitted to occupy; hence would not be compelled, as heretofore, to "cut and try" so much in order to ascertain the appropriate sphere for a young man.

It is true, that there may be some advantages in attending different Institutions; yet religious principles are in great danger, and young men frequently pay dearly for their "whistle." It may be true, that most of our young men, who have, heretofore, entered college, were established in their religious principles previous to entering. They have had so many difficulties to encounter, that they were not prepared to enter until advanced far towards the prime of life. But the cause of education is onward in our denomination, as well as in the rest of the world, and our young men will be ready to enter college at an earlier age than formerly, and consequently cannot be expected to be as well prepared to withstand the temptations of college life.

Please to take the following illustrations as a practical view of the subject:—Some of those who have been scattered among different Institutions, have found themselves hundreds of miles from any known Seventh-day Baptist. They were virtually obliged, by the rules of the Institution, to keep two days each week, and make up the time thus lost by studying more severely during the five already over-taxed days; and, though poor as Pharaoh's lean-fleshed kine, were, nevertheless, prevented from doing any thing towards defraying their expenses, while others, who had six days to labor in, could do much towards paying their way. One was compelled to fight, inch by inch, for the truths he held sacred, contending, day after day, with learned and grave Professors, who ought to have been guides to truth, rather than error. He was obliged to neglect his other duties to frame arguments to meet their subtilties—obliged to hear the Seventh-day Baptists taunted and ridiculed as a set of perfect ignoramuses, if they might be judged by their writings, while his relations as a student would not permit him to reply to such language in a manner which it deserved—obliged to meet remarks and actions that said: "Poor thing, we pity you for belonging to a denomination that has no college of its own, so that you are compelled to forsake all of your Christian associations to obtain an education; we do really hope your denomination will be better off one of these days." Then it was that he prayed, earnestly prayed, that this reproach might be removed from us, and solemnly consecrated himself to that object. Another, in a different Institution, was offered station, preferment, and honor, if he would but forsake the Sabbath of the Lord. The struggle between conscience and the temptation presented, was long and severe; but, after many prayers and tears, conscience prevailed. Another—if report is true—has forsaken the Sabbath, at least as long as he may remain in college. In times past, there have been instances of young men forsaking the Sabbath, and becoming eminent in other denominations. The truth is, that the young are more easily swerved by persuasion and kindness than by abstract truth; hence, when they meet with kind and hearty receptions—when they are presented with bright prospects of usefulness, and entreated to accept of such offers, it is not strange if they should occasionally yield to the temptation.

This thrusting our youth out to contend, "single-handed and alone," with errors in high places, before they are prepared for it, reminds one of the gladiatorial contests of ancient Rome. If they fall in the contest, and yield their former belief, do we not virtually say, "thumbs back—let them go—they are too fickle-minded to be worth anything to us;" but if they gain the victory, then "thumbs, hands up—they are worthy of our honor?" This, too, without giving them that previous preparatory training that was granted to gladiatorial combatants. Would not such a course be more like those nations where the father looks coolly on, and sees his son perish, rather than help him; but if he gains the victory, "single-handed and alone," lavishes unnumbered favors upon him?

Again, if this argument for sending our youth to other colleges, is of weight, it will apply with much of its force to our academies. Suppose we should hear one arguing, that "our academies cost money, cost labor to support them, while the warmest sectarian academies will permit the enjoyment of the Sabbath unmolested. There are academies where our youth may vindicate the truth wholly unrestrained, and be more honored for manly adherence to principle, and where the indigent may share equally with others the benefits of benevolent and State funds. Shall we then exhaust our energies, and slight public provisions made ready at our hands, which belong as really to us as to any other citizens? Must we have a little sanctum of our own, where we may shut up the light which Heaven has put into our hands to emblazon abroad?" It would not take long or deep investigation to discover the fallacy of such reasoning in respect to our academies. Why, then, should it in regard to a college?

If this scattering system is so much preferable to concentration, why have not some other denominations, that have faithfully tried both, discovered long ere this its benefits? Instead of this, we find those denominations that have the greatest influence taking the most pains to establish denominational Institutions. We find single individuals giving their thousands and tens of thousands for this purpose. They find, that by this system their young men, as a mass, are better educated. Their ministers are so educated as better to advance the interests of the denomination. Their missionary enterprises thrive better; more men are furnished for foreign fields. In short, all of the important aggressive and progressive movements of the denomination are promoted by a denominational system of education. If such a system works well in other denominations, why would it not in our own?

If we mean to advance; if we wish to educate our youth in a way that will best promote the interests of the denomination; if we wish to raise up and send forth missionaries; if we wish to hold up the Sabbath to the world in a manner that will claim its observance; if we wish to exert a commanding influence—we must have a College and Theological Seminary.

A FRIEND OF PROGRESS.

Missionary Operations.—The Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society held their regular quarterly meeting at Plainfield, N. J., on the 1st inst. Letters were read from brethren Carpenter and Wardner, of Shanghai, China, written in December and January last, from which it appears that they are prosecuting their missionary work with vigor, and meet with much encouragement. At their last communion season they enjoyed the company of a Chinaman who had recently been baptized, after having given satisfactory evidence of his conversion to Christ. They urge the importance of erecting a chapel at Shanghai in a more eligible location than that at present occupied. The Board, satisfied of the feasibility of the plan, have determined to make an effort to raise the necessary funds, and have appointed Eld. Thomas B. Brown an agent for that special purpose. Letters were also read from Eld. Samuel Davison, missionary of the Society in Illinois, who represents the prospects on his field of labor as quite flattering.

Freetown, Sierra Leone.—Freetown is the chief missionary station in the English Colony of Sierra Leone—a settlement commenced many years since for the poor Negroes recaptured by British ships of war, and thus delivered from slavery. It is therefore well named Freetown. There are numerous smaller towns in the colony, occupied chiefly by these re-captured Africans. Missionary efforts were commenced in Sierra Leone by the English Episcopal Church Missionary Society forty-five years ago, and by the English Wesleyan Missionary Society thirty-two years ago. Their missions have been crowned with success. The former society reported last year 2100 communicants. Upwards of 7500 scholars were receiving instruction in the mission schools. The Episcopal Society has twenty-two European laborers, male and female, in its West African Missions; besides a large number of native laborers. In former years these missions suffered severely from the sickness and death of their numbers. We note, therefore, with the greatest pleasure, a statement in the last annual report of the Society, that "seven years have now elapsed since any Missionary or Catechist of the Society has died in the Colony of Sierra Leone."

Socialism in France.—Speaking of the activity of the French Socialists in view of the approaching election, one of the papers says that the Government has restrained their licentiousness in some degree by suppressing their meetings, at one of which the well-known Abbé Chatel turned the Scriptures into ridicule, and observed, that the Christian Religion had made a grievous mistake in setting bounds to the gratification of the passions. He advocated in strong terms the full and unrestricted gratification of all human appetites, and maintained, that in the most sensual materialism was placed the supreme felicity of man. "I know no God," he said, "except the Sun, and him only because he is visible." The [illegible] qualified the declaration by adding, that no doubt he spoke of the Sun as the symbol of another still more powerful.

Decease of Clergymen.—At Barkhampstead, Conn., 4th ult., Rev. Aaron Gates, aged 60, a graduate of Williams College in 1804, and pastor, successively, of Congregational Churches in Montague and Amherst, Mass., and Hartland, Conn.... At Providence, R. I., 19th ult., Rev. Seth Chapin, in his 67th year, a graduate of Brown University in 1808, and pastor, successively, of Congregational Churches in Hillsborough, N. H., Hanover, Mass., and Granville, Mass. At Gilmanton, N. H., Rev. William Cogswell, D. D., aged 62, a graduate of Dartmouth College in 1811, sometime pastor of the South Congregational Church, in Dedham, and afterward, successively, Secretary of the American Education Society, Prof. of History and National Education in Dartmouth College, and President of Gilmanton Theological Seminary.

Sunday Meeting for the Boys.—Handbills were recently posted up in different parts of New York, calling a "Boys' Meeting" for Sunday afternoon. At the time and place indicated, about 150 boys assembled, and were entertained by several gentlemen who had volunteered for the occasion. Prayer, singing, and addresses, were listened to with respectful attention, considering the character of the audience. It is said that the meetings are to be continued, and that they are intended for the same class of persons as are trained in the Ragged Schools of London.

Sunday Travel in Pennsylvania.—The question of stopping Sunday trains on the Pennsylvania Railroad has been thoroughly discussed for a few weeks past, and finally voted upon by the stockholders. The result shows a majority of over five thousand and six hundred shares in favor of the Sunday trains. Of course they will at once be resumed. The decision in this case will no doubt exert an extensive and salutary influence.

The Convention at Berlin.—The Sabbath Convention at Berlin, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., is to be held on the fourth and fifth days of the week, May 15th and 16th. We are requested to state, that a conveyance for friends from abroad on their way to the Convention, will leave Congress Hall, Troy, on the morning of Third-day, May 14.

A Concession.—It is stated that Rev. Mr. Hastings, of Boston, has been appointed by Mr. Cass, Chaplain to the United States Legation at Rome, and the Government sanctions his preaching every Sunday at the embassy—a concession which the English have endeavored to obtain for the last sixty years.

University for Mechanics.—A Society of Mechanics at Lockport, N. Y., have issued an address to their brethren throughout the State in favor of establishing a sort of University, on the manual labor plan, in which their children may be qualified for eminence as Artisans, Architects, and Engineers. The cost of establishing such an institution, completing the necessary buildings, and fitting it out with furniture, provisions, preceptors, and assistants, for one year, is estimated at $100,000, or less than $1 to each mechanic in the State of New York. The plan is very well laid out in the address; and if it can be accomplished—as no doubt it can be—will prove of incalculable service to the class by whom it is originated.

Governor of Connecticut.—On the 2d inst., Thomas H. Seymour was elected Governor of Connecticut, on a joint ballot of the Senate and House of Representatives of that State. On the following day he was inaugurated, and forthwith delivered his Message. He recommends the enactment of a general law under which corporations or associations for banking purposes may be formed—the abolition of the death penalty, and the substitution therefor of imprisonment for life—the passing [illegible] law to exempt the homestead from sale on execution—the modification of the existing laws for the suppression of the liquor traffic, so as to do away with their objectionable features—the adoption of a law making ten hours constitute a legal day's labor, in cases where no previous contract has been made to labor for any specific time during a day—the repeal of the usury laws—the retrenchment of State expenses, and the payment of the State debt.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. Second-day, April 29.

The Senate talked about the Polar Expedition of Mr. Grinnell, and the Public Printing; passed a bill authorizing the negotiation of treaties with the Indians South and West of the Missouri River; took up the bill granting alternate sections of public land to the State of Illinois, to aid in the construction of the Central Railroad; listened to a long debate upon the general principle of appropriating lands for works of internal improvement; and, without coming to any conclusion, adjourned at a quarter past four o'clock.

House of Representatives.

The House agreed to make the proposition giving bounty lands to soldiers in all our wars a special order for the third Tuesday in June. A resolution of inquiry relative to the printing of Congress, was adopted. Then followed a debate on the Census Bill, in which Messrs. Moore of Penn., Kaufman of Texas, Clark of New York, Woodward of South Carolina, Carter of Ohio, and King of N. Y., participated.

In Senate. Third-day, April 30.

Mr. Seward presented several anti-slavery petitions.

Mr. Hunter, from the Finance Committee, reported a bill in relation to Mints, the object of which was to facilitate the coinage of bullion, which was, by unanimous consent, taken up for consideration. An amendment reported from the Committee, making provision for the exchange of coin, in any required amount, for all bullion which may be presented, was adopted, and the bill was passed.

The bill granting lands to aid in the construction of the Central Railroad, was taken up, and a long debate ensued on the subject of granting public lands for the construction of railroads, which continued till the Senate adjourned.

House of Representatives.

After the appointment of a committee to investigate the causes of delays and abuses of the public printing, the House took up the Census Bill. Mr. Vinton, of Ohio, suggested two amendments—one of which determines beforehand, that the House shall for the next ten years consist of two hundred members, with such additions as may be required by the admission of new States into the Union; so that each State may proceed, upon the publication of the Census, to determine its proper quota of members, and provide for their election, without waiting for the passage of an apportionment bill by Congress; the other would authorize the President, in 1860, 1870, and every ten years thereafter, to proceed to take the Census, without awaiting the passage of a special act by Congress.

In Senate. Fourth-day, May 1.

The bill to increase the rank and file of the army, and to encourage enlistments, was taken up and passed.

The bill to aid Mr. Grinnell's expedition in search of Sir John Franklin and his companions was passed.

House of Representatives.

The House spent the day on the Census Bill, and decided not to strike out the sections which provide for collecting statistics of production, wealth, &c.; the vote stood 98 to 44, or more than two to one. No other amendments were acted upon.

In Senate. Fifth-day, May 2.

Several unimportant private bills were passed, after which the bill granting right of way and a quantity of land to the State of Illinois, to construct the Central Railroad, was taken up, and, after a lengthy discussion, passed. The Senate then adjourned over to Second-day.

House of Representatives.

The House talked about changing our Geographical Meridian, and then about the free navigation of the St. Lawrence, but in either case to no purpose; after which it took up, in Committee of the Whole, the Census Bill, and voted on several amendments.

House of Representatives. Sixth-day, May 3.

The House spent some three hours in Committee of the Whole on amendments to the Census Bill, when the bill was laid aside, and Mr. Wilmot made a strong speech in favor of the Proviso and the admission of California. Adjourned over till Second-day.

General Intelligence.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM EUROPE.

Two steamers from Liverpool, the Cambria and the Canada, have arrived since our last; bringing two weeks later news from all parts of Europe, the substance of which will be found below.

The English Ministry has been defeated in Parliament on two or three minor questions, which gives force to the general belief, that they will be compelled to resign.

The Bishop of Exeter has brought the Gorham case before a Court of Law.

On the Continent, things remain very quiet; but reports from France indicate rather a critical state of affairs. The Socialists, as the elections draw near, evince the most deadly hatred toward the present Government. They have nominated EUGENE SUE as their candidate for Paris.

The Greek question has not been adjusted, and in the event of the failure of the friendly offices of France, there is every reason to apprehend serious difficulty between England and Russia, as the former, in the event stated, has given Admiral Parker express orders to enforce a complete blockade of the coast of Greece. Should he do so, the emperor of Russia has given positive assurances of his intention to advance to the assistance of King Otho. The Greek commerce, it is said, has already suffered by the English blockade to the amount of two millions sterling, which, with the destruction of the crop by frost, will cause a large falling off in the revenue, and is calculated to increase the growing discontent of the people.

The Pope has returned to Rome. It is said that there was no pomp or display, beyond the necessary guard. A triumphal arch erected at Valletria, in honor of the return, was burned by the people.

From Malta we have news that the Roman Catholic religion has been proclaimed as the predominant religion of the Island.

A frightful loss of life occurred at Angiers, France, on Monday, by the breaking down of a suspension bridge over the Loire, by which about 300 of the 11th Regiment of Light Infantry were drowned. Serious outbreaks had occurred at Angiers, and one regiment had been altogether broken up.

The leaders of the Hungarian revolution, having three months ago been summoned to surrender within ninety days, all who have not done so have been sentenced to death for contumacy. Among them are Kossuth, Zebeski, and others.

A Turkish frigate arrived at Malta on the 8th, with about 200 refugees on board. They proceeded to Belgium and thence to England and the United States.

The probable peaceful settlement of the Schleswig quarrel is growing daily more remote. The army of Schleswig Holstein is making active preparations for deciding the matter by hard knocks.

The Overland Mail from India and China had arrived, bringing dates from Bombay to the 16th March, and Calcutta to the 7th, Hong-Kong 27th February. The expedition under Sir Colen Campbell, sent from Peshewan against the Hill tribes, has been defeated, with the loss of over one hundred men. The Hindoo and Musselman population in the city Migerapoor had risen against each other, under the influence of religious fanaticism, and the city was destroyed by fire.

By the new Postal Treaty between France and England, the postage on all letters from the United States, as well as those passing through England from the United States, or elsewhere, is to be reduced from twenty to six pence. There is also to be an assimilation of weights similar to what exists between England and the United States.

Miscellaneous Items.

Recently, in the course of a trial at the Yorkshire assizes, it became a question as to what was a proper charge to be made by a railway engineer for his "professional" services, and an eminent engineer in that county was asked how much he charged per day as consulting engineer. The reply was, "That varies from 10 guineas to 100, according to circumstances." [Laughter.]

A female monkey in the Hull Zoological Gardens lately produced a cub, the fourth which she has brought forth in those gardens, at intervals of about two years, and all the four are alive and thriving. It is said that there is no other known instance of a monkey having borne even a second cub in this country.

For the first time since the Reformation, a Roman Catholic gentleman has been selected as high sheriff for the county of Syffolk, in the person of Sir Thomas Rookwode Gage, Bart, of Hengravehall, near Bury St. Edmund's, a member of one of the oldest Roman Catholic nobility.

Letters have been received from Stoperton, giving a most painful account of the decaying health of the poet Moore, whose death was daily apprehended. For three months past Mr. Moore had not left his room, and altogether his condition was considered hopeless.

The Norfolk Chronicle announces that Dr. Wolff has volunteered to Lady Franklin to accompany the expedition to the North Pole, or to go by land with the Esquimaux, among whom some of his countrymen are missionaries, in search of Sir John Franklin.

Lately, at the Gainsborough County Court, the vicar of Gainsborough successfully sued a person for marriage fees. The bridegroom had borrowed the money, but, when the ceremony was completed, refused to pay, and spent the money at a neighboring public house.

The Times intimates that the Archbishop of Canterbury will hold a special visitation in the diocese of Exeter, in his capacity of metropolitan, for the purpose of instituting Mr. Gorham.

A new machine, capable of making 26,000 perfect bricks per hour, at the cost of about one guinea, has recently been exhibited by the Messrs. Harts, engineers of London, and was highly approved of.

Sixteen human skeletons, supposed to be the remains of warriors who fell in battle centuries ago, have been discovered in a field at Long Sutton, by a man employed in digging a ditch.

A valuable silver mine has been found on Ell Bridge Estate, parish of Landulph, near Saltash, County of Cornwall. The ore is in great abundance, and near the surface.

It is understood that a council of such English Bishops as hold the doctrine of baptismal regeneration will shortly be held.

It is said to be in contemplation to build several model lodging-houses in Oxford, under the auspices of the parochial clergy.

STEAMBOAT EXPLOSION AND LOSS OF LIFE.

About 1 o'clock on Sunday morning, April 28, the steamer Anthony Wayne, on her way from Sandusky to Cleavland, burst her boilers, dividing the cabin and hurricane-deck in two parts. The life-boat was jammed between the wheel-house and cabin, and was got out with difficulty, and when launched, half-filled, and floated off with no one in it. The Captain gave those about him some directions, sprang into the water, and reached the boat, and with five others made for the shore in search of assistance. The mate, with some dozen others in the yawl, espied a vessel in the distance, made for it, and at last succeeded in reaching the schooner Elmira, which immediately commenced beating down to the wreck, which she reached about half-past 7 A. M., and took off the uninjured, scalded and dead from the deck.

When the hull went down, the cabin broke in two pieces, the smaller remaining attached to the mast by the shrouds, and the latter to the stern, by the tiller ropes. On the first were Messrs. Mollen and Pettinger, and some six or eight others—on the latter, Mr. Eddy, 13 others uninjured, 1 badly scalded, and three dead. The cabin floated, but the doors, panels, &c. being carried away, it rose as close to the top or hurricane deck as bedding, chairs, &c. would allow, leaving the deck about two feet above water. On this deck the survivors and the dead remained during six long hours, while this frail support heaved with every undulation of the lake, shaping itself to the waves. Four women and two children were on the wreck, and they bore up nobly. Those on the forward portion were most exposed to the action of water, and were nearly frozen.

The total number of lives lost is estimated at 75. Of the crew, 11 are known to have been lost, and 15 were saved.

AFFECTING INCIDENT.—The case of Mr. Archer Brackney is of thrilling interest. He was on his way from Lafayette, Ia., to Philadelphia, with the remains of his wife and child, recently deceased. Both of the corpses were inclosed in one box. When the explosion took place, he succeeded in dragging his two living children from their rooms, and with them plunged into the water. After swimming around for a short time, he came in contact with the box containing his wife and child. Upon this he succeeded for some time in keeping himself and children from drowning, although every wave would roll his frail support, and plunge them in the water, until at last his little boy, two years old, was drowned in his arms. After becoming satisfied that his boy was dead, he reluctantly parted with the body, and turned his attention to the rescue of the remaining child, who was clinging around his neck, crying, "Papa! we shall drown!" He finally succeeded in gaining the floating part of the wreck, with his little daughter, and both were saved.

INDIAN MASSACRE.

From the St. Paul (Minnesota) Chronicle, April 6.

Our community has just been startled with the painful intelligence of another of those sanguinary scenes, so common in the annals of the two powerful tribes of the North-West —the Sioux and the Chippewas. On Wednesday morning last, about sunrise, a war party of Sioux from the villages of Little Crow and Red Wing, surprised a small encampment of Chippewas, on Apple River, Wisconsin, and killed and scalped fourteen of them, without loss or injury to the attacking party. They also took one boy prisoner. Few men were with the party of Chippewas—it being mostly composed of women and children, engaged in making sugar. The fourteen killed comprised three men, three nearly grown boys, six females, women and children, and two male children. The attack was upon ground heretofore ceded by the Sioux to the Government, but upon which, by treaty stipulation, they still have the privilege of hunting. The place is 20 or 25 miles north-east of Stillwater.

On Thursday, the Sioux warriors appeared in the streets of Stillwater, and went through the scalp dance, in celebration of their victory—forming a circle round the Chippewa boy—their prisoner—and occasionally striking him on the face with their reeking trophies. The boy, we understand, has already been adopted into one of the families at Little Crow Village.

RAILROAD LIABILITIES.—At a recent trial in the city of Troy, Judge Parker decided, that when a passenger, at one end of a continuous line of railroads, owned by different companies, pays his fare through, and delivers his baggage to the agents of a company at one end of the route, that company is liable for its loss by the way; and that it is no defense, if the loss happened after the baggage was transferred to the agents of another road of the same line; but the undertaking and liability of the company receiving it, is for its safe delivery through the whole distance for which they have taken pay.

The Massachusetts Supreme Court have decided, that a railroad company is liable for a trunk lost or stolen, and for such valuable articles contained in it as may be considered connected with personal apparel, such as a watch and chain, and for so much money as may be considered necessary for traveling expenses, but not for large sums of money or merchandise thus carried unless specially notified. [Northern Journal.

ILLNESS OF THE POET WORDSWORTH.—A private letter from Ambleside, of March 25, informs the New York Literary World of the dangerous illness of the poet Wordsworth. "Before you receive this," is the language of the letter, "Mr. Wordsworth will have recovered or died—he is very ill to-day, and it is my impression that we are to lose him soon." The poet was born on the 7th of April, 1770, consequently he would complete his eightieth year this present month.

GOLD IN INDIANA.—Relative to the gold in Indiana, of which much has lately been said, the N. Y. Tribune makes the following statement on the authority of a gentleman of high character, who is well acquainted with the facts:—

The gold has been found partly in position in quartz rock, and partly in the sands of Salt and Beanblossom creeks, in the county of Brown, some sixty miles northwest of Madison, and twenty west of Columbus, near the line of the Madison and Indianapolis Railroad. Some of the best specimens of gold in crystalized quartz have been found by the surveying party now locating the Columbus and Bloomington Railroad. Both the streams named have yielded gold on the washing of their sands, but we cannot say to any extent. One gentleman says he washed out seven dollars' worth in the course of an afternoon. There are about one hundred persons now washing, and their number is daily increasing. The people of the surrounding country are allowing themselves to become somewhat excited on the subject, and have named the locality "Little California." We advise them to keep cool. It is very probable that a bed of salt or a quarry of limestone or plaster would have been far more beneficial to them.

NEW STEAMER.—The steamer "City of Glasgow," the first of the New York and Glasgow Line, arrived at New York on the 3d inst., after a passage of 17 days. She is a three-decker, built of iron, of about 1,600 tons measurement, and is propelled by a screw 13 feet in diameter and 18 feet pitch, which is worked by two lever beam engines of 350 horse power. The machinery is all placed so low as to leave the sweep of the decks clear without incumbrance. The total length of the main deck is 237 feet, and the breadth 34 feet. On each side are ranged the state rooms, leaving 16 feet clear in the center. The height between decks is 7 feet. The accommodation for each class of passengers is admirable and complete. She will carry 51 cabin or first class passengers, 85 second class, and 400 steerage emigrants. The crew, including officers, engineers, firemen, stewards, sailors, &c., probably number about 70, so that she will carry a total living cargo of upwards of 600. There is ample storage for 1,200 tons of goods. In addition to the screw motive power, the City of Glasgow is bark-rigged, and will carry an enormous press of canvas.

SUMMARY.

Four persons have been arrested at Boston for the murder and robbery, about six years ago, of Mr. Parker, Tax-Collector of Manchester, N. H. They are the brothers Wentworth, of Saco, Me., and a Mr. Clark, a trader in Nashau. Two of the Wentworths have been before arrested, but discharged for the want of sufficient evidence. Dr. Smith, now in confinement at Saco for murder, is reported to have given information which is very strong.

The Albany Freeholder announces that a trial was to have taken place during the last week at Kingston, to test the validity of a title to about 300,000 acres of land lying in Sullivan and Delaware counties. It was formerly known as the grant to the town of Rochester. It is brought by Mr. Neal Benson as an action for trespass, and to recover possession of the whole tract.

The break in the Erie Canal, near Syracuse, has occasioned great delay and inconvenience. One day last week, a Syracuse paper stated, that there were 1,500 boats lying in that vicinity, manned by three times that number of hands, and twice the number of horses—hay $16 per ton, and oats from four to six shillings. The string on the eastern section extended a distance of nine miles. The break is repaired.

There was a great freshet in the Hudson River above Albany last week, several of the booms in its upper branches having given way, causing great destruction to property. The thawing of the heavy snows North produced the freshet.

Five persons lost their lives by the falling of the wall in Water-st., N. Y., on the 29th ult. The case has been examined by a Coroner's Jury, who say they cannot attach any blame to the city authorities, fire department, or to parties interested in the building or goods in it.

Thomas Schoonmaker was so hurt at Ulsterville, Ulster Co., recently, by the bursting of a grindstone, that he died soon after. The stone weighed 2,600 lbs., and was running at the rate of 400 revolutions a minute. He was grinding scythes, a trade he had followed for 20 years.

The wife of Mr. Peter Bender of Erie recently became the mother of three children at a birth, all daughters, and doing well. This woman, we are told, is about 23 years of age, and has six children living, after burying one. Her husband is said to be 37 years old.

At the Circuit held at Schenectady recently, Helen M. Thatcher obtained a verdict of $1,200 against Mr. Lewis, the proprietor of a line of stages between Schenectady and Saratoga Springs, for injuries sustained by the upsetting of the stage in which she was a passenger.

The anniversary of the Battle of Bunker Hill, 17th June, is to be celebrated at Charlestown. Hon. Edward Everett has been invited to deliver the oration, and President Taylor has been invited to be present. The city authorities of Charlestown have voted an appropriation of $1,000 toward the celebration.

The Louisville Journal of the 26th ult. says: The steamer Empire State burst off a cylinder-head and shot a piston rod against the mud-valve on the 15th, about 300 miles above Vicksburg, by which several deck passengers were scalded, one of them very severely.

Col. C. G. De Russy and his three sons, all of age, were drowned in Sibley's Lake, in the neighborhood of Natchitoches, a few days since. They had gone out in a small boat fishing, and were caught in a squall—the boat upset, and they were drowned.

It was calculated that at the beginning of April there was not more fodder in Pictou country than would keep alive one-half of the stock for three weeks.

A letter dated Lowell, Mass., April 26th, says: The Directors of the Suffolk Cotton Mills have decided to stop making cloth at the present ruinous prices, and have to-day given notice to the 500 persons employed by the Company, that the services of one-half of their number must be forthwith dispensed with. It is stated, on good authority, that a similar disposition will be made of those employed by the "Boott," "Tremont," and "Massachusetts" Cotton Mills, which Corporations employ 3,200 persons, and represent a capital of $3,500,000.

An extra from the office of the True Democrat announces that the steamer Anthony Wayne blew up opposite Vermillion on the 21st ult. The Wayne came to Sandusky with 10 steerage passengers and 20 in the cabin. At Sandusky she took from the train 24 passengers, which, together with her crew, made 74 in all. The number of lost and missing is 35 to 40. Nineteen of the crew and 30 of the passengers were saved, and are in a fair way of recovery.

The Directors of the Watertown & Rome Railroad have resolved to complete the road from Rome to Cape Vincent in 1851. A meeting of the stockholders of the Sackets Harbor and Ellisburgh Railroad is called for the 13th May. This road is also to be built with all practicable dispatch, and completed within 18 months. These Railroads will connect at two points the lake coast of Jefferson County with the thoroughfare leading to New York and Boston.

A correspondent of the Tribune says that it is a somewhat singular fact, that no colored persons, either free or slaves, are offering to emigrate to Liberia, this Spring, from Maryland. For some years past, enough have volunteered to fill two or three vessels annually, and frequently the Colonization Society has been unable to send out all who desired to go. Why it is so, remains a mystery.

Hon. John W. Davis, Consul at Canton, in one of his lettters to the State Department, alludes to a memorandum which he had obtained of the vessels which had sailed from Hong Kong to California. Eighteen vessels, with cargoes valued at over half a million of dollars, had left that port for that trade within three months.

The steamer Confidence, built to run between New York and Shrewsbury, sails in a few days for San Francisco, via the Straits of Magellan, touching at Panama for passengers, as she has been fitted up to carry 180 persons. She is intended to ply between San Francisco and Sacramento City.

The quotation for Land Warrants is very irregular, and will continue so until Congress comes to some decision on the question of giving away Public Lands to emigrants, settlers, &c. &c. Buyers are offering only $115 a $118 for regular Warrants.

A glaring proof of the immorality of the Viennese is furnished by the return of births during the past year. The total number of children born was 19,241; of these 10,360 were illegitimate. Munich and Paris have hitherto borne the worst characters in this respect, but this return throws them in the shade.

An effort is in progress in Poughkeepsie, to establish a chair manufactory upon the principle of associated labor. From twenty to thirty practical men, acquainted with the various departments of the trade, are each to invest one hundred dollars, appoint one of their number the business man, and all labor and share the profits.

A law has created the old house at Newburgh, N. Y., known as Washington's Headquarters, a homestead for the people, and appropriations have been made to lay out the ground, &c. It is under charge of the Trustees at Newburgh, who appoint a steward, to be paid at the rate of not more than $100 a year for his services.

Intelligence has been received at the Indian Bureau, Washington, from Col. Calhoun, Agent at Santa Fé, that Miss White, who was carried away by the Indians, after the latter had cruelly murdered her mother, had also been murdered by them.

Gov. Slade of Vermont arrived at Buffalo on Monday evening. The Buffalo Republic says he is accompanied by twenty-three young ladies, whom he is escorting to the Western States, where they will be employed as teachers.

In Edgartown, Mass., the support of the poor is let out to the lowest bidder. Mr. William Vincent got the job this year at $1,175. Of course he goes into the matter as a speculation; the nearer the recipients of this public "charity" come to starving, the larger the profits of the speculation.

The mail from Norwich to Utica, N. Y., was recently cut open and robbed of most of its contents. The robbery was not discovered until the mail was deposited in the Utica office.

The funeral of Mr. Calhoun took place at Charleston, S. C., on Thursday, April 25. Business was suspended, banks, stores and public offices closed, and the buildings along the streets arrayed in mourning.

On the 2d inst., the Chemung River Bridge, at Elmira, N. Y., and a store each side, were consumed by fire. Loss about $50,000. It was thought to be the work of an incendiary, as camphene was found poured across the bridge.

The "Knocking Spirits" have appeared at Barnesville, Conn., and have commenced throwing silver spoons at a Mr. Matthews. He says he has no objections to the knockings, if they will only throw five more spoons, and make up the set.

The celebrated and prolific novelist, Countess Hahn-Hahn, has become a convert to the Roman Catholic faith. She publicly renounced Protestanism in the Church of St. Hedwig, in the presence of a large concourse of friends and admirers.

There were seven inches of snow at St. Louis on the 14th ult.

A little girl about four years old, daughter of a Mr. Davis, was recently burned to death in Darien, Conn., by her clothes taking fire.

In Baltimore, the other day, a Mr. William Ward went into a chamber in which his wife was lying bed-ridden, and after boring a gimlet into the wood-work over a closet door, deliberately hung himself directly before her eyes by a rope attached to the gimlet. The wife could do nothing but scream, which brought other females to her assistance, but before any males arrived the man was entirely dead.

Nova Scotia papers to the 29th ult. contain very distressing accounts from the settlements to the eastward of Halifax. There had been great mortality among the cattle, owing to the failure of the hay crop last season and the severity of the winter. The ground was covered with snow to such a depth that the cattle could find no subsistence outside the barns, and numbers had perished for want of food.

A merchant on one of the wharves in Boston has sold eight thousand casks of peas, this season, for the purpose of being burnt and ground with coffee; and they are probably now selling as pure Java, Summatra, &c. In the market report of a New York paper, we find the following significant sentence: "Canadian peas are dull, in consequence of a decline in coffee."

Dr. Alexandre, from Paris, the inventor of the artificial leech, has lately brought out another wonderful invention; this is nothing more nor less than a sub-marine boat, in which a company of persons can go down to the bottom, have communication with the ground, performing any sort of work by digging or otherwise, and return to the surface at will.

The brig Garland, from Para, April 6, announces that the yellow fever was raging there with great virulence, and that large numbers, both of foreigners and natives, had died. Mr. Richard Ryan, the British Consul, died April 2. Much alarm prevailed.

M. G. Hubbard, of Hume, N. Y., has obtained a patent for improvement in hanging carriage bodies. Says the inventor, "I claim the combination of cross-reaches and spring, substantially in the manner and for the purpose set forth."

In the Municipal Court of Boston, Judge Hoar sentenced Owen Lyons, for a violation of the license law, to pay a fine of $110, or, if not paid, to imprisonment in the House of Correction for three months and twenty-five days.

The City of Quincy, Ill., has determined, by election, that no license to keep a liquor or beer shop shall be granted in that city. About one half of the votes were polled—600—of which only 45 were in favor of the license.

DIED.

In Alfred, N. Y., April 9th, SILAS CRANDALL, aged 82 years, 1 month, and 6 days. He embraced religion in early life, and united with the Waterford Church. In October, 1823, he left the land of his nativity, came to this country, and united with the First Alfred Church, of which he remained a worthy member until his death, being sustained to the latest moment by the presence of his Saviour and a hope of blessed immortality. N. V. H.

In Genesee, N. Y., April 20th, of pleurisy, Mr. RICHARD S. SANFORD, aged forty-nine years. He has left a widow and one son to deplore the loss which they have sustained; but they mourn not as those without hope, for they have the evidence that their loss is his eternal gain. The friends and neighbors mourn the loss of this worthy member of society.

At her house in Harrisburgh, Lewis Co., N. Y., April 17th, JULIA BICKFORD, wife of Clark Bickford.

The National Preacher for May,

CONTAINING excellent discourses from Rev. JOHN DOWLING, D. D. and Rev. M. W. JACOBUS, is now ready. Cleargymen and others, visiting the city during the anniversary season, are invited to call and examine this work. Although it has attained the age of nearly a quarter of a century, it will be found to be as acceptable and valuable to the Trinitarian minister or general reader as ever it was in its earlier youth. The old friends of the National Preacher will please not confound this work with a new publication of a similar title, but established on a very different doctrinal basis.

Yearly subscription to the National Preacher $1,00. Bound vols. each, $1,25.

D. A. WOODWORTH, Publisher.

Christian Psalmody—Pocket Edition.

IN compliance with requests from various quarters, the publisher of the New Hymn Book—Christian Psalmody—has issued a second edition, on lighter paper and with smaller margins, by which the bulk and weight of the books are reduced about one-third, rendering them much more convenient for carrying in the pocket. The price is also reduced 12½ cents per copy. Those wishing books, of either edition, can now be supplied. Price of the larger edition from 75 cents to $1 50, according to the style of binding. Price of the smaller edition from 62½ cents to $1 00. Orders should be addressed to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Medical Notice.

DR. T. A. MAXSON, Botanic Physician, takes this method to inform the friends of Medical Reform, that he is located in Watson, N. Y., one mile east from Beach's Landing. Believing that there are vegetable remedies adapted to the cure of all diseases, he consequently uses no other. Calls attended to without delay. [32m3.] JANUARY, 1850.

History of Romanism.

In a large octavo volume of 750 pages, printed in large type, on the finest paper, and embellished with more than fifty engravings, chiefly from Original Designs, and bound in muslin, extra gilt. Price $3. THE HISTORY OF ROMANISM, from its earliest origin to the present time, by the Rev. John Dowling, D. D. A new and enlarged edition, with the Author's last additions, and a Supplement, containing a Sketch of the Life of Pope Pius IX., &c.

The best evidence of the intrinsic value of this remarkably popular work is to be seen in the fact that within the comparatively recent period of its first publication, the extraordinary number of 17,000 copies have been disposed of.

The following is an extract from a letter from the Rev. Dr. Giustiniani, the converted Roman Catholic priest, who is abundantly qualified by education, observation, and extensive study, to testify to the fidelity and value of a "History of Romanism."

"If the reader wishes to be acquainted with the errors of Romanism, he has only to open the pages of Dowling's History. If the reader is anxious to read an epitome of the history of the popes, their ambition; their intrigues; their avariciousness; their tyranny; their superstitions, and their mummeries, he can here find all proved and authenticated by the most accredited authors of the Church of Rome." L. GIUSTINIANI.

"It reflects much credit on the skill, patience, industry, and judgment of the author; he appears very justly to have conceived the idea of a work, which has long been regarded as a desideratum by a large portion of those interested in the great controversy with the Romanists."—Protestant Churchman.

"We regard it as a most important addition to the historical and religious literature of the age. Its contents form a rich storehouse of historical instruction, which should be placed within the reach of every family."—N. Y. Christian Intelligencer.

"It presents a succienct, but sufficiently full, history of the rise, progress, errors, cruelties, and present condition of the Papacy, authenticated by reference to the most undoubted historic sources, related in a spirited, engaging, and impressive style, and arranged in the most lucid manner. It abounds in facts and incidents, and, with its beautiful illustrations, is better adapted to furnish a vivid and impressive portraiture of Romanism as it is, than any other book we know of."—N. Y. Evang.

"The detached portions of Romish history which were every where to be met with, needed to be brought together and presented in systematic order. The reading of one book thus becomes better and cheaper than the reading of many."—Boston Recorder.

"It is written with the ready, popular eloquence, for which the well-known author is distinguished, and cannot fail to arrest attention to the controversy of which it treats. It is a strongly Protestant work, and exhibits the deformities of Popery with great power."—N. Y. Recorder.

Miscellaneous.

EARLY TO BED AND EARLY TO RISE.

"Early to bed, and early to rise"—
Aye, note it down in your brain,
For it helpeth to make the foolish wise,
And uproots the weeds of pain.
Ye who are walking on thorns of care,
Who sigh for a softer bower,
Try what can be done in the morning sun,
And make use of the early hour.

Full many a day for ever is lost
By delaying its work till to-morrow;
The minutes of sloth have often cost
Long years of bootless sorrow.
And ye who would win the lasting wealth
Of content and peaceful power,
Ye who would couple Labor and Health,
Must begin at the early hour.

We make bold promises to Time,
Yet, alas! too often break them;
We mock at the wings of the King of kings,
And think we can overtake them.
But why loiter away the prime of the day,
Knowing that clouds may lower?
Is it not safer to make life's hay
In the beam of the early hour?

Nature herself ever shows her best
Of gems to the gaze of the lark,
When the spangles of light on earth's green breast
Put out the stars of the dark.
If we love the purest pearl of the dew,
And the rich breath of the flower,
If our spirits would greet the fresh and the sweet,
Go forth in the early hour.

Oh, pleasure and rest are more easily found
When we start through Morning's gate,
To sum up our figures, or plough up our ground,
And weave out the threads of fate.
The eye looketh bright, and the heart keepeth light,
And man holdeth the conquerer's power,
When, ready and brave, he chains Time as his slave,
By the help of the early hour.
ELIZA COOK.

INCREASE OF GAMBLING.

[From a letter of J. R. Green, R. G., to the N. Y. Tribune.

It is a deplorable fact, that there is now more gaming in New York than ever before, and the vice is certain to increase unless a powerful check is at once interposed. This increase of the gaming mania is mainly attributable to two causes.

First, the laws against gaming, in several of the Southern and Western States, are so severe that the gamblers find it dangerous and unprofitable to pursue their profession there, and have sought refuge in the States east of Pennsylvania, where the laws are more lenient; and especially do they throng this city, where the laws against gaming are seldom enforced, and where so many of the profession hold offices of honor, profit, and trust, merely because they belong to a large, unscrupulous, and powerful class of citizens, whose influence and votes are necessary to the elevation of political demagogues. New York has long been the head-quarters for the gambling fraternity, and will continue to be, until the laws compel them to leave the State or pursue an honest calling.

For the second cause, we must look to California. The discoveries in that region have led thousands of our young men to seek their fortunes among the golden hills and valleys of that distant land; and when we reflect that the very business of mining is a matter of chance, strongly partaking of the nature of gaming, we cannot be surprised, that when the toils of the day or the mining season are over, the adventurer should pursue his luck at the Faro or Monte table; and hence it is, that California is at present a vast gaming hell, where almost every man plays, or is either directly or indirectly interested in some gaming establishment. The natural result of such a state of society must be deplorable indeed. Men who go there with the prejudices of education against gaming and gamblers, soon lose their abhorrence of both, and then naturally enough find their way to the gaming table, where they form a taste and love for play, which time or change of circumstances rarely if ever destroys; and thus it is that a large proportion of those who return come back imbued with the habits and principles of the gamester, and as they distribute themselves over the country they sow the seeds of vice, which should be rooted out before they have time to grow into rank weeds.

New York already presents some striking facts illustrative of this view of the subject. Shortly after the news of the golden discoveries in California reached New York, a man who was a sort of amateur gambler, or, I might rather say, a gambler's victim, raised a few hundred dollars, and employed a broken but smart professional blackleg, to go with him to San Francisco and the diggings, for the purpose of winning at Faro or Monte the hard earnings of the miners. They were entirely successful, and returned in a few months with some thirty or forty thousand dollars worth of gold dust, as the proceeds of their robbing expedition. The professional gentleman purchased a house and a few billiard tables, together with all the paraphernalia of an extensive and complete gaming establishment, and returned with them to San Francisco, where it is said he is rapidly amassing a large fortune. His associate, having more taste for the refinements of social life, remained in New York, and is now a vender of lottery tickets, and the proprietor of a number of policy offices, by which means he daily extracts large sums of money from the poor and ignorant who are infatuated with this desperate game. Thousands of these poor people pledge the last article of dress they can spare, for a few pennies to buy a policy, and when this resource fails them, beg or steal enough to purchase a favorite "horse" or "gig," which they have dreamed will surely be drawn the next day.

The celebrated gaming house in Park-place, known as "Jack Harrison's," was recently closed in consequence of Harrison's death; he having died on Sunday morning, the 10th ult., in his gaming house, a few hours after the closing of his Faro Bank, and the dispersion of the players, who had made the night hideous by their blasphemies over the gaming table, while death was doing its work in an adjoining room. Of this unfortunate individual I shall have nothing to say, except, that as a man, he was superior to most of his class, and that he deserved a better fate. It was hoped that his death would forever close the doors of his house against the idle and vicious, who had for years resorted to it; but not so—the grave had scarcely closed over the remains of the deceased gamester, before a man, who, a few months previous, was a common thimble-rigger, or a "capper in," for some of that thievish gang in New York, and who had just returned from California with an abundance of gold, proposed to take Harrison's interest. The proposition was accepted, and the house was reöpened with additional capital, and the work of destruction proceeded with renewed vigor.

Again; another low blackleg has recently returned from San Francisco with a large amount of gold, who, as I understand, contemplates opening in New York the most extensive and splendid gaming establishment in this country, with a capital more than equal to that of all the other faro banks in the city combined. This is intended to be the great gaming house of the Union, and of course will exert a powerful influence for evil.

DEATH BY HANGING.

Hanging has prevailed more universally than any single mode of execution—nay, more, perhaps, than all other methods combined. Recommended by simplicity, and the absence of blood-shed, it is, at the same time, a death from which imagination revolts. None would, prior to experience, be conceived more distressing, for the agony might be expected to realize to utmost intensity in the sudden transition from the vigor of health to a forced, and yet not immediate, death. Many, indeed, fancy that the fall of the body dislocates the neck, when the consequent injury to the spinal cord would annihilate life at the instant of the shock. But this is among the number of vulgar errors. Though a possible result, it very rarely occurs, unless a special manœuvre is employed to produce it. Before revolutionary genius had discarded the gibbet in France, Louis, the eminent professor, struck with the circumstance that the criminals in Paris were some instants in dying, while those of Lyons hung a lifeless mass the moment the rope was strained by their weight, learned from the executioner the trick of trade which spared his victims a struggle. In flinging them from the ladder, he steadied with one hand the head, and with the other imparted to [illegible] body a rotary movement which gave a[illegible]ench to the neck. The veritable Jack Ketch, of the reign of James II., who has transmitted his name to all the inheritors of his office, may be conjectured, from a story current at the time, to have been in the secret, for it was the boast of his wife, that, though the assistant could manage to get through the business, her husband alone was possessed of the art to make a culprit "die sweetly." Where the fall is great, or the person corpulent, dislocation might take place without further interference, but, with an occasional exception, those who are hanged perish simply by suffocation. There is nothing in that circumstance to occasion special regret. An immense number of persons have recovered their sensations, and agree in their report that an easier end could not be desired. An acquaintance of Lord Bacon, who meant to hang himself partially, lost his footing, and was cut down at the last extremity, having nearly paid for his curiosity with his life. He declared that he felt no pain, and his only sensation was of fire before his eyes, which changed first to black and then to sky-blue. These colors are even a source of pleasure. A Captain Montagnac, who was hanged in France during the religious wars, and rescued from the gibbet at the intercession of Viscount Turenne, complained that, having lost all pain in an instant, he had been taken from a light of which the charm defied description. Another criminal, who escaped by the breaking of the cord, said that, after a second of suffering, a fire appeared, and across it the most beautiful avenue of trees. Henry IV., of France, sent his physician to question him, and when mention was made of a pardon, the man answered coldly, that it was not worth the asking. The uniformity of the description renders it useless to multiply instances. They fill pages in every book of medical jurisprudence. All agree that the uneasiness is quite momentary, that a pleasurable feeling immediately succeeds, that colors of various hue start up before the sight, and that these having been gazed on for a trivial space, the rest is oblivion. The mind, averted from the reality of the situation, is engaged in scenes the most remote from that which fills the eye of the spectator—the vile rabble, the hideous gallows, and the struggling form that swings in the wind. Formerly, in England, the friends of the criminal, in the natural belief, that while there was life there was pain, threw themselves upon his legs as the cart drove away, that the addition of their weight might shorten his pangs. A more sad satisfaction for all the parties concerned, could not well be conceived.

THE OVERLAND ROUTE TO CALIFORNIA.

The following extract from a private letter recently received from California, gives a simple and graphic account of the hardships of the overland route. Do the thousands who are now about starting on the same track know what they have to encounter?

Our party (of five) left Camden, Missouri, May 2, with two wagons purchased by us at Pittsburgh, drawn by three yoke of cattle each. We crossed the Missouri river four miles above St. Joseph on the 13th, and commenced our journey in earnest the next day. The 10th of June we crossed the south fork of the Platte river, and the 4th of July we celebrated by ferrying ourselves over the north fork of the same river—a job which occupied us till 2 o'clock the next morning. On the 19th of July we passed the summit of the Rocky Mountains, and supposed that at least one-half of the distance was accomplished as well as one-half of the hardships endured; but in both of these particulars we were disappointed. After passing the mountains we continued for several weeks over a succession of high ridges, some of them 9,000 feet above the level of the ocean and 1,500 higher than the Pass. In this region, while we had the heat of New York dog-days through the day, the ice formed frequently to the thickness of half an inch at night. Barrenness and desolation here for several hundreds of miles seemed to be the general character of the country, while it bore indisputable evidence of having been a vast region of volcanic action. We crossed the Dry Sandy river, the Little Sandy, and the Big Sandy; the Green river or Colorado, we ferried over, and followed the Bear river 80 miles on its course, and St. Mary's or Humboldt's 250, running west; we likewise crossed deserts of 18, 43 and 76 miles, without grass or water. This, with standing guard at night, with going sometimes three miles from camp to guard our cattle, and sleeping on the cold ground with a single blanket under me and another over me, my only shelter from the wind and weather—this, together with the changeableness of climate, the clouds of dust we had to inhale, as well as the quality and quantity of our provisions, which we were unfortunate in procuring, brought upon me, toward the latter part of our journey, the scurvy. The effect of this disease upon me was a general disarrangement of the whole system, a swelling, soreness and stiffness of the limbs, and a weakness of the whole body. On the 4th of October we crossed the summit of the Sierra Nevada, or what is termed the Northern route. From this point, instead of the pleasant valleys we supposed were before us, we had a succession of rocky roads (the worst of the whole route) over mountains and through ravines and morasses for 200 or 300 miles. Much of this distance we were surrounded by timber of an immense size, and many of the emigrants had their cattle stolen by the Indians. On the night of the first of November the first snow came down upon us while we were yet among the celebrated mountains of California, and it soon attained to the depth of five feet. Then, brother, there was suffering, despair and death among those who had left comfortable and happy homes to better their fortunes in this far-off region. Here, as well as on the eastern side of the Sierra Nevada, our road was strewn with dead cattle—in one space of 20 miles I estimated 50 to a mile. We had been compelled by loss of cattle to abandon one of our wagons on the other side of the mountains, and here we were forced to leave the other; being reduced to two oxen, and these we packed, with a small amount of our most necessary baggage upon their backs, to the first settlement—the rest we had to throw away. During this part of the journey my complaint was rather hard upon me, and my fare was very, very short, and the extent of my strength was to get in and out of the wagon; but when compelled to leave that, I had no alternative but to pursue my way on) foot or remain behind. In four days I accomplished the distance of fifteen miles, and reached the first house or ranche (a mud one in California. Our party (of five) were all well, and had preceded me, some of them three weeks.

There crossed the Missouri river last Spring more than 6,000 wagons, 40,000 cattle, and 16,000 people, for California. Not more than 200 wagons and 3,000 cattle ever reached their destination. On the people, the cholera, the dysentery and the scurvy have done their work. Half a dozen graves a day met our frequent observation. Many who have got through will have to mourn over broken costitutions, loss of property, and dissipation of all their golden dreams.

MINERAL RICHES OF SOUTHERN ILLINOIS.

The Morgan County Journal says that the little County of Hardin contains iron ore enough to build the Pacific Railroad fifty times over; and the adjoining Counties of Gallatin and Salina could furnish the State with coal for a thousand years. Several other Counties are also rich in coal. Pope County has mines of iron which are of a kind easily prepared for the furnace, being the brown hæmatite. Hardin County is also rich in solid bodies of lead ore, which is almost pure galena. There is also another mineral of great importance. We copy what relates to it:

Zinc is also found in great quantities in this same region, and frequently in the same mine with the lead. The ore is that called zinc blends—being a sulphuret of zinc. We have seen this ore lying in such quantities at a single spot, that a large steamboat could have been loaded down with it. At one point, only half a mile from the Ohio, it occurs in the same pit with lead, though in a separate body, in immense blocks of pure crystalized ore, weighing, in some instances, a ton each. The art of reducing this ore, by a cheap process, is unknown in this country, except to a very few; and this ore has been chiefly used for making brass, by fusing it with the ore of copper. Yet there can be no doubt that it might at this place be made very profitable, being far more valuable for the preparation of "zinc white," a carbonate of zinc, which is destined to supersede the white lead as a paint. It is also free from the poisonous qualities possessed by preparations of lead, which render its effects upon the workmen who use it so disastrous.

As being interesting to the mineralogist, there are also found here ores of antimony, arsenic, copper, cobalt and cadmium; though none of them in any considerable quantity. There are also (in Pope County) large beds of very pure lithomarge, or rock-marrow, an interesting mineral, very rare in this country.

HARROWING WHEAT.

In the Patent Office Report for 1847, speaking of wheat culture in Germany, the writer remarks:—

"Harrowing in the spring is very common. After a few days of fine weather, when the soil has sufficiently dried up, and the wheat begins to show itself, the crop is well harrowed with heavy iron harrows."

In the back volumes of the Cultivator and Genesee Farmer the practice is often recommended.

"I have practiced it myself for ten or twelve years," says a correspondent of Moore's Rural New-Yorker, "and have always found it beneficial. I do not sow my clover seed until the soil is in order for working, and then harrow it in. I prefer this course to sowing clover seed early upon the snow, as we frequently find clover injured by the cold dry weather which often prevails in April. When the ground is dry and warm, in good working order for plowing and harrowing, I harrow it thoroughly, both ways, with a heavy iron harrow—pulverizing the crust which is formed upon the surface. I have harrowed wheat in every variety of condition—when it has been winter-killed, and scarcely a green sprout to be seen; I have harrowed it when the wheat was very thick and rank; and never yet saw any ill effects from it, but on the contrary have always found it beneficial. There is but one exception which I would make to harrowing wheat, and that is when the field has been seeded to clover, and there has been sufficient warmth to sprout it. In this case harrowing wheat would be very likely to spoil the clover. I believe thoroughly harrowing all our wheat fields would add from two to five bushels per acre."

MARRIAGE AMONG THE ST. JOHN INDIANS.

The Eastport (Me.) Sentinel publishes the following under the head of "Inklings of a recent trip up the St. John River:"—

Perhaps all of my readers are not aware of the peculiar custom of this tribe, in regard to marriage. On passing through their village, near Frederickton, I learned that their manner of wooing (or rather no-wooing) and wedding, was in this wise: When a young Indian wishes to take a wife—at which time he has no idea who his copper-colored companion will be—he makes his wish known to his parents. The old couple then consult with the chiefs and matrons of the village, who discuss the matter, and decide upon the bride. Feasting and 'pow-wows' now commence, during which the candidates for matrimony are brought together, the bride so veiled that neither she nor her husband recognize each other. After marriage, which is attended with great ceremony, the couple are separated for the space of five days—when, the feasting, &c. being over, they unite as man and wife, and for the first time each knows to whom he or she has been linked by the fates. I believe this custom approximates very much to that of the Chinese. Frequently, in both cases, I believe, the parents of the bridegroom are obliged to pay a price, as per bargain, to the parents who furnish the bride.

TORNADO IN THE WEST INDIES.—The Nassau (N. P.) Gazette has the following particulars of a terrific tornado which visited that Island on the 30th of March:—

About 1 o'clock on that day, (it says,) the tornado came up from the south-west, demolishing houses and walls, and rooting up trees as a child would do his ninepins.

In the southern suburbs of the island of New Providence, including Grant's Town, Delancy's Town, and Bain's Town, there are known to have been six persons killed; seventy-four buildings were totally destroyed; three were materially injured, and six slightly. In the harbor, during the storm, the schooner Union was upset while at anchor. The sloop Teazer was also upset about the same time. The schooner Repulse was caught in the gale near Delaporte, and both her masts had to be cut away to save her.

The diameter of this dreadful power seems to have been from twenty to thirty yards. And its force is proved in the ease with which it overturned stone pillars, and smote into ruins houses of great strength. We have heard that it lifted one woman to a considerable height from the ground, and that her arm was broken by her fall. Seventy-four houses, it appears, were totally demolished in the southern suburbs, and some of them were carried quite away, so that no remains or fragments of them have been found. A scene of more utter desolation than that presented in the path of the tornado, it is almost impossible to conceive.

It caused the death of eight individuals, three men, three children, and two women. One man had his head completely severed from the body; others their skulls fractured, so as to cause instant death.

FIGHTING ON EQUAL TERMS.—I will tell you a little incident that occurred in Georgia many years ago. Judge T., a celebrated duelist, who had lost a leg, and who was known to be a dead shot, challenged Col. D., a gentleman of great humor and attainments. The friends tried to prevent the meeting, but to no effect. The parties met on the ground, when Col. D. was asked if he was ready.

"No, sir," he replied.

"What are you waiting for, then?" inquired Judge T.'s second.

"Why, sir," said Col. D., "I have sent my boy into the woods to hunt a bee gum to put my leg in, for I don't intend to give the Judge any advantage over me. You see he has a wooden leg!"

The whole party roared with laughter, and the thing was so ridiculous that it broke up the fight. Col. D. was afterwards told that it would sink his reputation.

"Well," he replied, "it can't sink me lower than a bullet can."

"But," urged his friends, "the papers will be filled about you."

"Well," said he, "I would rather fill fifty papers than fill a coffin!"

No one ever troubled the Colonel after that.

LONGEVITY.—The Meredith Bridge Gazette states that there are now living in the town of Northfield, N. H., nearly sixty persons whose individual ages exceed 70 years. Eleven of this number reside in one school district, and within one mile of each other. Of the eleven, several are more than eighty years old—one is between ninety and a hundred, a hale, hearty old man as can be found anywhere, and bids fair to live to see a century or more. This old gentleman is in the habit of walking to Sanbornton Bridge, a distance of two miles, as often as once a week, and is able to perform considerable labor on the farm. Another old veteran, 87 years old, is apparently as active and smart as many men at 30. He has attended the annual town meetings and cast his favorite ticket for sixty years in succession.

THE VALUE OF OIL IN INDIAN CORN—According to Professor Johnston, the popping properties of corn depend upon the expansion of the oil, on the application heat. A barrel of pop corn would give six barrels of popped corn; while the rice corn, which contains a still larger proportion of oil, would give thirty-six barrels of popped corn from one unpopped; but there are some kinds, which from the absence of oil would not pop at all. The structure of grains is a most important study. It is particularly important in its bearing upon the feeding of stock. The same explanation he applied also to wheat, which he said contains a smaller proportion of oil than corn.

A PUZZLE.—We find the following in an exchange paper, with a request to know what it means:

A lady asked a gentleman for his cypher, and he sent her the following reply:

You 0 a 0 but I 0 thee;
O 0 no 0 but O 0 me.
Then let my 0 thy 0 be,
And give 0 0 I 0 thee.

We think we can translate the stanza. Par example:—

You sigh for a cypher, but I sigh for thee;
O! sigh for no cypher, but O! sigh for me.
Then let my cypher thy cypher be,
And give sigh for sigh, for I sigh for thee.

PORK EATING.—The Jews, Turks, Arabians, and all they who observe the precept of avoiding blood and swine's flesh, are infinitely more free from disease than the Christians; more especially do they escape those opprobria of the medical art, scrofula, gout, consumption, and madness. The Turks eat great quantities of honey and pastry, and much sugar; they also eat largely and are indolent, yet do not suffer from dyspepsia, as the Christians do. The swine-fed natives of Christendom suffer greater devastations from a painful tubercular disease of the bowels (dysentery) than from any other cause. Under my own observation, and in my own experience, those persons who abstain from swine's flesh and blood, are infinitely more healthy and free from humors, glanular diseases, dyspepsia and consumption; while in those districts, and among those classes of men, where the pig makes the chief article of diet, tubercle in all its forms of eruption, sore legs, bad eyes, and abscesses, most prevail. It is a remarkable coincidence, that Prince Edward's Island has a climate exactly similar to Great Britain, yet the inhabitants are not consumptive, neither is the pig here cultivated. [Parry.

SWEETENING BUTTER.—Tevelgan has communicated to the Mechanic's Magazine the following item of dietetic improvement. Whilst making some experiments, it occurred to him that butter either fresh, or salt, possessing disagreeable effluvia and flavor, might be rendered sweet by the addition of a little carbonate of soda, two and a half drachms to butter three pounds. In making fresh butter, the soda is to be added after all the milk is washed out and is ready for making up. This unpleasant smell is produced by an acid, which, being neutralized by the alkali, disperses at the same time the disagreeable flavor. This acid is generated by peculiarities in the constitution of some cows, by the condition of certain fodders, by the length of time cream is kept before being churned, but too often by the dairy utensils not being thoroughly clean. Soda produces the same results when added to the culinary greases—drippings, lard, &c.

NEW MODE OF RAISING WHEAT.—An experiment has been tried in Iowa, and recorded in the Prairie Farmer, by J. A. Rosseau, where two bushels of wheat and one of oats were mixed and sown together in the fall, on one acre. The oats shot up rapidly, and were, of course, cut down by the frost. They however furnished a warm covering for the earth, and when the snow fell among the thick stalks and leaves, they kept it from blowing away. This covering prevented the winter-killing of the wheat, and the oats yielded a rich top-dressing for the crop the following spring. The result was, an abundant crop, while land precisely similar alongside of it, and treated in the same manner, with the exception of omitting the oats, was utterly worthless.

YELLOW FEVER IN A NAVAL SHIP.—The U. Ship Ohio arrived at Boston on the 27th, after a long cruise in the Pacific. Five officers died on the passage to the United States, viz: Lieutenants Chas. M. Armstrong and Henry Eld, Jr.; Assistant Surgeon Ephraim J. Bee; Midshipman Joseph B. Milles; Purser's Clerk, Thomas C. Johnstone. These officers, with eleven of the crew, fell victims to the yellow fever, contracted at Rio Janeiro in the few days which the Ohio stopped there for the necessary stores and water. At the end of the third week after leaving Rio, the fever entirely disappeared, and the ship, with all on board, have arrived in a perfectly healthy condition. There were in all about fifty cases on board.

AN INDIGNITY.—A medical man, who had just come from setting the broken leg of an Arab, gave the following anecdote:—The patient complained more of the accident which had befallen him, than I thought becoming one of his tribe. This I remarked to him, and his answer was truly amusing. "Do not think, Doctor, I should have uttered one word of complaint, if my own high-bred colt, in a playful kick, had broke both my legs; but to have a bone broken by a brute of a jackass is too bad, and I wlil complain."

"IF RICHES INCREASE, SET NOT YOUR HEART ON THEM."—Of all hallucinations, that of the rich man living in dread of coming to want is the most pitiful and humiliating. The present Superintendent of the Massachusetts Hospital for the insane, says that in all the cases of insanity that have come under his notice, produced by fear of coming to want, the patients have been rich men! In no case has the man of humble means been visited by this form of insanity. Ponder that, ye who hug your gold!

Mr. E. Haven, of Worcester, Mass., has invented a very simple, cheap and effectual method of sustaining windows, and preventing their jar or shake. A small cylindrical piece of prepared rubber is set in a hole bored in the side of the sash, and a round block of wood placed between the rubber and the window frame. The elasticity of the rubber produces sufficient friction to sustain the weight of the sash. The fastener consists of a pin slid into a hole made in each sash at their central junction, and is prevented from falling out by the head of a screw, which is used as a knob to draw the pin in.

Among the memorials presented to the U. S. Senate, on the 15th ult., was one from Dr. J. H. Pulte, of Cincinnati, who proposes the construction of a telegraph to connect the old world with the new, and asks such action by Congress as may contribute to the realization of his project. The route proposed is across the continent to some point in California; thence along the coast to Behring's straits; thence across those straits, and through Northern Asia and Europe to St. Petersburg and the western cities of Europe.

The Michigan Legislature, at its last session, made an appropriation for the purpose of procuring a block of native copper to be quarried from the mines on Lake Superior, and sent as an appropriate offering to the Washington National Monument. It is to be 3 feet long, by 1½ feet wide, and 2 feet deep, polished, and bearing this inscription:

Eclectic Magazine for the Year 1850.

THE Eclectic Magazine of Foreign Literature, Science, and Art, aims to present to its readers a complete survey of the whole field of British Periodical Literature, comprising the selections of all the articles of the most able and celebrated Reveiws, Magazines, and Journals, which have any interest or value to American readers. It not only contains the articles which are desirable in those periodicals reprinted in this country, but in the far greater variety of able and popular Reveiws, Magazines, &c., which form so splendid an element of the literature of the day, and which are inaccessible to the mass of American readers, except by some such medium as the Eclectic Magazine. By omitting what is merely local in interest or feeble in character, the ample size of the Eclectic Magazine enables the editor to embody all that is really desirable in the whole range of journalism. As only the best articles of each periodical are selected, it is evident that the contents of the Eclectic Magazine must be superior to those of any one, however great or celebrated, and, taken together, must constitute a more desirable and able body of periodical literature than can be found elsewhere in the same compass.

Each number is embellished with a suberb steel engraving, from the well-known burin of Mr. Sartain, of subjects of elevated character and general interest, including portraits of distinguished living authors and celebrities, making twelve rich and elegant prints in a year.

TERMS.

The Eclectic Magazine is issued on the first of every month, in numbers of 144 large 8vo. pages each, on fine paper, making three volumes a year, with title-pages and indexes. Price $5 per year, if paid strictly in advance—otherwise invariably $6.

The work will be promptly sent to any one who will send us $5 by mail, or otherwise, post-paid. Address W. H. BIDWELL, Editor and Proprietor, 120 Nassau-street, New York.

☞ The Magazine above described fully sustains the character given to it in the prospectus, and is justly regarded as the best work of the kind to be had. We shall be happy to forward the subscription of any of our friends who may find it more convenient to communicate with us than with the publisher.

Sabbath Tracts.

THE ANNIVERSARIES.

Abridged from Reports in the New York Daily Papers.

THE MAGDALEN BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

The Seventeenth Anniversary of the New York Magdalen Benevolent Society was celebrated at the Bleecker-st. Presbyterian Church. The exercises were opened with prayer by Rev. Mr. Ostrom—followed by the reading of the Annual Report, by the Chaplain of the Society, and the Treasurer's Report by Rev. Mr. Coe.

We gather from the Annual Report that the condition of the Society is exceedingly encouraging, and its sphere of usefulness constantly increasing. During the past year, 46 degraded females have received the moral and religious instruction which is calculated to qualify them for a return to the society of the virtuous. The salutary effects of the Association on those who have come within the sphere of its influence, says the Report, is attested by scores who have been profited in former years—many of whom are now among the most virtuous and respected members of our community—a blessing to society, and adorning their Christian profession. The managers gratefully acknowledge the prompt and cheerful response given to their appeals for further aid, at home and abroad; and especially by the ladies of New Haven. The receipts of the year have been $1,642 21. The balance remaining in the Treasury on the 1st inst. was $20 92.

After some appropriate preliminary remarks by the Chaplain of the Society, Rev. Dr. Tyng made an interesting address of about an hour's length, in which he urged the necessity of united Christian action to stem the torrent of evil which this Society is laboring to arrest in part. He deplored the apathy of Christian communities in this matter, and anathematized the false delicacy which revolts at the searching exposure of the truly conscientious public servant who deems it his duty to lift the veil from the corrupted spot. He traced the continued accessions to this flood of vice to the constant stream of immigration flowing upon our shores—bringing with it much of the crime and vicious associations of Europe; and earnestly urged the necessity for the efforts of Christians, and all who hold an interest at stake in the reformation of vast evils, and the purification of society, to step forward and take hold of this subject with a due degree of earnestness, in order that frequent endeavors may finally be made to result in the accomplishment of great ends—the reformation of society, and the destruction of genteel and luxurious vice.

BIBLE SOCIETY SERMON.

The Annual Discourse before the AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY was delivered in the Broadway Tabernacle, by the Rev. Dr. Holdich. After the usual devotional services, and singing by the large choir of the Tabernacle, Dr. H. announced his text from Deut. 4: 8, "What nation is there so great, that hath statutes and judgments so righteous as all this law which I set before you this day?" From these words, Dr. H. said that he proposed to illustrate the superiority of the moral system contained in the Scriptures, to all other ethical codes that have been presented to the acceptance of the world. In the outset, he would remark of the Old Testament, that we ought not to compare it with systems of a later age, which had been formed in a state of superior advancement, but with the best teachings that were in possession of the world at the time of its appearance. The speaker explained this position at considerable length, describing the state of society at the epoch of the Jewish dispensation, and showing that the wisdom vouchsafed to Moses as a lawgiver was immeasurably beyond all that could be claimed for the most distinguished sages of antiquity, like Thales, Pythagoras, Solon, Lycurgus, Socrates, and Plato. Indeed, the whole field of profane history, Dr. H. contended, appeared in a degrading light, when compared with the narratives of the Old Testament. Little reliance could be placed on the authenticity of its most celebrated portions. It was doubtful whether such a city as Troy ever existed. The description of the battles before her walls, the character of the warriors who contended for victory, and the details of her renowned siege, may have had no reality but in the teeming imagination of the poet. Historical skepticism has done much to crumble away the authority of ancient story-tellers; but has achieved nothing to shake an undoubting confidence in the relations of the Old Testament. With every test to which they are submitted, their truth appears with a brighter radiance. It is confirmed by the testimony of all travelers in the Holy Land. Researches in Egypt, which at their first announcement caused trepidation to many Christians, have terminated in the same result. They leave no room for reasonable doubt with regard to the historical accuracy of the Old Testament Scriptures.

Dr. Holdich drew a parallel between the morality set forth in the Bible and that contained in the systems of uninspired writers. Lycurgus, by introducing iron money, destroyed the foundations of property, and thus took away one of the chief springs of action, and consequently of improvement. The Spartans made the Helots drunk that their children might profit by the horrible example. Plato advocated a community of women, at least for the military classes. But none of these stains pollute the pages of the Bible. Dr. H. alluded to the provisions of the Old Testament with regard to slavery, which he said prohibited it among brethren, and laid down principles which would finally guarantee its universal extinction.

It has been said that the Bible contains no original precepts. But this cannot be taken for granted. Other codes had enjoined the duty of prayer; but what system but the Bible had commanded to "pray without ceasing?" Other teachers had urged the obligation of gratitude to God for the reception of benefits; but it was only the inspired moralist who had said, "In every thing give thanks, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."

The New Testament, said Dr. H., is not essentially a code of laws, like the Old, but its primary feature is the revelation of the mode of salvation by the blood of Christ for a fallen and guilty world. This gave efficacy to its moral teachings. For himself, he must say, that although he valued the philosophy and ethics of the Bible, though he admired its poetry and rejoiced in its eloquence, his hopes for the world depended on its doctrines of grace, which alone had power to melt the stubborn heart, to subdue the proud and depraved will, and to bring the sinner in penitence and faith to the foot of the cross. No where but in the Bible was God revealed in the character of a Redeemer. This was the most touching relation he could sustain to his creatures. We might regard the Deity as our Maker, our Preserver, our Judge, but none of these conceptions took such hold of the strongest feelings of the soul as when it bows in gratitude and compunction in the view of redeeming love.

Dr. H. then considered the connection of the Bible with the progress of civilization, and with some forcible and discriminating remarks on this subject he brought his deeply instructive discourse to a close.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY.

This institution held its Twenty-second Annual Meeting in the Broadway Tabernacle. After the preliminary exercises of singing and prayer, an abstract of the Annual Report was read by one of the Secretaries; from which it appears, that the receipts of the Society, for the year ending on the 1st inst., were $23,497; and the expenditures $23,209; exceeding the receipts of the preceding year $4,915, and not including a considerable amount raised by the secretaries, and expended in the places where raised for local objects. The operations of the Society are both foreign and domestic; extending, through its Chaplains and Sailor Missionaries, the ministrations of the Gospel to seamen, kind offices to the sick, and the last rites to the dead, in the Islands of the Pacific, China, Brazil, Chili, France, Sweden, and the West Indies; besides acting in concert with numerous auxiliary and local societies in sustaining Sailors' Homes, Bethels, &c., in this country. The Society's Home in New York has had within the last year 2,421, and in 8 years 27,975 sailor boarders. Some of the results of these labors are seen in the following particulars, viz: that thousands of seamen have signed and keep the temperance pledge; that entire crews go to sea and return home sober men; that intoxicating liquors are not furnished among the stores of the merchant, whaling, and fishing vessels, as formerly; that comparative order and quiet now prevail in the Sailors' Homes, in the streets, and on the wharves; that their chests are well replenished; that hundreds of thousands of dollars have been deposited by them in small sums in Savings Banks; that they are manifestly thriving, rising in their profession, and becoming in many instances owners in the craft they navigate, as the mechanic owns his tools; that the discipline of the sea is greatly improved, the men being governed less by brute force, and more by moral influence; that numbers of masters, officers, and sailors, have been made wise and happy in a hearty reception, and a faithful profession of a spiritual religion; and that, having tasted the good word themselves, they are creating and supplying a demand for it on foreign shores.

The reading of this abstract of the Annual Report was followed by addresses from Rev. Mr. Trumbull of Valparaiso, Rev. Walter Colton of the U. S. Navy, Rev. Mr. Rogers of Boston, and Rev. Mr. Willets.

EDUCATION AT THE WEST.

The Society for the Promotion of Collegiate and Theological Education at the West, held a meeting in New York, last week, for the transaction of business, at which a Report was made, from which the following facts relative to its objects and operations are gleaned. The object of the Society is to afford assistance to Western Theological and Collegiate Institutions. The officers are elected annually, and five Directors constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, except for the appointment of a Secretary and the appropriation of moneys, when nine must be present. Large sums have been given to this Society, and a portion of the money thus given has been expended at the West and in the payment of traveling agents. Upward of $36,000 was collected during the last year for the Society. Applications for continued aid from the Trustees of Marietta, Wabash, Illinois, Knox, Beloit, and Wiltenberg Colleges, and Lane Theological Seminary, came before the Board at the last annual meeting, were duly considered, and a resolution adopted granting them aid the ensuing year. The Western Reserve College has been liberally dealt with, it receiving in all $23,000, of which $10,000 was expressly given to establish the "Storrs Professorship of Christian Theology;" $7,710 of the latter sum was subscribed by members of the Brooklyn Church of the Pilgrims, R. S. Storrs, Jr., Pastor. The several Congregational and Presbyterian churches in Brooklyn, during the last year, contributed upward of $20,000 to the funds of the Society. The Society partially coöperates with the Western Education Society of Auburn, and the Central American Education Society. The rapid growth and settlement of the Western regions stimulates the Society onward, and the probable influx of Europeans in the future is dwelt upon at some length in the Report. The Report earnestly appeals for the aid of the benevolent to this movement, and refers to the sums appropriated by Catholic societies in Europe for the propagation of that religion. The revolutions in Europe, it is supposed by the Report, will lessen these contributions of the Catholics.

AMERICAN FEMALE GUARDIAN SOCIETY.

The Sixteenth Anniversary of this Society was held at the Church of the Puritans, in Union-square; Rev. Dr. Cheever in the Chair. After prayer by Rev. Mr. Bannard, and singing by the children from "the Home," Rev. Mr. Moore, of Philadelphia, read the Treasurer's Report, which showed that the receipts in full, for the present year, amounted to $14,141 69; and the expenditures also to the same sum—that the Society was still in debt $4,050.

The Secretary's Report, in the opening, referred to the removal by death of three efficient members of the Board during the past year—to the encouragement received in their work from various sources, and the results of the efforts expended. The debt upon the building erected in 1849 has been cancelled. A hall of reception for purposes of classification and hospital department has been erected.

The average family at the Home has been about	100
Adults received during the year,	333
Children " " "	236
Whole number,	569
The aggregate of children and adults received since the Institution was opened in July, 1847, has been	1,818
Adult,	1,074
Children,	744

The majority of these have been taken from exposure and want, and introduced to employment, protection, and a good home, in respectable families.

The Society continues to issue from 11,000 to 12,000 copies of the Advocate and Gurdian semi-monthly, besides other publications. Their issues from the press during the year have amounted to ten hundred and fifty-six thousand quarto pages, and over 400,000 duodecimo pages.

In the Register Department upward of two thousand adults have applied for aid and employment, many of whom have been supplied. The same Department registers also the names of upward of 300 children who have applied in the same way.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY.

The Tenth Anniversary of the American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society was celebrated in the Broadway Tabernacle. The Chair was taken by Hon. William Jay, one of the Vice Presidents of the Society. After prayer by Rev. Mr. Woodson, a colored clergyman of Pittsburg, Mr. Jay read a carefully worded address, criticising Mr. Webster's recent position with great severity, and taking a rapid view of the political condition of the country, as regards the Slavery question. He considered it pregnant with dangerous results. The time had come to test the sincerity of the Anti-Slavery sentiment in this country. Mr. Webster had not taken his ill-omened measures merely on his own responsibility. They were brought forward as a cool New England speculation—the cotton interest of Massachusetts calls for their adoption—and the gentry of Boston are backing up their champion in terms of encouragement and adulation. Mr. Jay concluded his Address with an earnest appeal to the citizens of the Free States to give no countenance to the scheme for surrendering fugitives from Slavery, which he pointedly condemned as hostile to every sentiment of religion and humanity.

After Mr. Jay had brought his remarks to a close, Hon. Samuel Lewis of Cincinnati proposed a resolution that no aid should be given in delivering up the fugitives from bondage, which he accompanied with a few brief and pithy remarks.

Mr. Lewis Tappan then read a brief abstract of the Annual Report, and presented a long series of resolutions, from which we take the following:

Resolved, That Slavery still exists, contrary to the letter and spirit of the Constitution and the intention of its framers, and that its introduction into newly-acquired Territories would be an act of treason to Liberty, and an outrage upon the memories of our Fathers.

Resolved, That, in the language of Senator Seward, "there is a higher law than the Constitution;" and, in the language of Sir William Blackstone, "no human laws are of any validity, if contrary to this;" and that all compromises between Right and Wrong, and all statutes which are repugnant to Humanity and Justice, are NULL and VOID.

Resolved, That we are cheered with the noble conduct of the Liberty-loving members of Congress, who amid threats of violence and disunion by Slavery-propagandists are true to the ordinance of 1787, and the cause of Freedom and Humanity; and that the thanks of this meeting be specially given to the Senators and Representatives who have so eloquently vindicated the Constitution, the friends of the Slave, and the Right of Petition; and who have contended so ably for California, Union and Freedom, without compromise, and illustrated with so much force Southern aggression, and the comparative effects of Slavery and Freedom.

Resolved, That the great Anti-Slavery struggle is not between the Northern and Southern States, but between the 113,000 Slaveholders of the South, and the friends of Liberty throughout the country; and that we consider it a highly encouraging sign of the times that anti-slavery sentiments are so rapidly gaining ground in the Slave States and in the District of Columbia.

Resolved, That the illegal imprisonment of colored sailors from the North in Southern ports, the outrages upon Northern citizens traveling at the South on lawful business, the violations of the Post-Office, and the many other breaches of the Constitution by the slave power, should be sternly withstood by the competent authorities.

After the reading of the resolutions, speeches were made by Mr. Lewis of Ohio, and Henry Ward Beecher of Brooklyn.

AMERICAN HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Twenty-fourth Anniversary of this Society was held at the Tabernacle. Henry Dwight, Esq., the President of the Society, took the chair, and prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Wisner, of Ithaca. Rev. Dr. Hall read an abstract of the report of the Treasurer, showing that $167,160 78 had been received during the year, and $145,456 09 paid out, leaving a balance in the treasury, after paying all liabilities.

Rev. Milton Badger, one of the secretaries, then read some extracts from the Annual Report of the Executive Committee, the chief points of which we give as follows: The Society has had in its service the last year 1,032 ministers of the Gospel, in 27 different States and Territories: In the New England States, 301; the Middle States, 228; the Southern States, 15; the Western States and Territories, 488. Of these, 677 have been the pastors or stated supplies of single congregations; and 321 have occupied larger fields. Five have preached to congregations of colored people; 10 to Welsh, and 28 to German congregations; one to a congregation of Norwegians, and one to a congregation of Swedes. The number of congregations supplied, in whole or in part, is 1,575, and the aggregate of ministerial service performed is equal to 812 years. The pupils in Sunday Schools amount to nearly 75,000, and the subscribers to temperance pledges to 93,000. There have been added to the churches 6,682—viz: 3,815 by profession; 2,867, by letter. Many of the western churches particularly have, within a few months, been visited with special effusions of the Spirit. Seventy-one missionaries make mention in their recent reports of revivals of religion; and 323 report 3,108 hopeful conversions. The receipts of the year exceed those last reported, by $11,234 87; 13 more missionaries have been in commission; 65 more congregations have been blessed with a preached Gospel; and 1,109 more have been added to the churches on profession of their faith. Forty congregations have passed from a condition of dependence to that of self-support; 60 houses of worship have been completed, the building of 58 others commenced, and 44 others enlarged, repaired, or in other ways rendered more convenient and inviting. The last year, also, the Society has strengthened its missions on the Pacific coast and entered another new territory—Minnesota—and erected at its capital and at another of its chief settlements the banner of the cross. Taken in all its aspects, the Executive Committee regard the last year as having afforded more numerous indications of the divine favor than any which has preceded it.

The reading of the Report was followed by speeches from Rev. J. W. Chickering of Portland, Rev. Andrew L. Stone of Boston, and Rev. Samuel Washburn of Boston. The Hutchinson Family, also, were present, and entertained the audience with several songs.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

The Twenty-Fifth Annual Meeting of the American Tract Society was held at the Tabernacle on Fourth-day; Hon. Thos. S. Williams, President of the Society, in the Chair. Prayer was offered by Rev Dr. Tappan of Augusta, Me.; and an abstract of the Treasurer's Report was presented, followed by a summary view of the Annual Report of the Society. The principal items of interest embodied in these documents are given below.

New Publications, including D'Aubigné's History, vols. 1 and 2 in German, and vol. 1 in Italian, 73, of which 28 are volumes; total publications now on the Society's list, 1,528, of which 284 are volumes—besides 2,490 approved for foreign stations in about 110 languages and dialects.

Circulated during the year, 939,602 vols., 7,897,792 publications, 280,697,500 pages; exceeding the circulation of any previous year by 46,288,200 pages. Total since the formation of the Society, 5,681,123 volumes, 111,989,195 publications, 2,507,102,789 pages. Illustrated Family Christian Almanac for 1850, 320,000. American Messenger, 160,000 monthly; German Messenger, 12,000.

Gratuitous distributions, in 2,960 distinct grants, to foreign and domestic missionaries, the army and navy, seamen's and Bethel chaplains, humane and criminal institutions, Sunday-schools and individuals, by colporteurs, and to life-members and directors, 58,138,820 pages; value, $38,759 21.

Receipts of the year, in donations, $105,894 80; for sales, $202,371 92; balance in the treasury last year, $157 06; total, $308,423 77. Expenditures for paper, printing, binding, engraving, translating, copy-right, preparing Christian Almanac, and articles for American Messenger, $172,275 25; for presses and machinery, $7,070; for colportage, $66,274 19; remitted to foreign and pagan lands, $15,000; other expenditures, as per items in Treasurer's report, $47,694 11; total, $308,313 55; balance in the Treasury, $110 23. There was due, April 1, for printing paper, on notes payable within six months, $41,133 26.

Including 131 students from 29 different colleges or seminaries for their vacations, and 57 for the foreign immigrant population, 508 colporteurs have been employed for the whole or part of the year, as follows: Vt. 4; R. I. 2; Conn. 6; N. Y. 80; N. J. 8; Pa. 65; Del. 1; Md. 18; Va. 49; N. C. 12; S. C. 9; Geo. 24; Fla. 1; Ala. 11; La. 10; Texas 5; Ark. 2; Miss. 4; Tenn. 21; Ky. 16; Ohio 56; Ind. 33; Ill. 21; Mo. 16; Wis. 10; Iowa 4; Mich. 13; Minnesota 1; Canada 2; Mexico 3; California 1. Fifty colporteurs, not included among these, have also performed more or less labor during the year. The whole number in commission April 1, was 324. The statistical tables show that the colporteurs have visited 428,339 families; addressed public meetings or held prayer meetings to the number of 12,223; sold 417,939 books; granted to the destitute 113,891 books; and distributed 12,700 Bibles and Testaments furnished by Bible Societies. The spiritual condition of the districts thus visited, and the necessity of such efforts, may be inferred from the fact, that 80,030 of the families were habitual neglecters of evangelical preaching; 55,241 families were destitute of all religious books except the Bible; 27,487 families were destitute of the Scriptures; and 44,826 families were Roman Catholics.

Addresses were delivered at the conclusion of the reports, by Chancellor Walworth, Chief Justice Hornblower, Rev. J. B. Shaw, Dr. Plumer, Dr. Bethune, Rev. Mr. Thompson from Syria, and Rev. Amos Sutton, General Baptist Missionary in Orissay, India.

THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

The 34th Anniversary of the American Bible Society was held in the Tabernacle on Fifth-day, May 9. After the reading of the Scriptures, and an address from the President, Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen, the Reports of the Treasurer and Managers were read, of which the following is an abstract:—

The number of new auxiliaries formed is sixty-four; most of them in the Western States and Territories.

The receipts of the year, from all sources, have been $284,614 84; an increase of $34,744 68 over those of the previous year.

The number of Bibles and Testaments issued in the same time, 633,395. These books have been distributed in every State and Territory of the Union; in the West Indies, in Spanish and Portuguese America, in Canada and New Brunswick; among seamen, boatmen, immigrants, hospitals, prisons, Jews and Gentiles, Protestants and Romanists, white men, red men, and colored men, the bond and the free; indeed, among all who were in need and could be reached.

A New Testament, with Spanish and English in parallel columns, has been prepared; also the book of Genesis in Grebo for West Africa, and the book of Acts for an Indian tribe in South America.

The number of agents employed has been thirty, including two in Texas, one in California, and one in the West Indies. A large number of Bible distributors or colporteurs have also been in service, but procured, directed, and paid by the local auxiliaries, aided by the Parent Society only when necessary.

Besides the grants of books from the Depository, moneys have been sent for making the same in France, Turkey, Syria, Persia; at Bombay, Madras, Ceylon, and Lodiana in India; also in China, in South Africa, and at the Sandwich Islands. The whole amount of these payments is $17,900; and there is still voted, but not yet paid, nearly the same amount.

The Board consider that the year, on the whole, has been highly successful, and that prospects for future distributions were never better. The only great apprehension is, that for lack of zeal, method, punctuality, on the part of some auxiliaries, the opening demands of Providence will not be met as fast as they are presented.

At the conclusion of the report, which was adopted and ordered printed, the following resolutions were presented, sustained by able speeches, and adopted:—

Resolved, That as the Bible is its own best interpreter, it carries in itself its own best defense; and we rely, therefore, upon the general diffusion of this Book, with the accompanying influence of the Holy Spirit, as the great means for holding in check the infidel tendencies of our times.

Resolved, That the Society looks with favor and hope on the means adopted by the Board for supplying our immigrant population with the sacred Scriptures.

Resolved, That the Bible, in its letter and spirit, furnishes the best of all standards by which to test the numerous theories of the day for improving the condition and prospects of the race.

Resolved, That the great need of the heathen world is the Bible, and the great duty of the Christian world to supply that need.

NEW YORK STATE VIGILANCE COMMITTEE.

The New York State Vigilance Committee held its Anniversary at the Shiloh Presbyterian Church. The meeting was called to order by Rev. Mr. Josselyn. There was no written report, but the Secretary made a verbal statement of the doings of the Committee. During the past year they have assisted 151 fugitive slaves, besides carrying on several cases in Southern courts, some of which have terminated favorably. One case in Prince George's Co., Md., is still pending. The Committee have also taken the initiatory steps for prosecuting for the freedom of a family of 7 children and 8 grand-children. Their hope is based on the freedom of the grandmother, who was kidnapped, proof of which is abundant. The case will require $750 to carry it through, and bonds to the amount of $250 must also be entered for each person. There is one more case, concerning 40 persons, the maternal ancestor of whom was a free Irish woman. The Committee have had for the past year a salaried agent, by whom these cases in Court have been prosecuted.

The Treasurer's Statement was then read, from which it appears that $1,740 have been received during the year, and $1,360 expended; there is at present in the Treasury $530. The Treasurer read extracts from a letter of Gerrit Smith, which gave the signal for a set of disgraceful rowdies, who had just entered, to get up a tumult. Quiet was soon restored, however, whereupon Rev. Mr. Ward, a colored clergyman, addressed the meeting. Mr. Cyrus M. Burleigh also spoke for about twenty minutes, continually interrupted by yells and cries. Mr. Wm. H. Burleigh afterwards spoke for a short time, with the same interruptions, and the meeting adjourned.

Somebody tried to excuse a liar to Dr. Johnson, saying, "You must not believe more than half what he says." "Ay," replied the Doctor, "but which half?"

THE FEROCITY OF THE HUMAN HEART.

In a recent number of the London Daily News we find extended and very judicious remarks upon the trial of Prof. Webster. After narrating the circumstances of the case, and comparing them with others which have at various times come before the courts of England, the writer concludes his remarks as follows:—

Much of the horror excited by this narrative is owing to the startling contrast between the atrocity of the deed and the tranquil, common-place character of the social relations out of which it originated. In an intellectual, decorous, well-regulated circle, one of its least suspected members is suddenly discovered to have perpetrated an atrocious and revolting murder. The deed is committed apparently under the influence of no overpowering, excited passion. The object is simply to remove a somewhat pertinacious trouble, of a course of indolent self-enjoyment. The murder is accomplished with the most perfect self-possession, calculation of means to ends, and as if it were a mere common matter of business. The irresistible power of seemingly weak motives, the utter absence of any compunctious incitings to oppose them, the short-sightedness to the innumerable hazards of discovery, are shocking by their intense placidity.

What terrible suggestions does such an occurrence whisper respecting the untameable ferocity of the human heart, and the merely superficial character of that civilization on which we are accustomed to place so much reliance! Because, in our orderly, regulated, social intercouse, to-day is as yesterday—because every man has learned to restrain the expression of his more ungovernable emotions—because fear of the law or public opinion deters many from selfish irregularities, we flatter ourselves that the natures of men have been changed. Yet ever and anon some domestic convulsion, like that of Webster, or Wainwright, or Fauntleroy, reminds us that this shallow civilization is after all no more than the thin cake of congealed lava, beneath which the volcanic elements of human passion glow as fiercely and destructively as ever, waiting but the visitation of some wandering breath of air to fan them into destructive intensity.

THINK AGAIN.

It is related, that during the first few days of the reign of Queen Victoria, then a girl between nineteen and twenty years of age, some sentences of a court martial were presented for her signature. One was death, for desertion—a soldier was condemned to be shot, and his death warrant was presented to the Queen for her signature. She read it, paused, looked up at the officer who laid it before her, and said:

"Have you nothing to say in behalf of this man?"

"Nothing! he has deserted three times," said the officer.

"Think again, my lord," was her reply.

"And," said the veteran, as he related the circumstance to his friends (for it was no other than the Duke of Wellington,) "seeing her majesty so earnest about it, I said, he is certainly a very bad soldier, but there was somebody who spoke as to his good character, and he may be a good man for ought I know to the contrary."

"I thank you a thousand times," exclaimed the youthful Queen, and hastily writing Pardoned in large letters on the fatal page, she sent it across the table with a hand trembling with eagerness and emotion.

What a world of instruction, goodness and true philosophy is contained in these two words, think again. Could we adopt their spirit as the rule of our lives, one and all, what a happy change would come over society. In all our business concerns, in our social and moral relations, our political and religious duties, what important results might follow, if, on many, very many occasions, we would think again before deciding upon acting.

DR. ASHBEL GREEN.

His earlier sermons are described as having been too highly wrought, and as marked by great rhetorical finish. This gave him popularity with a multitude, but failed of commending him to all his flock. One day, returning from the service of the sanctuary, he was accosted by a poor woman, a member of his church, who, fearing that his language was not always adapted to the capacities of a portion of his hearers, took the liberty of giving her youthful pastor a hint.

"Mr. Green," said she, "what do you think is the great business of the shepherd?"

"No doubt to feed the flock, madam," was his reply.

"That is my notion, too," she added, "and therefore I think he should not hold the hay so high that the sheep cannot reach it."

The monition was received in the spirit with which it was given, and probably had its influence in causing him afterwards to "hold the hay lower."

A FAITH THAT WORKS.

Some of the papers mentioned the case, awhile since, of an aged clergyman in Maine, who, when called on to pray at a missionary meeting, could not begin until he had drawn some money from his pocket, and put it on the plate.

A case somewhat analogous occurred at the meeting of an auxiliary Bible society. A lawyer present, who had recently become a religious man, was called on by the president to address the audience. He arose and inquired how old the society was? A reply was made, that it was twenty-six years old. And what is the annual sum for a member? One dollar, was the reply. He at once counted out twenty-six dollars for past years, regretting that he did not commence with the society, and then followed with a speech which touched all hearts.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, May 16, 1850.

THE SHANGHAI CHAPEL.

Our missionaries in China are appealing to the Board, with much earnestness, for funds to build a chapel. We sincerely hope, that their appeal will be responded to by a liberal contribution from our denomination. We would, therefore, again call attention to the following resolution adopted by the Board in February last:—

"Resolved, That the Corresponding Secretary be instructed to open a subscription for the purpose of raising $3,500, to purchase a lot and build a chapel in Shanghai, in sums of $50."

As the manner of raising subscriptions in such large sums may appear objectionable to some, it is necessary to explain. In the first place, we shall need to have the contributions to the treasury very much increased, to meet the ordinary expenses of the mission. Hitherto our missionaries have been furnished with only a bare subsistence. Perhaps the necessity of employing teachers constantly, in order to perfect themselves in the language, is overlooked by some of our brethren. The necessity, too, of having servants to do their work, in order that they may give themselves wholly to the mission upon which they have been sent, is not kept in mind, it may be. Perhaps it is overlooked, that tracts must be published, and the Scriptures put into circulation. But our people must bear these things in mind, and contribute not only to the bare subsistence of those whom they have sent out, but also what will enable them to make the most of their time and opportunities. Now, because it will be necessary to increase the ordinary expenses of the mission, and because such increase will make a draft upon the denomination at large to as great an extent as they may be willing to meet, the Board has judged it most advisable to present the subscription for the chapel only to those fast friends of the cause who are most abundantly supplied with this world's goods. In the second place, to raise the needed amount in small subscriptions, would occupy a length of time inconsistent with the promptness necessary in this case. Experience has shown us, that funds for the general purposes of the mission come in quite too slowly; and we have no hope, that the special fund requisite for the chapel can be secured except by an agency. It is evident, that an agent could not personally visit the whole denomination in any short space of time, nor at any moderate expense. It is desirable, that so much as will suffice to purchase a good lot, say from seven hundred to one thousand dollars, be forwarded to China immediately. These are some of the reasons which have governed the Board in their determination to raise the fund by fifty-dollar subscriptions. If there are those who feel that they can not pledge themselves for so large an amount, but would nevertheless feel it a privilege to do something, we would inform them, that the necessity for enlarging our operations in China is urgent, and that their contributions will be most gratefully received for the general purposes of the mission. It is sincerely hoped, that contributions for the ensuing year will be at least double what they have been in any former year.

It was noticed in the Recorder of last week, that the Corresponding Secretary had been appointed an Agent for this special purpose. It is his intention to visit the eastern division of the denomination immediately, and the other portions as soon as may be compatible with other duties. He hopes that the brethren will be prepared for the occasion. We venture the assertion, that in almost every church may be found one, if not more, who has given as much as fifty dollars towards building a meeting-house in his own neighborhood. In some of our churches, no doubt, half-a-dozen such brethren may be found. Were they made any poorer by their contributions? Have they not prospered as well since as before? Surely, then, these same brethren can, without any great difficulty, meet the subscription proposed for the chapel in Shanghai. Let it not be said, that while all other missions are furnished most liberally, and nothing is withholden that can render their operations efficient, the Seventh-day Baptist mission meets with but a niggardly support.

In regard to the necessity for a chapel, we cannot do better than to let our missionaries speak for themselves. Under date of Nov. 1, 1849, Bro. Carpenter writes as follows:

"We have now been in this field more than two years, and have become sufficiently acquainted with the spoken language to make ourselves understood in a good degree by the dark minds around us. And you are calculating to send more missionaries. It becomes, then, a matter of importance to decide upon the best plan, or upon the best one within our reach. Other missionaries think it advisable to build chapels in the city. Accordingly, there are three now nearly finished, two of them about 40 by 80 feet, the third 30 by 60. The one nearest us, built by the American Episcopalians, will cost, I think, over five thousand dollars. The one built by the Southern Baptists will not cost so much, I think. The other cost about two thousand. The American Episcopalian is about half a mile from us. The other two about a mile. The London Society's chapel is also a mile or more. The advantages of chapels or churches to preach in are nearly the same here as at home. As the minister in New York, who should undertake street preaching, would not be likely to meet with very flattering success, such would be his lot here. The Chinese have their notions of propriety as well as others, and they are not less tenacious of them. We may sometimes enter the idol temples, the tea shops, and other places, and obtain a hearing; or we may in our walks sometimes fall in company with those who will listen; but for the general purposes of public instruction, it seems important to have buildings known or recognized as devoted to that object. I think it will be admitted, then, on all hands, that churches are necessary.

The next inquiry is, Will the chapel we already have in our house answer our purpose? We reply—1. It is large enough to answer a good purpose. 2. But it is a little retired from any thoroughfare; and, as the Chinese will not take much pains to go to meeting to hear a doctrine for which they have no relish, we may not expect large congregations. 3. Our prospect for congregations would be improved by a bell. Gongs are heard at all times of the day and night, and although ours is understood by our immediate neighbors (few of whom care to come out) it is not likely to be understood by those passing the principal streets near us. A bell would be more distinctive. One the size of a good steamboat bell would be large enough. Such an one has Dr. Lockhart, which is rung to call his patients together, and can be heard sometimes a mile off. Such an one also have the Catholics, about a mile from us. Situated as we are in this house, in the midst of a dense population, and near to two streets much traveled, we think a bell would be a desideratum. And indeed, if we were on a larger street, the gentle tolling of a bell might do much towards gathering a congregation. We would, therefore, respectfully suggest to the Board the propriety of sending by the first Shanghai ship a small bell for the chapel we now occupy.[*]

Another inquiry is, Ought we to be satisfied to use our present chapel, making it as attractive as we may? Our opinion is, that we should not, if a moderate allowance can be appropriated to the the purchasing of a site and building of a chapel. Indeed, we have just made a conditional offer of four hundred dollars for a site. The condition is, that our Board approve the measure, and send us the money. You may think us hasty. We must explain. Nearly a year ago, Dr. Bridgeman requested me to act for him in looking for a site. He had $1,000 put into his hands to be expended in that way. Since that time I have seen quite a number of lots, and learned some thing of their value. You will recollect, that some months since I wrote you about a lot near us, expressing a hope that no other denominations would be allowed to hem us into these narrow quarters by fixing their chapels near us on the public streets. The lot I then spoke of is the same that we now have in view. It is less than a quarter of a mile from us, on a street wider and pleasanter than most of the large streets. Just in that quarter there is not so much business going on as there is where some of the missionaries have located their chapels; hence the lot is cheap—not a third part as expensive as either of two others on which chapels are erected. I cannot promise you certainly that the owner of the $400 lot will wait till we can hear from you. If some one should offer him the money he might sell. But we think it probable, that if the Board furnish us with the means to pay for it within eight months of this date the lot will be at our disposal.

The following, which is the last communication received by the Board, presents the subject in a somewhat modified light.

SHANGHAI, Jan. 15, 1850.

I have just time to say, that in reference to our having a chapel in some suitable location, we feel more and more as if we could not be denied. If our people can even think of getting-up a College, they can first give us the means to make our time and strength more available. We never enjoyed better health, or felt more like laying out our strength in the work; but, aside from the study of the language, our efforts seem too much like beating the air; our words, for the most part, die away in the empty air, there being but few ears to catch them. We do not believe that our brethren wish to have us spend our time in beating the air, if we can do better. Yesterday I learned that the London Mission have recently purchased a site in a very good place, and sufficiently large for a chapel, for $750, and that they intend to put a plain chapel on it, to be built in the native style, to cost about $1200, and two or three hundred dollars on the premises besides. And they intend to go on and obtain another lot soon. Their plan is to build cheap, and have the more in number. This is good policy, I think, especially as few men can ever expect to speak the Chinese language so as to be as distinctly understood in a large house as though they spoke in English. A Chinese speaker cannot make himself heard distinctly to so great a distance as an English speaker can.

Perhaps before this shall reach you means will have started for China to enable us to purchase the site about which we have previously written. If not, we think a little should be added to the sum before specified. Further attention has convinced us, that that site, though a good one, does not afford the prospect of so large a congregation as some which have recently been brought to our notice, but which would cost more. Why should not we put a chapel on as public a street as possible? The odds will then be against us in point of numbers. But if we are to make known to this people the blessed gospel, and the violated law, why not take a stand among the thickest crowds, where we could gain the most ears?

All of which we respectfully submit.

Yours truly S. CARPENTER.

BAPTIST HOME MISSIONS.—The American Baptist Home Mission Society held its 18th annual meeting in New York on Fifth-day last, at which the Annual Report was read, and addresses were delivered by Prof. Raymond of Madison University, and Howard Malcom of Philadelphia. The Report states that the Society has received during the past year, from all sources, $30,369 07, and paid out $25,403 46. The liabilities of the Society on the 1st day of April were $23,821 38, and the available resources $9,469 61, showing a balance on the wrong side of $14,356 77. The number of agents and missionaries in commission last year was 118, of whom 41 were newly appointed. Ten of the churches formerly aided by the Society have assumed the support of their own ministry within the year. The number of stations supplied is 338; aggregate of time bestowed, 81 years; persons baptized, 949; churches organized, 33; ministers ordained, 30; meeting houses completed, 6.

JEWISH MISSIONS.

The American Society for Meliorating the Condition of the Jews, held its anniversary in New York on Fifth-day last. After the usual religious exercises, the Annual Report was read, and addresses were delivered by J. W. Marcussohn, a Christian Israelite from Constantinople—Rev. Hallis Reed—Moses Frenkel, a Christian Israelite from Poland—and Rev. Gilian Bonhomme. From the Report, we learn that the receipts into the Treasury last year were about $3,200; this year they have amounted to $5,641 76. Of this amount there has been expended in support of missionaries among the Jews, $1,674 22; in support of Colporteurs and Agents, $916 04; in support of students preparing for the missionary work, $362 79. The Society was embarrassed during the early part of the year, for the want of an efficient Secretary to carry forward operations. A Secretary has now been obtained, however, and during the coming year it is intended to do more than has been done in past years. Fifteen missionaries are to be employed. The Report states that the missionaries have been able to induce Jews in considerable numbers of both sexes to attend upon their public ministrations in Christian churches. There are at the present time more than a hundred Christian Israelites in good and regular standing in the various evangelical churches of this country, of whom 20 are preachers of the Gospel, and 7 are in a preparatory course. There are known to be as many as 15 serious inquirers after the truth as it is in Jesus, all of whom have come in contact with the missionaries of this Society, and have been first awakened through their instrumentality. The missionaries and colporteurs of the Society have distributed among the Jews the past year thousands of tracts and hundreds of Bibles, lectures, and other books adapted to their present religious condition.

AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY.

The American Anti-Slavery Society held its 16th Anniversary at the Tabernacle in New York on Third-day of last week. Wm. Lloyd Garrison called the meeting to order, and stated, that in accordance with the usage of the Society, if any person present felt moved to offer vocal prayer to the God of the oppressed, opportunity was given for that purpose. Rev. Henry Green, of Philadelphia, accepted the invitation, and made a fervent address to the Throne of Grace. This was followed by the reading of select portions of Scripture, testifying against injustice and oppression; after which the Treasurer presented his report, showing the receipt of $7,719, during the year, mostly from publications and donations. The expenses have been $7,403, leaving the Society out of debt, and with about $300 on hand.

Mr. Garrison then came forward, and delivered a lengthy address, in which he set forth the aims of the American Anti-Slavery Society as beneficent, glorious, Christ-like, and attempted to show that the various religious denominations and political organizations of the country stand directly in the Society's way, and are in fact the main pillars and supports of the system of slavery. His remarks were frequently interrupted by the running commentary, questions, and hisses of a gang of rowdies, headed by Capt. Rynders, of the Empire Club, who had assembled upon and around the platform. When he had concluded, the audience called loudly for Rev. Dr. Furness, of Philadelphia, (who had been announced for the occasion,) while the rowdies called with equal earnestness for their champion, Prof. Grant. It was finally agreed, that Mr. Furness should speak first, and accordingly he proceeded to review the religious and political movements of the day, and to vindicate the anti-slavery agitation. Mr. Grant followed, and attempted to demonstrate that the negro is but a connecting link between the higher order of animals and man, and that, therefore, all efforts to raise him to a level with the whites are in opposition to natural laws and must result in disappointment. He was followed by Frederick Douglass, the self-emancipated slave and eloquent advocate of freedom, who showed up the absurdity of Mr. Grant's theory in a very convincing and entertaining manner, which put the whole audience in good nature, and drew from them repeated expressions of applause. Among the comments of the rowdies, in the course of Mr. Douglass' remarks, was a denial of his claim to be a negro, and an assertion that all there was good about him should be ascribed to the white blood in his veins. This insinuation met with a practical refutation in the speech which followed, by Rev. Samuel R. Ward—"a regular Nigritian, as black as the ace of spades in a deep cellar on a rainy night"—who brought history, logic, and wit to bear upon the views set forth by Mr. Grant, in a way to convince the audience, that if any one of the speakers to whom they had listened was nearly related to the ourang-outang or the monkey, it must be he who attempted to show that relationship. At the conclusion of Mr. Ward's remarks, the hour of adjournment had arrived, and the large assembly departed in good order.

In the afternoon, another meeting was held at the Society Library, at which Wendell Phillips and others made interesting addresses. An evening session was held at the same place, but so much disturbance was created that it was thought expedient to adjourn at an early hour.

The next day, the Society assembled at the same place. During the early part of the meeting there was but little disturbance; but after the resolutions had been read, and speaking commenced, the rowdies began to interrupt, hiss, and cheer, in such a manner as to render it impossible to do business. They were invited to pick a speaker from among themselves, who should have a quiet and candid hearing; but this was not their mode of warfare, and they declined. One of them proposed three cheers for the Constitution, and they were given. Three cheers each were also given for the Church, for Gen. Foote of Mississippi, for Cass, for the memory of Washington, &c. In the midst of this confusion, the Hutchinson Family attempted to sing "Friends of Equality," but half of the song was lost in the tumult. At length a body of police were introduced, and restored comparative order, when it was announced, that the trustees of the building, on a representation that the books and property overhead were endangered, had procured an order for closing the room. After brief consultation, Mr. Garrison announced, under protest, that the meeting of the American Anti-Slavery Society was adjourned.

In the afternoon, the members of the Society held a private meeting, at which they elected officers, passed resolutions expressive of their views of the riotous proceedings which had taken place, and adjourned sine die.

—The proceedings above recorded cannot fail to bring odium upon the city of New York, although the authors of them are comparatively few in number and uninfluential in character. The feeling is general, that the Authorities failed to do their duty in the premises—that they ought to have put down, at any cost, this attempt of a rabble to overthrow the right of free discussion. It is urged, by way of apology for their not doing so, that the chairman of the first meeting invited the rowdies to attend the subsequent meetings, and take part in the discussions, thus giving them a sort of right there. Of the truth or falsity of this we are no assured; but even if it were true, there can be little doubt of the duty of the authorites to restrain persons who, under the pretense of exercising their own rights, presume thus to trample upon the rights of others. That these proceedings will harm the anti-slavery cause, there is no reason to fear; on the contrary, they will furnish texts for innumerable effective sermons and lectures throughout the coming year. Already they are used to establish the positions of those whom they were intended to injure, as will be seen from the following resolution, adopted at the private meeting of members of the Society. This is only the beginning:

Resolved, That when the profane, the drunken, the licentious, the lawless, rally together to break up the meetings of the American Anti-Slavery Society, by groaning, bellowing, and making the most beastly noises, and uttering the foulest language—scoffing at all appeals to reason, decency, and manly conduct; and when, at the same time, they give "three cheers for the Church," "three cheers for the Constitution," and "three cheers for the Union," we submit to a candid world whether the highest evidence is not furnished that the Church, the Constitution, and the Union, are against God and against liberty, and have entered into "a covenant with death," and "with hell are at agreement;" and that this Society is engaged in a God-like enterprise, and deserves the approbation of every pure and noble spirit.

THE AMERICAN BOARD.

A meeting on behalf of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions was held at the Tabernacle on Sixth-day last. The President, Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen, delivered a brief address on the value of the Gospel as a means of spreading and securing liberty of conscience and civil freedom; after which, statements were read, showing the condition and operations of the Board.

During the year, two ordained missionaries and five assistant missionaries have rested from their labors.

Four ordained missionaries and eight assistant missionaries have left this country for a foreign field, and eight assistant missionaries have joined the several missions among the Indians of this country.

Three missionaries and two assistant missionaries, who were in this country a year ago, have returned to their stations.

Five missionaries and one missionary physician are now under appointment, and will soon enter upon their labors.

Eight months have elapsed since the Prudential Committee sent forth, in their annual report, an appeal for thirty-eight new laborers to sustain existing missions, and these six individuals are all who have yet responded to that appeal by the offer of themselves for this service.

The receipts to the Treasury of the Board, during the nine months which have elapsed of the current financial year, have been $187,609 83, which exceeds the receipts of the corresponding months of the previous year, by $8,331 93. A proportionate increase during the remaining three months, will make the total receipts of the present year, $260,897 68. If this amount should be received, and the expenditures should be equal to those of the last year, the debt at the close of the year will amount to $34,924 77.

Several of the missions have enjoyed during the year seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, among which mention is made of the Tamil mission, in Southern Africa, and the Nestorian mission.

There are now under the care of the Board 25 missions, embracing 104 stations, 163 ordained missionaries, 8 physicians not ordained, and 238 other assistants from this country. Associated with them are 31 native preachers, and 100 other native helpers, making in all 540 laborers under the care of the Board.

There are also 87 organized churches, containing about 26,000 members, about 2000 of whom have been added within the last year.

In connection with the Schools, directly or indirectly under the instruction of the missionaries, are 10,430 youths and children.

The twelve printing establishments, in connection with the missions, have issued during the year, in 30 languages, 36,000,000 pages; and since the commencement of the missions more than 750,000,000 pages bearing the record of God's saving truth.

The reading of the reports was followed with addresses by Rev. Mr. French, missionary from Ahmednuggur, Rev. A. A. Willits, Rev. John D. Paris of the Sandwich Island mission, and Rev. Wm. M. Thompson, missionary from Syria.

AMERICAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

This organization held a meeting last week, at which Chancellor Walworth presided. The Annual Report, read by the Corresponding Secretary, Rev. John Marsh, represented the cause as in a sound and prosperous condition, notwithstanding the apparent defection the last year, in the delusive cholera preventive. The churches and ministry have given to it more of their time and influence. The risings and upheavings of society to throw off the burdens and oppressions of a legalized traffic have been more and more successful. Maine holds firm to her prohibitory statute, and is blessed in it. Vermont has rejected the license system by a popular vote of 20,000 against 12,000. Massachusetts gives no license in any of her counties. Rhode Island none but in four towns. In New York, no legislative action has been had, but a Report of a Committee of the Legislature has been submitted, which must ultimately create some definite action. The Wisconsin law stands firm, and is found to operate to the terror and check of all venders of intoxicating drinks. It is considered a model law for all the States. Father Mathew's visit has been well received, and has awakened some interest in the cause at the South. Temperance organizations are numerous, and in many places effective. In Scotland, the three principal religious denominations are earnestly engaged in the cause, and fifty ministers of the Free Church have headed a temperance movement. The King and Queen of Sweden are still patrons of temperance in their kingdom. The Sandwich Islands have suffered from the French aggressions and the California excitement, but temperance is there still predominant. Liberia is a perfectly temperance Republic. In Canada and Nova Scotia, in several of the West India Islands, at Madras and Bombay, much progress is reported.

THE SABBATH UNION.

In New York, on Sunday evening last, a sermon was delivered by Rev. Dr. Bethune before the "American and Foreign Sabbath Union"—an association which has a name, but of the doings of which, aside from an annual sermon, the public has of late known but little, probably because there has been but little to be known. The following notice of the discourse is copied from the N. Y. Tribune:—

"The Rev. Dr. argued the duty of a religious observance of the Sabbath, not only from the express command of God, but as a proper preparation for the coming six days' labor. He traced the biblical history of the sacred institution from its first dawn in Eden to the Resurrection of the Savior. He also rejected the idea of any coërcive laws to force observance of the sacred day, choosing rather to rest its claims to the world's attention upon the sacred injunction, and more especially upon the good example of its observance to be set by Christians. At the same time, the Doctor paid his respects, in no very tender manner, to those who advance the idea, that the laboring classes should not be required or expected to refrain from steamboat or other excursions on the Lord's Day. He was also of the opinion, that all manner of secular labor performed on the Sabbath was not only a violation of God's command, but in the end unprofitable and injurious to the doer. The severe thrust that he gave at those persons who make slaves of their servants, that they may render Sunday a day of feasting and vain parade, created a visible emotion among the audience.

—As an epilogue to the eloquent discourse, the audience were treated to a marriage. With some difficulty the central aisle was cleared, and the pair, with their supporters, came to the altar. They were not a little disconcerted at the eager gaze of so vast a crowd, and the beautiful bride trembled like an aspen, while her future lord looked as though he would prefer a less conspicuous position for so interesting a ceremony. The ladies—women is the good old English word—stood upon the seats or tops of pews, and some well-grown girls did not disdain to be raised upon men's shoulders to see the parties united. The church was filled in every part, from the pulpit to the street; benches were placed along the aisles, and men were seated on the steps in front of the pulpit, and still scores were obliged to go away unable to gain admittance. Whether they came most to hear the sermon or to see the marriage, we won't say. If we should give the outside remarks of the dispersing congregation, perhaps the decision would not be doubtful. But we are not going to play the part of a spy in the camp."

PRESBYTERY OF WEST AFRICA.—It appears by a letter noticed in the Southern Presbyterian, that a Presbytery has been formed in Western Africa, and some two or three churches have been organized under favorable auspices. The Rev. H. W. Ellis, a colored missionary at Monrovia, better known as the learned slave, speaks of an interesting revival at Monrovia, in November last. Of its fruits, he says that "forty have been added to the Methodist Episcopal Church—eighteen to the Presbyterians, and some to the Baptists, who are still going on with their services, being on the eve of the meeting of their association. Of the eighteen who have joined the Presbyterian Church, nine have joined the Church at Monrovia, and nine the Church at Kentucky (a church recently organized,) where Mr. Erskine, a licentiate, resides, preaches, and teaches a school."

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND SLAVERY.—Agreeable to promises long ago made, the Rev. Dr. Cummings has appeared before a New York audience, admitted at 25 cents a head, to explain the views of the Catholic Church in relation to Slavery. According to him, "the sum of the Catholic doctrine in regard to Slavery throughout the world is, to preach obedience to the slave for the love of God—to the master, kindness and mercy, in view of the justice of God." This course he attempted to vindicate by asserting, that "Christ and his Apostles never applied to slavery the broad law of Christian Justice." "The church hopes for a time when men will stand upon more equal ground, but submits to the existing state of things." These sentences, quoted from a very full report of the Doctor's address, furnish a key to the whole. Comment is unnecessary.

METHODIST MISSIONS.—At the recent Annual Meeting of the General Missionary Committee in conjunction with the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, it was determined to appropriate to the promotion of the Missionary cause, for the year 1850, one hundred and fifty thousand dollars—an advance of $50,000 upon last year, as follows:

For the Domestic	85,800
Total	$150,000

The latter appropriation is divided between the Domestic Missions proper and the foreign resident population in this country, Germans, Swedes, Norwegians, Danes and French. The Indians in the States and in the Territories are included in this last division.

BROWN UNIVERSITY.—The Faculty and Trustees of Brown University, at Providence, R. I., have determined to change their system of instruction so as to enable students to pursue more thoroughly those branches in which they feel particularly interested. The Providence Journal says that the proposition to raise $125,000 for the University, as the basis of the new system of instruction, has been received with generous favor, and with an enlightened disposition to advance the great interests of Education. The subscription is opened with three names, each for $20,000, and another for $5,000, and assurances have been received of liberal contributions from other gentlemen. Such munificence relieves wealth of all envy, and protects it by the surest of all securities, the general respect of the public. There is every reason to hope, that the commencement which has been made will be followed up in the same spirit, and that the College will be placed upon a foundation which will render it all that the public Education of the State requires.

THE POLISH JEWS.—It is said that the Russian Government is attempting to nationalize the Jews in the Kingdom of Poland. A Ukase issued in January in reference to this, is a remarkable production. The Jews were enrolled in the Russian regiments in the interior, but they could not bear the climate as a general rule, and were found unfit for military service. It is accordingly now ordered, that the Jewish recruits shall be enlisted in their 13th year, and exercised in the military colonies for active service till their 18th year, when they are required to serve in the regiments until their 25th year. It is evident that skillful soldiers will be made in this way, though the Jew is thereby lost.

THE COMPROMISE IN CONGRESS.—In our sketch of last week's Congressional Proceedings, will be found an abstract of the plan of Compromise presented by the Senate's Committee of Thirteen. The probability of its leading to a harmonious settlement of existing difficulties relative to Slavery, is very small. It has been suggested, that the violent attack upon it by Southern Senators may prove to be only a trick to put the North off its guard, and that they will in due time show their approval of the plan by an unexpected vote in its favor. A few days will decide the matter.

ROUTE TO SHILOH, N. J.—The Eastern Association meets at Shiloh, N. J., on Fifth-day, May 23d. Delegates from the East should go from New York to Philadelphia on Third-day afternoon. On Fourth-day morning, at 7 o'clock, they can take a stage running from Philadelphia through Shiloh to Greenwich; or, at 10 o'clock, they can take the steamboat which leaves Arch-st. wharf for Salem, and go thence by stage to Shiloh the same afternoon. The latter route from Philadelphia is probably the best.

NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE.—"The Independent" of last Fifth-day contained twenty-two long columns of matter relating to the Anniversaries, bringing the reports up to near the hour of going to press. Two days afterward an extra sheet of that paper was issued, containing nineteen columns of anniversary reports, and the usual variety of editorial and other matter.

REVIVAL AT PAWCATUCK, R. I.—A letter from Eld. Alfred B. Burdick, pastor of the Seventh-day Baptist Church at Pawcatuck, R. I., says:—"We have been enjoying an interesting state of religious feeling in this church, for a few weeks past. Fifteen have been baptized, and some others have manifested a hope that they have passed from death unto life."

☞ A. D. TITSWORTH, Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society, requests his correspondents to address him hereafter at New-Brunswick, N. J.

General Intelligence.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. SECOND-DAY, May 6.

The Vice-President having announced that he should be absent for several days, W. R. King, of Alabama, was chosen President pro tem.

A report was adopted in favor of printing 5,000 copies of the Geological and Topographical Report of Gen. Persifer F. Smith and Dr. Tyson, on California.

A report was presented in favor of printing 30,000 copies of the agricultural part of the Patent Office Report, which gave rise to a long and warm discussion. Mr. Yulee said that the public printing already ordered would amount to an average of 10,000 volumes each week, from this time to December next—and now it is proposed to order 30,000 copies of a work of which the House had ordered 150,000 copies. The cost of public printing for the balance of this year, he said, would be $50,000 a week. Several other Senators opposed printing, for different reasons; but the motion to print was adopted.

The bill establishing a Board of Accounts, to consist of three Commissioners, to investigate all claims against the United States, was taken up and amended, and then laid aside to be printed.

House of Representatives.

Nothing of importance was done in the House. First there was a long talk about instructing the Ewing Committee to examine as to who wrote certain political letters. Then a resolution was adopted, calling on the Secretary of War for copies of instructions to Col. Munroe, U. S. Commandant in New Mexico, with regard to the pretensions of Texas to sovereignity there. Finally, the Census Bill was taken up, and several unimportant amendments voted upon; after which the House adjourned.

In Senate. THIRD-DAY, May 7.

The principal matter before the Senate, was the bill to establish a Board of Accounts, consisting of three Commissioners, to settle all claims against the United States. The bill also provides for the appointment of a Government Attorney and two Clerks. The blanks in the bill were filled so as to make the salary of Commissioners $1,000 each—Attorney $3,000—Chief Clerk $1,800—2d Clerk $1,500. Pending an amendment, that these officers "shall not be removed by the President, except with the advice and consent of the Senate," an adjournment was moved and carried.

House of Representatives.

The Census Bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, and Mr. Vinton's amendment providing for taking the next Census in accordance with the provisions of this bill, unless it should be altered or repealed before the first of January preceding the next Census, was adopted. His next amendment, providing that the House of Representatives shall hereafter consist of 200 members, was also adopted—72 to 63. An amendment providing that the election for members of Congress shall be held on the same day throughout the United States, was rejected. The bill reported by a majority of the Judiciary Committee, providing merely for taking the census of inhabitants, was lost—50 to 92. The Committee rose, and the greater part of the amendments were concurred in by the House, and others were laid over to be taken up and voted upon another day.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, May 8.

The Committee of Thirteen on California, the Territories, &c., made their report. It is very long, and contains the following points:—

First—The Committee are unanimously of the opinion that new States may be formed out of Texas under the terms of the compact entered into by the United States in the resolutions of annexation, and that when they are so formed they have a clear and undoubted right to be admitted into the Union as equal States; but the Committee do not think that any plan for the formation of new States out of Texas should be originated by Congress, but should be left to the people of Texas; also, that such new States should be admitted without any objection on account of the exclusion or permission of slavery.

Second—In considering the question of the admission of California, a majority of the Committee are of the opinion that every irregularity in the proceedings antecedent to her application for admission into the Union should, in consideration of the many circumstances of her position, be overlooked, and recommend the passage of the bill reported by Mr. Douglass for her admission into the Union as a State. But the Committee also think it quite necessary that Territorial Governments should be furnished for the Territories of Utah and New Mexico. They therefore recommended that the bill for the admission of California, and the bill providing Territorial Governments, be incorporated in one measure, and passed together, as one measure. They also recommend that the bills be passed without the Wilmot Proviso being attached to the Territories.

Third—The Committee report as an additional section to the California and Territorial bill, a provision determining the boundaries of New Mexico and Texas.

Fourth—The Committee report a section to be added to Mr. Mason's bill, in relation to fugitive slaves. It provides that every master, before he goes into another State to recover his slave, shall go before some competent tribunal and establish the fact of the elopement of property, and of the description of slave, and with these facts, attested by a competent record, and upon presenting them to an officer, the slave shall be delivered up to him—also, that if the slave declares his freedom, he shall have a trial for his freedom, on return to the State from whence he had escaped.

Fifth—That slavery ought to be abolished in the District of Columbia.

Sixth—The majority of the Committee report a bill for the suppression of the slave trade in the District of Columbia upon the model of the law lately enforced in Maryland.

This report was very violently attacked by the leaders of the Southern party, and denounced as conceding too much to the North. It was ordered printed, however, and the Senate adjourned.

House of Representatives.

Mr. Vinton's important amendments to the Census bill were both adopted, and the bill passed.

Mr. Winthrop then obtained the floor on the President's California Message, and avowed his unchanged adherence to the Wilmot Proviso.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, May 9.

A resolution of inquiry relative to the alloy in gold, and the expediency of establishing a mint or depots for the purchase of bullion in California, was passed; several private bills were considered; and the Census bill was received from the House, with amendments, and referred to the Select Committee on the Census.

The bill reported yesterday, admitting the State of California into the Union, and establishing Territorial Governments for Utah and New Mexico, and making proposals to Texas for the establishment of her western and northern boundaries, was taken up, read the second time, and made the special order for Second-day next.

The Senate then renewed the consideration of the bill to establish a Board of Accounts. After debate and action upon various amendments, of no general interest, the bill was reported to the Senate, and passed; after which the Senate adjourned over to Second-day.

House of Representatives.

There was nothing done, and nothing of importance said, in the House. The manner of giving out contracts for furnishing or re-fitting the House was talked about; also some special privileges of Baltimore to tax ships; and finally there was a debate about what subject should be taken up, till the hour of adjournment arrived.

House of Representatives. SIXTH-DAY, May 10.

The House took up the private calendar, and passed a bill giving $1,810 to Nicoll & Church, of New York, for supplying tea to the Navy.

The Senate's amendments to the deficiency bill were taken up. That appropriating, for additional contingent expenses of the House, $129,250, and the contingencies of the Senate $213,000, gave occasion for several members to insist upon the importance of economy, and was then adopted. So was the amendment appropriating $5,000 for removing the green-house, and also one authorizing 22 additional clerks in the Post Office Department.

Adjourned over to Second-day.

ONE WEEK LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the steamer Niagara, which arrived at New York on Sixth-day last, we have one week later news from Europe.

In England, the organization of the Parliamentary Select Committee on the reduction of official salaries met with the warm approbation of the reformers. The names of Cobden and Bright appear in the list. The subject of agricultural distress has again been before the House of Lords, but without leading to any new results. The present abuses of the University system are about to be inquired into by a Royal Commission.

From Ireland, we learn that the recent appeal of O'Connell in behalf of the Repeal Movement, had the effect to raise the rent one week to £33. Emigration is less general than heretofore. The crops promise well.

From France, there is nothing important. On the 22d and 23d of May, two opposition journals were seized, and all news venders' stalls destroyed, and the newsmen arrested by the Police. On the 24th, copies of the proscribed journals were read about on the Boulevards to great bodies of people in defiance of the Police. Six companies of the National Guard have been suspended for electing a Socialist Captain. A Te Deum was performed on the 20th for the Pope's return to Rome, to whom Count M. Renneval has been appointed Plenipotentiary. Count Zemourki, who took an active part in the Hungarian War, has arrived at Paris. The Assemly has voted 15,000 francs to the survivors of the disaster at Angers and to the families of the deceased.

At Rome it is said that great precautions have to be taken to protect the Pope from assassination. No person is allowed to approach him except by permission of Cardinal Antonelli. Letters state that the Pope since his return has drawn up several decrees which have been suppressed by the Cardinals. One account states that his Holiness is little less than an Austrian prisoner.

Warsaw letters state that many arrests had taken place in that city. A conspiracy among the Polish and Russian youths had been discovered. The young men of the Universities and the Army were indiscriminately arrested, without inquiry into their guilt or innocence.

The difficulty between England and Greece seems as far as ever from being settled.

DEATH OF THE POET WORDSWORTH.

The death of William Wordsworth is announced by the recent arrivals from England. It took place on Tuesday, the 23d of April. At the hour of noon on that day, he breathed his last by the side of the beautiful lake in Westmoreland, and under the shadow of the romantic mountain, to both of which he has given an undying fame. He was born in the year 1770, at Cockermouth, in Cumberland. His parents occupied a respectable station among the middle classes of English society. He received his early education at the Hawkesworth Grammar School, where he soon excited attention by his devotion to classical studies. His first attempt at poetical composition was made at the age of 13, but it was not until ten years after this that he appeared in print. He became a member of St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1787, and soon after his graduation he took a foot-journey in France, Switzerland and Italy, of which he embodied his recollections in a volume of Poems entitled "Descriptive Sketches in Verse." He afterwards visited Paris, but was compelled by the disturbances of the Revolution to return to England. He then selected a residence in Somersetshire, after a pedestrian tour through the most picturesque regions of his own country, and here formed the acquaintance with Coleridge, which soon ripened into great intimacy, and exerted a decided influence on the subsequent history of both. The "Lyrical Ballads," published in 1798, were the fruit of this sylvan abode. In 1803 he married the lady to whom he was indebted for the uncommon share of serene felicity which marked his domestic life. In 1807 he published another volume of "Lyrical Ballads," and in 1814 the "Excursion," the poem by which he is best known to the majority of readers. His "River Duddon," a collection of descriptive sonnets, appeared in 1820, and was followed at intervals by other characteristic works. His collected writings, which have passed through a variety of editions both in England and this country form an immortal monument to his memory. [Tribune.

ONE MONTH LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

In one day, last week, three steamers from Chagres arrived at New York, bringing the mails from California, some two million five hundred thousand dollars in gold dust, and a large number of passengers.

On the Isthmus, the rainy season had not yet set in, and Chagres and Panama were still healthy. Many robberies were daily taking place. Mr. Orrin Walker, of Bath, Ohio, died at Panama on the 20th of April. Mr. James Bigelow, of Sherburne, Mass., died on the 6th ult.

The steamship California, which left San Francisco on the 1st of April, reached Panama on the 23d, with about $1,700,000 in gold dust on freight.

The arrivals at San Francisco from the States, both by way of the Isthmus and Cape Horn, were beginning to increase largely, and the consequences were favorably felt. A large number of immigrants had been landed from Sydney and the other penal settlements of England, and so great had become this evil, that the Legislature had taken the matter into consideration, and instructed their Judiciary Committee to bring in a bill to prevent this class from flooding the land, and requiring thereby additional police and prisons to prevent or punish the crimes which become more frequent with each new importation.

The news from the mines is tolerably favorable. One letter-writer says, he is not only satisfied that there will be found no diminution in the average product this season, in the placers worked last season, but that new placers will be opened more than sufficient in extent to employ vastly greater numbers than will be able to find transport to California the present year.

The same writer says that he had a peep at the mammoth twenty-three pound lump of gold recently dug up in the Sonorian Camp on the Stanislaus. There is no humbug about it, as the people will have evidence very shortly, as after a brief period of exhibition in San Francisco, it will be taken, with a great number of other splendid specimens, to the Atlantic States. This lump, worth intrinsically about $4,500, was bought by its owners for $10,000, and much larger sums have been offered for it.

About the first of March, there was a sad conflict between some whites and Indians of the Sonoma and Nappa valleys. It seems that an unprincipled class of whites attacked the peaceable Indians, slew a large number of both sexes, and forced the Indian population to flee into the mountains.

About the 1st of January, four men, returning from California to Oregon, were drowned at the mouth of the Columbia River, while attempting to land from the brig Forrest. The party consisted of Mark Ford, Esq., of Polk County, two young men by the name of Stephens, whose friends reside at Portland, and John Plummer of Oregon City. They had with them a large amount of specie and gold dust.

There has been a great rise in Willamette River, and nearly all the mills were swept away. Damage to the amount of $50,000 was done in Water-st., Oregon City. The Spectator calculates the entire loss at but little short of $300,000.

FEMALE MEDICAL COLLEGE OF PENNSYLVANIA.—The Legislature of Pennsylvania, at its present session, has chartered a College for the Medical Education of Females, to be located in Philadelphia. The act of incorporation confers on the institution all the privileges enjoyed by any other Medical school in that State So far as chartered immunities are concerned, it stands side by side with the University of Pennsylvania. The government of the institution will be vested in the Corporators and a Board of twenty-four Trustees, who have been appointed. The election of the Faculty has not yet taken place. The Trustees, in making a selection for the different Chairs, will be influenced by an especial regard to the moral as well as scientific qualifications of the candidates; and while, in point of medical ability, they design it to be second to no institution in the State, their aim will be to give it a higher moral character than is enjoyed by any other on the continent. It will be opened for the reception of pupils about the middle of October, the time the other Medical Colleges commence their Winter Sessions. Elizabeth Blackwell, M. D., is talked of for the Chair of Surgery, that being her favorite branch. This is the first, and of course, as yet, the only regularly organized Female Medical College in the world, and on that account must be a subject of lively interest. [Tribune.

SERIOUS FRESHET AND LOSS OF LIFE.—A most disastrous freshet occurred at Fitchburg, Mass., May 7, which was caused by the giving way of the large Reservoir at Ashburnham. Among the property swept away was a factory at Ashburnham, the cotton factory of J. Phillips, and the edge-tool factory of Alfred White, in Fitchburg; also two dwellings and a store, the inmates of which barely escaped with their lives.

The embankment of the Vermont and Massachusetts Railroad was so much damaged that the train could not proceed. Numerous bridges and dams were also carried away. In some parts of Fitchburg the water was 3 feet deep, and both women and children, including some sick, were obliged to be taken out of their dwellings. Mr. Samuel Roberts and a boy, who went out in a boat for the purpose of catching drift wood, were carried over the dam and drowned. The whole damage is stated to be from $50,000 to $75,000.

THE JEWS IN PIEDMONT.—A correspondent of the Jewish Chronicle, writing from Piedmont, under date of March 8, says:—

"You can hardly imagine the miraculous change which the social and political condition of the Jews has lately undergone. We enjoy true liberty; we are on a perfect equality with our Christian neighbors, with this difference only, that our rabbis are not paid their salaries by the State. Fortunately, however, our pastors can be paid by their own co-religionists, they having a budget of their own, and uniting all their interests in the cause of religion. At present the Jews of Piedmont do not occupy many public offices, because there are not many of us capable of filling them; but we have one Jew in the Chamber of Deputies, and a great number in the Municipal Council."

THE FAMILY OF MR. CALHOUN.—We learn from the N. O. Crescent, that Mr. Calhoun has left a wife, now in Charleston, and a family of four sons and two daughters. His first son, Andrew, is a wealthy planter in Alabama; Patrick, the second son, is in the army, and was an aid of Gen. Gaines; the third son, who was with him when he died, is a physician; the youngest son, William, is now an under graduate at college. One of his daughters, Anna Maria, is the wife of Mr. Clemson, our Chargé d'Affaires at Belgium, and the other has always remained at home, having long been afflicted with a spinal affection. The family are left in affluent circumstances, his property being estimated at $100,000. He married, early in life, his now bereaved partner, a lady of fortune, a cousin—bearing the same name which he has rendered illustrious.

AN AWFUL ACCIDENT.—A telegraphic dispatch to the Pittsburgh Journal, from St. Louis, states that an awful disaster took place on the evening of the first of May in that city. A large party, numbering 200, was gathered in the Laclede Saloon, when the floor gave way, and precipitated every person into the cellar, which was half filled with water. Mrs. John Beaky and Mrs. Chester W. Pomeroy were killed instantly. Miss Mary Abbott is so dangerously wounded that she was expected to die, and Mrs. Emanuel Black had both legs fractured, one of them in two places. Two killed outright and 49 wounded.

YELLOW FEVER AT RIO JANEIRO.—Letters from Rio Janeiro to April 2d have been received, which represent the yellow fever as raging there frightfully. One vessel loading for New York lost five of her crew in a short time. The ship Courier, which brought the letters, lost her first and second officers, a seaman, and a passenger. The steamer New World stopped there and lost 7 of her passengers and crew. The number of deaths at Rio in the months of January, February and March, is estimated at 10,000.

SUMMARY.

A dispatch dated Buffalo, Tuesday, May 7, says that the British steamers Dispatch and Commerce came in collision last night, near Port Maitland, on the Canada side of Lake Erie. The Commerce sunk in eight fathoms of water. She was transporting a portion of the Twenty-third Regiment of British troops, twenty-four of whom were drowned; also one officer and eleven passengers—thirty-eight in all.

The Charleston Courier announces the loss of the bark A. R. Taft, a Boston packet. She had a cargo of 300 tons of Ice on board, and while attempting to cross the Charleston Bar on Sunday afternoon, with a strong southerly wind blowing, and a high sea running, she went ashore on the Northern breakers. The masts were immediately cut away, and in one hour she bilged. The Captain and crew were with difficulty rescued.

A dispatch from St. Louis, dated May 7, says that the steamer Mustang, lying at the levee, caught fire that morning, and before any assistance could be obtained she was burned to the water's edge. She belonged to Stoke's Circus Company, and was not insured. Some of the company lost the greater portion of their effects by the disaster.

Wm. Pennington, who was apprehended in November last for robbing the U. S. mail between Fincastle and Abingdon, was convicted at the recent term of the U. S. District Court at Wytheville, Va., of the offense for which he was indicted, and was sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment in the Penitentiary at Washington City.

"The Merchants' Express," is the title of a new Company just formed in New York, intended to enter largely into the business of transporting merchandize from New York to various points North and West, to Chicago, Cincinnati, and Louisville inclusive. It will receive no money packages, but convey much heavier freight and at lower prices than the money expresses.

Newton Parker, Caroline G. Parker, and Lucia Green, of the Seneca Nation, residing at Tonawanda, passed through Rochester on Wednesday, on their way to the Normal School in Albany, at which, by a recent law, provision is made for the education of ten Indian pupils.

The N. O. Delta announces that another crevasse has occurred in the Parish of St. James, which was already two hundred feet wide and six deep. Several plantations had been submerged, and it was feared that it could not be stopped before immense damage had been done.

Late arrivals from Rio Janeiro represent the yellow fever as still raging there to an alarming extent. Thomas Jefferson Morgan, Esq., the American Secretary of Legation, has fallen a victim to it.

A dispatch from Savannah, Ga., dated May 6, says that Mr. Bullock, the late Cashier of the Savannah Bank, Georgia, who absconded some four months since, taking with him about $125,000 from that institution, has arrived in custody.

The rates of taxation, in the various cities of Massachusetts, last year, were as follows: Boston $6 50 per $1000; Salem, 6 40, Cambridge, 6 30; New Bedford, 5 42; Roxbury, 6 20; Charleston, 9 00; Lowell, 8 29; Worcester, 6 75.

It is said that the costs incurred by the Bishop of Exeter in the Gorham case amount to over $65,000.

By the arrival of the schooner Henry F. Baker, in 17 days from Aux Cayes, we learn that on the 19th of April the authorities of that place were mustering all the men they could get to go to Port-au-Prince, to join the black army, which was soon to leave to attack the Spanish part of the Island; and it was expected that there would soon be a desperate battle between the two contending armies.

We learn from the Albany Freeholder, of May 8, that Judge Hand has at last given his opinion in the important case of the People vs. Wm. P. Van Rensselaer and others, and the People vs. Stephen Van Rensselaer, and in both cases has decided in favor of the People, giving the defendants leave to amend within twenty days, with the payment of costs.

The Iowa City Republican states that two thousand California teams have passed that town on their way across the plains. Allowing three men to each team, they will make six thousand of the whole number of adventurers in search of gold.

No less than six ladies had their pockets picked in Boston on Friday last. All these robberies were perpetrated in stores, by female thieves, who are said to be numerous in Boston at the present time.

The steamboat Ironton collapsed two of her flues at Vanceburg, on the Big Sandy, Ky., a few days ago, killing three colored men. Several others were severely injured. The boat was badly damaged, and considerable property was destroyed.

A Convention of the Friends of Peace was held at Cleveland, Ohio, last week, and appointed J. R. Giddings and J. C. Vaughn as delegates to the World's Convention to be held at Frankfort.

In Pittsburg, on Wednesday, two sisters were brought before Mayor Barker, in a beastly state of intoxication. The Mayor sent for the man who sold the liquor, and imposed upon him two $5 fines.

At the late municipal election in Providence, the question of licensing to sell spirituous liquors was submitted to the people and decided in the negative, yeas 71, nays 142.

A great freshet occurred on the 9th at Exeter, N. H., which carried away the dam of the Manufacturing Co. and the Suspension Bridge; as also one or two buildings. The loss is estimated at $30,000.

The Methodist Episcopal Church South, are holding a General Conference at St. Louis, Missouri. The whole South except Florida is represented in Conference.

The packet-ship Albert Gallatin, which arrived the other day from Liverpool, brought 853 passengers. She had 6 deaths and 4 births on the passage.

Two street preachers, named Evans and Hill, have been arrested in New-Orleans for preaching incendiary sermons to slaves. They were committed for trial.

Dublin, Ireland, was visited, on April 25, by a storm of hail, thunder, and lightning, so violent as to be rarely equaled even by the tropical tempests.

On the 21st of April, the President of the French Republic entered on the 43d year of his age.

MARRIED,

In Alfred, N. Y., May 9th, 1850, by Eld. H. P. Burdick, Mr. DANIEL T. BURDICK, of Hartsville, to Miss ELIZABETH WOOD, of Alfred.

DIED,

In Waterford, Ct., April 26th, after an illness of eight days, GRACE DARROW, wife of Dea. Edmund Darrow, and daughter of Eld. Lester Rogers, deceased, aged 39 years, 3 months, and 26 days. The Christian character and death of sister Darrow deserve more than a passing notice. In early youth she became the subject of permanent religious impressions and renewing grace, and connected herself with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Waterford, Ct. Her temperament, naturally mild, was, under the influence of Christian love, rendered doubly amiable. Her piety was of that character that enlisted both her heart and hands in works of benevolence, virtue, and religion. Hers was not a life made up of flights of fancy or paroxysms of joy; but steady, tranquil, and uniform. With her, Christianity was the governing principle, as well in private as in the more public walks of life. Her death, no less than her life, manifested the sincerity of her faith, and the power of the Christian hope. Conscious from the first of her sickness, that she should not recover, she gave directions with singular minuteness for the arrangement of her domestic affairs; and, with a heavenly calmness and composure, she gave directions concerning her funeral and burial, assigning presents and dispensing messages as her strength would allow, to numerous friends whom she loved and by whom she wished to be remembered. While yet able to converse in a whisper, she requested those in attendance to sing that beautiful song of triumph, by the devout Stennett, "On Jordon's stormy banks I stand," &c., in which, though unable to join audibly, her spirit seemed sweetly to blend. In this heavenly state of mind she passed from earth to that blessed land where

> "Sickness and sorrow, pain and death,
> Are felt and feared no more."

A husband and two sons, with a large circle of relatives and friends, mourn her loss. A. B. B.

Near Marlboro, N. J., on the 28th of April, of consumption, Mrs. HANNAH HERITAGE, wife of Judah Heritage, aged forty-two years.

Western Association.

THE attention of the churches of the Seventh-day Baptist Western Association is called to the subject of their annual correspondence with that body. The plan of that correspondence has not been rendered sufficiently definite, the result of which has been, that we have failed to elicit from that source much that it would be desirable to bring before the Association respecting the labors and condition of the churches. It will be seen, by a reference to the Minutes of the last Session, that a Committee was appointed, "to prepare and present to the churches instructions in regard to matters deemed proper to be reported in their letters." The report of the Committee, with an amendment of the Association is published in the Minutes. It is very desirable that the letters presented at the approaching Anniversary, should, as far as practicable, conform to that plan. A fear that the subject might be overlooked by some of the churches has prompted the publication of this notice. T. E. BABCOCK, Cor. Sec.

Western Association.

THE Seventh-day Baptist Western Association will hold its Fifteenth Anniversary with the church in Friendship, Allegany Co., N. Y., commencing on the Fourth-day before the fourth Sabbath in June (19th day of the month,) 1850.

The churches are requested to "lay by them in store as God has prospered them," that it may be forwarded to the Annual Meeting for the purpose of liquidating the debt incurred by the Executive Board in the associational mission.

T. E. BABCOCK, Cor. Sec.

Christian Psalmody—Pocket Edition.

IN compliance with requests from various quarters, the publisher of the New Hymn Book—Christian Psalmody—has issued a second edition, on lighter paper and with smaller margins, by which the bulk and weight of the books are reduced about one-third, rendering them much more convenient for carrying in the pocket. The price is also reduced 12½ cents per copy. Those wishing books, of either edition, can now be supplied. Price of the larger edition from 75 cents to $1 50, according to the style of binding. Price of the smaller edition from 62½ cents to $1 00. Orders should be addressed to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Central Association.

THE next session of the Seventh-day Baptist Central Association will be held with the Church at Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in June, (5th day of the month,) 1850.

Eastern Association.

THE Annual Session of the Seventh day Baptist Eastern Association will be held, by the leave of Providence, with the church at Shiloh, Cumberland Co., N. J., on the fifth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, (23d day of the month,) commencing at 10 o'clock A. M. S. S. GRISWOLD, Cor. Sec.

Executive Committee—Eastern Association.

THE second semi-annual session of the Executive Committee of the Eastern Association will be held at Shiloh, N. J., on the fourth day of the week preceding the fourth Sabbath in May, at 10 o'clock A. M.

S. S. GRISWOLD, Clerk of Com.

History of Romanism.

In a large octavo volume of 750 pages, printed in large type, on the finest paper, and embellished with more than fifty engravings, chiefly from Original Designs, and bound in muslin, extra gilt. Price $3. THE HISTORY OF ROMANISM, from its earliest origin to the present time, by the Rev. John Dowling, D. D. A new and enlarged edition, with the Author's last additions, and a Supplement, containing a Sketch of the Life of Pope Pius IX., &c.

The best evidence of the intrinsic value of this remarkably popular work is to be seen in the fact that within the comparatively recent period of its first publication, the extraordinary number of 17,000 copies have been disposed of.

The following is an extract from a letter from the Rev. Dr. Giustiniani, the converted Roman Catholic priest, who is abundantly qualified by education, observation, and extensive study, to testify to the fidelity and value of a "History of Romanism."

"If the reader wishes to be acquainted with the errors of Romanism, he has only to open the pages of Dowling's History. If the reader is anxious to read an epitome of the history of the popes, their ambition; their intrigues; their avariciousness; their tyranny; their superstitions, and their mummeries, he can here find all proved and authenticated by the most accredited authors of the Church of Rome." L. GIUSTINIANI.

"It reflects much credit on the skill, patience, industry, and judgment of the author; he appears very justly to have conceived the idea of a work, which has long been regarded as a desideratum by a large portion of those interested in the great controversy with the Romanists."—Protestant Churchman.

"We regard it as a most important addition to the historical and religious literature of the age. Its contents form a rich storehouse of historical instruction, which should be placed within the reach of every family."—N. Y. Christian Intelligencer.

"It presents a succienct, but sufficiently full, history of the rise, progress, errors, cruelties, and present condition of the Papacy, authenticated by reference to the most undoubted historic sources, related in a spirited, engaging, and impressive style, and arranged in the most lucid manner. It abounds in facts and incidents, and, with its beautiful illustrations, is better adapted to furnish a vivid and impressive portraiture of Romanism as it is, than any other book we know of."—N. Y. Evang.

"The detached portions of Romish history which were every where to be met with, needed to be brought together and presented in systematic order. The reading of one book thus becomes better and cheaper than the reading of many."—Boston Recorder.

"It is written with the ready, popular eloquence, for which the well-known author is distinguished, and cannot fail to arrest attention to the controversy of which it treats. It is a strongly Protestant work, and exhibits the deformities of Popery with great power."—N. Y. Recorder.

Miscellaneous.

THE DYING CHILD'S REQUEST.

BY MRS. WHITAKER.

"Mother, don't let them carry me away down to the dark, cold church-yard, but bury me in the garden—in the garden, mother!"

O mother! in yon church-yard dread,
Lay not your little one,
Where marble tomb-stones, o'er the dead,
Are shining in the sun.

I know, dear mother! I must die,
But let me not go there;
In that sad place I fear to lie—
It is too cool and drear.

In our sweet garden I will rest,
Beneath the orange-tree,
The mocking-bird there builds her nest,
And she will sing o'er me.

And there, next spring, will roses, too,
Bloom red upon their stalks,
And hyacinth and heart's-ease blue
Flourish beside the walks.

The church-yard, mother, is too far,
So far from you and home—
It looks so wild when evening's star
Hangs in heaven's azure dome.

Then promise, mother, near to you
My little grave shall be,
Where the hyacinth and heart's-ease blue,
Grow by the orange tree.

The dying child could speak no more
When her last wish was told,
Death's paleness spread her visage o'er,
Her lips grew white and cold.

Her narrow tomb, amid the flowers,
Was in the garden made;
And oft that mother weeps for hours
Beneath the orange shade.

And when those flowrets bloom and blush,
With rich and varied dyes,
She thinks, and bids her sorrows hush—
"My flower blooms in the skies."

ADVENTURES OF AN ADVENTURER.

From the Providence Post.

We mentioned a short time since the return to this State of Mr. Stephen A. Wright, from California, after an absence of several years, in which he had succeeded in accumulating a snug little fortune of about half a million of dollars. Mr. Wright, whose home is in South Kingstown, called on us a few days since, and we enjoyed the pleasure of a familiar conversation with him of half an hour or so, in which he related to us some of the more important of his movements since he left Rhode Island, about 12 years ago.

Mr. Wright lived in South Kingstown, in comfortable circumstances, working at his trade, which was that of a blacksmith, down to the year 1838. In the Spring of that year, in company with his family, then small, and several friends, he started for the West; and after passing a short time in Illinois, without realizing the hopes he had set out with, pushed his way into Iowa Territory, and settled upon the Des Moines River. Here he stopped nearly two years, and then removed some 400 miles to Council Bluffs, a trading depot, where he followed his trade as blacksmith, in the employment of the Indian Department, or Bureau, of the United States Government.

At the end of six years of hard toil, he found himself in very tolerable circumstances—having accumulated about $25,000; but the impaired health of himself and his family warned him away; and after much deliberation he determined, in the Spring of 1846, to start for California, then unknown as a gold region, across the mountains. This purpose fixed in his mind, he made the necessary preparations, and was soon on his way, with no more important object than the recovery of his health, by the relaxation of his mind and muscles from the toils of his vocation, the inhaling of the mountain air, and the enjoyment of the inspiriting adventurous scenes which belong to mountain life. He started with four large wagons, sixteen yoke of oxen, four horses, eight cows, the ordinary cooking and camp utensils, and something more than an equipment of arms and ammunition. His wife, five children, and six enterprising young men, also bore him company.

The journey across the mountains was not one of pleasure wholly, but rather of almost constant peril. It occupied about five months. Several times their horses and cattle were stolen by marauding Indians, and were only recovered by the prompt and sometimes perilous efforts of the little party of adventurers. From all their fatigues and perils, however, they finally emerged on the 8th of October, 1846, arriving on that day in the country which has since been hailed as the land of overflowing wealth by so many of their countrymen.

At the time of their arrival in California, the attempt to plant the flag of the United States was first being made there, and Mr. Wright and his companions at once entered the service of their country. Mr. Wright freely advanced to the officers in command, the arms, ammunition and provisions he had with him, and still further accommodated them in their straitened circumstances with a loan of $5,000 in specie. He remained in the service six months, and shared in the adventures—bloodless, all of them—which marked the progress of our arms at that time.

Leaving the service now, he went to Monterey, and employed what capital he had in the erection of several houses. While he was there, the discovery of gold was announced, and people began to flock to the mines. He settled up his business and followed on, but did not remain long. He went to San Francisco, settled down, and commenced a career which resulted in making him independent for life. He commenced by building houses, of which he erected 25 in number—paying for much of his lumber at the rate of $600 per thousand feet. He also established, owned, and managed, in company with two others, the Miner's Bank, which proved an accommodation to business men, and a source of profit to himself.

On the approach of the rainy season, last Fall, he began to contemplate a return to his old home, as the only means of avoiding the complete destruction of his health. In accordance with this idea, he commenced settling up his affairs and disposing of his property; but so slowly did the work proceed, that in February he found it necessary to make great sacrifices in order to get clear of the unhealthy climate, and save his life. After withdrawing from the fire as many of his irons as possible, he finally disposed of what property yet remained to Messrs. Palmer, Cooke & Co., for the sum of three hundred thousand dollars. Taking with him his family and effects, he left San Francisco on the first of March, and reached his old home and friends in South Kingstown some two weeks ago, in tolerable health, and, as may be imagined, in fine spirits.

It would be idle to say that "fickle Fortune" has not smiled on our adventurer; and yet we feel safe in saying, that the source of most of his good luck may be traced to the man himself. His business habits have ever been prompt and straight-forward. No man that he ever owed has had occasion to ask him twice for the sum due; but on the contrary he has always met his engagements, whether involving much or little, with the utmost promptness, and has performed whatever duty was entrusted to him with the strictest fidelity. This characteristic has commended him to business men, and his natural acumen and pleasant social habits have done the rest.

A LAKE OF PITCH.

A correspondent of the Troy Whig, at Port of Spain, Trinidad, gives the following description of the Pitch Lake near La Brea, in that Island:—

"Imagine a black surface—a dreary, desolate black—spread out to the length of nearly half a mile, by an eighth in width, slightly varied by many fissures—some of them but a step across, some just too wide to jump, a few of these fissures filled with short shrubbery, but most of them mere ponds of water—of water clear as the mountain spring; and then imagine the whole bordered by a thick growth of trees, and the graceful bending bamboo, and this whole border thickly hanging with a profusion and variety of beautiful flowers—I know not the spot elsewhere where the eye can rest on such a profusion of flowers at a glance—and this may possibly convey some general idea of the peculiarity of a general view. For a closer inspection of the central part of the Lake, I was obliged to repeat my visit the next morning, securing the services of a negro to carray a plank to bridge the unjumpable fissures.

I then found spots where the surface of the pitch would gradually sink beneath my feet, so that in a few moments I stood in a cavity ankle deep. Not wishing to pitch deeper, I changed my position. In other places it seemed to be boiling below; for the surface around me was bubbling and simmering like that of a pot over the fire, while the gas thus disengaged was very strong. Though the surface of the Lake is generally too hard to receive a foot print—just hard enough to cut readily with an ax—there are places where the pitch oozes out in nearly a liquid form, so that one may dip it with a spoon. Some of the water fissures are quite deep, afford bathing, and are tolerably well stocked with fish.

Near the Lake I found a colored man engaged in boiling the pitch in several large boilers. A part of this he sells after boiling in a pure state, and to the rest he adds a portion of lime, when it is shipped as mastic. He says that he has cut from the lake a great many hundreds of tuns, but he never penetrates more than 10 or 12 inches below the surface, and the hole is always filled again within two days after the cutting. The supply is doubtless inexhaustible. But the pitch is not confined to the spot I have endeavored to describe. There are masses of it extending miles inland, and in several points it extends to the sea beach. At the last place it is cut out in large quantities to ship to this city and some of the islands, to use in building and flagging the streets. It is used by the steamers, being largely mixed with coal, for fuel, and is recently coming into use in the manufacture of petrolium. But whenever these cuttings are made on the Lake, inland, or on the beach, the quantity is almost immediately made good, and in some places gradually increases. The neighborhood is in motion, very slow, to be sure, yet there is, as it were, a growing up of the surface in spots, so that the houses in La Brea are found now and then to have a side or an end raised a few inches above its opposite."

THE HYDRO-ELECTRIC LIGHT.

After a period of six years employed in a series of experiments, conducted upon the most philosophical principles, and continued with indefatigable perseverance, Mr. Henry M. Paine, of Worcester, Mass., has completed his "Magneto-Electric Decomposer"—an ingenious apparatus for evolving hydrogen and oxygen gases from water by the agency of electricity, generated by mechanical means. The gases thus obtained may be used for light, heat, and motive power, and have already been practically tested for the two first named purposes on a considerable scale with wonderful effect.

At his residence, on Tuesday evening, April 23, Mr. Paine exhibited the operations of his invention to a number of gentlemen in Boston and Worcester, some of whom have had considerable experience in the gas business, and others have taken great interest in plans and projects having in view the production of artificial light at cheaper rates than it can be furnished by the means hitherto employed by gas manufacturers. Mr. Paine had his house brilliantly lighted up, although he used only one small burner for each room. The light was exceedingly strong and white, and so pure that the most delicate shades of blue and green in some colored prints could be instantly distinguished at a distance of several feet from the burner (a common gas-burner,) which was supplied with gas from a pipe, whose diameter did not exceed one quarter of an inch.

At the same time that the light was being exibited, the mode of using the gas for heating was also shown. A small jet of pure hydrogen, between two circular plates of iron, raised a few inches from the floor, was lighted, and in a few minutes an equal and genial heat was diffused throughout the apartment. Thus the astonished party had the light and heat together, supplied from the same source below, and their expressions of admiration were unbounded; nor were they abated when they were led down into the cellar to examine the exceedingly small machine by which the gas was made. The box containing it was about 18 inches square and 8 in depth. We cannot give the details of the interior of the machine, but will simply state that, as its name indicates, it evolves magneto-electricity by purely mechanical action. From the above-mentioned box there ran flat copper wires into the decomposing jar, which was about two feet in hight and six or eight inches in diameter, and partly filled with water; in this jar, by the action of the electricity just spoken of, pure hydrogen gas alone was formed from the water, whence it passed into two gasometers or reservoirs, about the size of a barrel each. The pole at which oxygen gas is liberated, on this occasion passed into the ground, so that hydrogen only was evolved by the action of the machine. The process of carbonizing the hydrogen for illumination is exceedingly simple, and was open to view: it is very cheap, so much so that Mr. Payne says that the cost of carbonizing the gas he has burned in his house in three burners every evening for a week, has not yet amounted to one cent. The hydrogen is used for the general purposes of light and heat, and the oxygen can also be secured in a second jar, and may be used with hydrogen to produce the "calcium light" for light-houses.

Mr. Paine has also discovered a principle by which he can regulate the quantity of electricity to be discharged into the composing jar. A large machine has recently been perfected by Mr. Paine, of sufficient power to supply three thousand burners with gas; it is set up in the Worcester Exchange, and only occupies a space of three feet square by six in hight.

One cubic foot of water will make 2,100 feet of gas, and a weight of 67 lbs. falling nine feet in an hour will make from this larger machine 1,000 feet of gas. The apparatus can be applied to gas works of any kind, and be used with any of the gas fixtures at present in fashion, [Boston Post.

INOCULATION FOR SMALL POX.

Dr. Beck of Albany states that the practice of inoculation for the Small Pox was first introduced into this country in 1721; and it is to a clergyman, Rev. Cotton Mather, that the honor belongs of having first recommended it. During that year the Small-Pox raged in Boston with unparalleled fury and fatality. Mr. M. having read in the Transactions of the Royal Society of London an account of a new mode of mitigating the violence of the disease by inoculation, as practiced in Turkey, communicated it to the physicians of the place, and urged their adoption of it. With the exception of one individual, it was unanimously opposed by the Faculty. That individual was Dr. Zabdial Boylston, who, with the confidence of an honest and enlightened mind, commenced his operations upon his own children and servants. The controversies which ensued were of the most ferocious and disreputable character. Such was the tempest of popular indignation raised against the practice, that both Mather and Dr. Boylston were in danger of losing their lives! Passion and prejudice on the one side, however, were met by decision and success on the other; and inoculation, defended by almost all the clergy—many of whom preached and wrote in its defense—soon triumphed over opposition, and became prevalent. It is gratifying to know, that although opposed and slandered at home, Dr. B. was appreciated abroad. In 1725 he visited England, and was received with the highest favor and attention by the most distinguished characters in the nation, and even by Royalty itself. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, being the first instance in which that honor was conferred upon an American. [Tribune.

NORMAN SCENERY.

In Normandy, the land is not inclosed. No hedges, fences, or walks, break the continuity of the surface, but vast tracts spread in every direction, divided into plots and squares, of various sizes and forms, by the varieties of cultivation, by a vast carpet of an irregular and tesselated pattern, and variegated in the color by a thousand hues of yellow and green. Here and there vast forests extend, where countless thousands of trees, although ancient and venerable in form, stand in rows mathematically arranged as they were planted centuries ago. These are royal demesnes, hunting grounds, and parks, connected with the country palaces of the kings or chateaux of the ancient nobility. The cultivators of the soil live not as in America, in little farm houses built on the roadsides, and dotting the slopes of hills, but in compact villages, consisting of ancient dwellings of brick or stone, densely packed together along the single street, from which they issue in picturesque dresses, men and women together, every morning, to go miles, perhaps, to the scenes of their daily toil. Except these villages and the occasional appearance of an ancient chateau, no habitations are seen. The country seems a vast solitude, teeming every where with fertility and beauty. The roads which traverse these scenes are magnificent avenues, broad, straight, and continuing many miles an undeviating course over the undulations of the land, nothing to separate the expanse of cultivation on either hand but rows of ancient and venerable trees. Between these rows of trees the traveler sees an interminable vista, extending both before and behind him. In England the public roads wind beautifully between walls overhung with shrubbery, or hedge rows, with stiles or gateways here and there, revealing hamlets or cottages, which appear in rapid and endless succession, as the road meanders like a rivulet, between its beautiful banks. In a word, the public highway in England is beautiful; in France it is grand. [Abbot.

LEATHER BUSINESS OF SALEM, MASS.

A table which the Essex Co. Freeman has been able to make, by the assistance of several gentlemen engaged in the business, shows the number of establishments to be as follows: Tanners' 34; Curriers' 35; Tanners' and Curriers' 15; Leather and Morocco Dressers' and Colorers' 2; total 85. The men employed in these establishments number 550. The number of vats used for tanning is 4,051.

The value of leather tanned and curried the last year is estimated at $869,047 70.

The wages of the men employed will probably average 7 shillings per day, which gives an amount paid for labor annually of $210,600.

It is reckoned that during the past year 12,000 cords of bark have been used, nearly all of which was brought by water from the eastward.

About 500 cords have come from the interior of New Hampshire over the inland railroads connecting with the Essex road. If we calculate the cost of bark at $7 a cord, it will give the large expense for bark of $84,000.

The number of hides used may be set at 200,000, which, at a valuation of $2 a hide, would give $400,000.

These facts give some idea of the great extent of the leather business in Salem.

A EUROPEAN REVOLUTIONIST.—On Sunday evening, says the N. Y. Tribune, Mr. Fenner von Fenneberg, a well known German democrat, arrived in this city after a safe passage across the Atlantic. Of the romance of Revolution, few men within the past two eventful years have had a larger experience than he. He was deeply implicated in the Vienna insurrection of October 1848, and was among those for whose persons dead or alive Prince Windischgratz offered a reward after he had got possession of the city. Our hero was in the meantime snugly hidden in the house of a friend, meditating the means of escape from circumstances so inconvenient. The first thing was to divest himself of the noble and manly beard by which he could not fail to be recognized, and to procure suitable garments for his purpose. But finding that it was dangerous to try to get out of the city in the character of a servant, or cab driver, or other similar function, he determined to depart in a still humbler capacity. Accordingly, a box was procured in which he had himself duly packed as merchandise, loaded upon a wagon, and directed to a democratic merchant of his acquaintance, some ten or twelve miles beyond the walls. In this shape he passed the lines and was duly delivered into the hands of his friend. From there he continued his journey on foot to Bavaria and the Rhine. He was subsequently engaged in the revolution of last year in Baden.

THE CALIFORNIA EMIGRANTS.—The steamer El Paso arrived at St. Louis recently from the Missouri River. She had on board a number of persons who had started with the intention of crossing the Plains to California, but who were disheartened by the slow approach of Spring, and the total absence of grass for the support of their animals—and without which it was useless to undertake the journey. The situation of the emigrants is represented as any thing but comfortable. Those who started from the towns on the river with what was supposed to be a sufficient amount of provender to last until the grass appeared, had exhausted their stock, and returned to the settlements. At Weston, and in the neighborhood, there were from 2,000 to 3,000 emigrants anxiously waiting the time for their departure; at St. Joseph, there were from 8,000 to 10,000 persons; and at Independence and other points, the number must be very great. There is reason to suppose, from the unpropitious state of the weather, that many will abandon the enterprise altogether, rather than remain inactive until the grass shall grow. The reports in regard to the health of the emigrants differ essentially—some affirming that there is much sickness among them, and others denying it in positive terms.

STEAM POWER IN AGRICULTURE.—Great interest is felt in England, in behalf of sundry projects for the employment of steam power as a substitute for horses in agriculture. Mr. Mechi, the razor-strop man, has lectured on the subject, giving the results of his own experience as a farmer, first with six horses, and then with a steam engine of six horse power. His machinery cost £410, including threshing machine, flouring mill, chaff-cutter, grindstone, pump, seed-crusher, and the requisite gearing; the expense per day was 16*s.* 8*d.*, while the work done was worth 28*s.*, although run but ten hours. He had threshed, dressed, and sacked 30 quarters (240 bushels) of wheat in eight hours. His machine finds ample employment on a farm of 170 acres. One effect is to diminish the proportion of grass land, while increasing the quantity of live stock, and, of course, the supply of manure. [Independent.

THE ISTHMUS GOLD-DUST ROBBERS.—Scarcely a steamer leaves this port for Chagres but what conveys some expert rogues, who take up their quarters at Chagres or Panama, on the look-out for the returning gold diggers, laden with the precious dust, the harvest of their toils at the mines. These rogues soon become acquainted with the men, and travel from Panama to Chagres in company, taking advantage of every opportunity to rob them, and if such opportunity should not offer, the thief will continue his route to New York, and then, by the aid of the "stool pigeons," who are in daily correspondence with these rogues, the trunk of the gold digger is thus plundered of its treasure, by their combined movements. A band of these very robbers are now actually in successful operation, aided by men who call themselves respectable in this city, who are known privately to meet and converse with the robbers at the domicils of the "stool pigeons."

A HORSE'S OPINION OF A PLANK ROAD.—The North Carolinian tells the following anecdote of an old farmer of that region, who had tried the plank road: He was at first much opposed to the plank road, and thought it would be a waste of money to build it. But he came to Fayetteville with his wagon and produce, and drove on it some miles. When he got back to Chatham, our merchant friend asked him if he had seen the plank road? "Yes," he said, "he had seen it." "Well, did you drive on it?" "Yes." "Well, don't you think you can carry four times as much weight on it, with your four-horse team, as on a common road?" "Oh, yes," says he, "it is first-rate; and it's a fact, that when the wagon got to the end of the planks, and struck the heavy dirt road, every horse stopped and looked round!"

SUPERIORITY OF NATURE OVER ART.—Cecco maintained that nature was more potent than art, while Dante asserted the contrary. In proof of this principle, the great Italian bard referred to his cat, which, by repeated practice, he had taught to hold a candle in its paw, while he supped or read. Cecco, who came prepared for his purpose, desired to witness the experiment. When Dante's cat was performing its part, Cecco lifted the cover of a pot which he had filled with mice. The creature of art instantly showed the weakness of a talent acquired, and, dropping the candle, flew on the mice with all its instinctive propensity. Dante instantly confessed that the occult principle of native faculties had the superiority.

DR. GUTZLAFF IN ENGLAND.—In the large room of the Manchester Exchange, recently, Dr. Gutzlaff gave some account of the Christian Union which has been formed in the Celestial Empire. He said, during the last few years of his stay in China, prayer-meetings had been established among the natives. The emperor had given full liberty for all to follow their own religion without control, and, therefore, various places of Christian worship had been erected. Concerning the Bible, the emperor said, "This book teaches virtue, let it be circulated." A few of the Christian natives had originated the association called the "Chinese Christian Union," with the view of spreading Christianity among their countrymen. The number gradually increased, and men of respectability were delegated from various provinces to the union, to learn the truths which they were propagating, in order that they might explain the principles of Christianity in their localities. The teachers numbered about a hundred and forty, and in their travels they held small assemblies, and endeavored to disseminate Christianity by personal efforts; by circulating the New Testament, fourteen editions of which had been printed; and by distributing tracts. An association to assist them had been formed in London, and he trusted a branch of that association would be established in Manchester.

PIGEONS ROOSTING.—Letters from Indiana complain that some of the pigeon-roosts cover the forests for miles, destroying the timber. A letter from Laurel says:

"I am completely worn down. The pigeons are roosting all through our woods, and the roost extends for miles. Our neighbors and ourselves have, for several nights, had to build large fires and keep up reports of fire-arms to scare them off. While I write, within a quarter of a mile, there are thirty guns firing. The pigeons come in such large quantities as to destroy a great deal of timber, break limbs off large trees, and even tear up some by the roots. The woods are covered with dead pigeons, and the hogs are getting fat on them. Our old friend Hendrick killed fifty at four shots."

NUMBER OF SLAVEHOLDERS.—In Kentucky, the tax returns show an average 22 slaves to each slaveholder, and it is well known that slaves are fewer on Kentucky farms than they are upon the large cotton and sugar plantations of the more southern States, where the great planters hold from 100 to 2,000 slaves. The whole number of slaves, men, women and children, was by the last census, 2,487,611. This number divided by 22, gives 113,077 as the sum total of the slaveholders in the United States, and even this is an exaggerated estimate.

Variety.

Small plants may be neatly and safely transplanted from borders, &c., by making narrow trenches round them, and filling such trenches with plaster of paris, mixed with water to the consistence of thick cream. This quickly becomes hard, or sets, and forms a pot, in which the plant may be lifted without disturbing the roots. With a little ingenuity, the soil and roots may be so encompassed with the same material, as greatly to facilitate the safe removal of a choice plant to any reasonable distance.

In a recent address, Dr. Adler, the chief rabbi, said: "Divine knowledge and profane scientific knowledge, are not advantages which are opposed to one another; they are not like two Eastern wives, who are jealous of each other; they are a couple of sisters, going hand in hand; they are, as the Bible says, 'two roes that are twins;' they supply, support, and complete each other."

In the Vice-Chancellor's Court, on Tuesday week, was concluded the case of Trant vs. Deffel—a suit commenced seventy years ago, to ascertain the rights of certain persons under the will of a gentleman named Robert Brent, who died in 1693. One observes with as much surprise as satisfaction, that there is still sufficient property left to afford basis for directions that certain of the costs should be paid out of the general estate.

If any one has an orchard that has not been grafted, let him scrape off the old bark and put in the plow, and then put in the scions, and be sure and keep down the young shoots, and he will find that he will receive great interest on the capital invested, by waiting a few years.

The Washington Globe says, that during the first session of the last Congress we printed about 1,396,000 pages of speeches of members in pamphlet form, and in the same proportion at the second or short session, and the number we shall print this session will probably not fall short of one million five hundred thousand copies."

A memoir of Rev. David Rice, the pioneer preacher of Kentucky, written by Rev. Dr. N. L. Rice, of Cincinnati, mentions as an evidence of the excited state of the public mind at that early day for the acquisition of new lands in the West, that Mr. Rice on his return home passed four thousand emigrants on the road to Kentucky.

"Why are you so melancholy?" said the Duke of Marlborough to a soldier, after the battle of Blenheim. "I am thinking," replied the soldier, "how much blood I have shed for a sixpence."

Active preparations are now in progress for holding, in London, about the end of May or beginning of June, 1850, a bazaar, in aid of the funds of the League of Brotherhood, and also to welcome Elihu Burritt on his return to England from his native country.

It is calculated that the value of exports to California, from all the States on this side of the Rocky Mountains, amounts to fifty millions—the imports of gold dust, in payment, to fifteen millions—balance yet due, thirty-five millions.

Dr. Mantell, at a recent meeting of the Geological Society, London, exhibited remains of the extinct colossal birds of New Zealand. The legs and feet of the Dinormis Giganteus were of the number—a bird which stood upward of three yards high!

The last and worst conundrum is, "What is the difference between a stubborn horse and a postage stamp?" You lick one with a stick, and stick the other with a lick!

New York and Boston Steamboats.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN NEW YORK AND BOSTON, via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage! The steamers C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence, and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, (Sundays excepted,) from pier 2 North River, first wharf above Battery Place, at 5 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M., or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. The C. Vanderbilt will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The Commodore will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

New York and Erie Railroad.

THE Trains on the Erie Railroad run as follows, (Sundays excepted):—Morning Train for Elmira, Corning, and intermediate places, leaves the pier foot of Duane-st. daily at 7 A. M., arriving the same evening. Evening Train for Elmira, Corning, Jefferson, Geneva, Rochester, Buffalo, and the intermediate places, leaves at 4 P. M., arriving at Buffalo the next evening. Fare to Geneva, $6 50; to Rochester, $8 15; to Buffalo, $10 35. Passengers for Ithaca and Cayuga Lake take the cars of the Cayuga and Susquehannah R. R. at Owego. Passengers for Tioga and Lycoming counties, Pa., take the cars of the Corning and Blossburg R. R. at Corning. A Way Train leaves Port Jervis for New York, at 6 A. M. and returns at 4 P. M.

JAMES P. KIRKWOOD, Superintendent.

Eclectic Magazine for the Year 1850.

THE Eclectic Magazine of Foreign Literature, Science, and Art; aims to present to its readers a complete survey of the whole field of British Periodical Literature, comprising the selections of all the articles of the most able and celebrated Reveiws, Magazines, and Journals, which have any interest or value to American readers. It not only contains the articles which are desirable in those periodicals reprinted in this country, but in the far greater variety of able and popular Reveiws, Magazines, &c., which form so splendid an element of the literature of the day, and which are inaccessible to the mass of American readers, except by some such medium as the Eclectic Magazine. By omitting what is merely local in interest or feeble in character, the ample size of the Eclectic Magazine enables the editor to embody all that is really desirable in the whole range of journalism. As only the best articles of each periodical are selected, it is evident that the contents of the Eclectic Magazine must be superior to those of any one, however great or celebrated; and, taken together, must constitute a more desirable and able body of periodical literature than can be found elsewhere in the same compass.

Each number is embellished with a suberb steel engraving, from the well-known burin of Mr. Sartain, of subjects of elevated character and general interest, including portraits of distinguished living authors and celebrities, making twelve rich and elegant prints in a year.

TERMS.

The Eclectic Magazine is issued on the first of every month, in numbers of 144 large 8vo. pages each, on fine paper, making three volumes a year, with title-pages and indexes. Price $5 per year, if paid strictly in advance—otherwise invariably $6.

The work will be promptly sent to any one who will send us $5 by mail, or otherwise, post-paid. Address W. H. BIDWELL, Editor and Proprietor, 120 Nassau-street, New York.

☞ The Magazine above described fully sustains the character given to it in the prospectus, and is justly regarded as the best work of the kind to be had. We shall be happy to forward the subscription of any of our friends who may find it more convenient to communicate with us than with the publisher.

Sabbath Tracts.

The American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its Depository, No. 9 Spruce st., N. Y., viz:—

No. 1—Reasons for introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment to the consideration of the Christian Public. 28 pp.

No. 2—Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 52 pp.

No. 3—Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 28 pp.

No. 4—The Sabbath and Lord's Day—A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 52 pp.

No. 5—A Christian Caveat to the Old and New Sabbatarians. 4 pp.

No. 6—Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.

No. 7—Thirty-six Plain Questions, presenting the main points in the Controversy; A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian; Counterfeit Coin. 8 pp.

No. 8—The Sabbath Controversy—The True Issue. 4 pp.

No. 9—The Fourth Commandment—False Exposition. 4 pp.

No. 10—The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed. 16 pp.

No. 11—Religious Liberty Endangered by Legislative Enactments. 16 pp.

No. 12—Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, to which attention is invited:—

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. First printed in London, in 1724; reprinted at Stonington, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 168 pages.

The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 60 pp.

An Appeal for the Restoration of the Lord's Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 24 pp.

Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15 pages for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to GEORGE B. UTTER, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

OUR CHINA MISSION.

It is somewhat humiliating to us to know, that our foreign mission has been so poorly sustained as the following letter from Bro. Carpenter sets forth. It is certainly no credit to a denomination embracing six thousand communicants, or more, many of whom are living in affluence, and most of them lacking for none of the comforts of life. But in the hope that it may awaken a deeper interest in the cause, we give the letter as it comes to the Board. A portion of it was given under our editorial head last week, which is omitted here. Only think of a missionary being eight months without a teacher more than half the time! Awake, brethren, awake!

Cor. Sec.

Shanghai, Nov. 1, 1849.

To the Executive Board of the S. D. B. Missionary Society:—

Whatever may be said of the climate of this place, the present has been a sickly season in Shanghai, Ningpo, and the surrounding country. Fevers have been common, sometimes connected with ague, sometimes not. There has been an unusual number of cases of mortality, both among natives and foreigners. The London Mission have lost two of their brightest ornaments—Rev. Mr. Southwell and Mrs. Wylie. The great quantity of rain during the spring and former part of the summer is supposed to have been the cause of sickness. Large tracts of country west of this have been flooded. But in the midst of sickness and death, our number is preserved entire, having thus far escaped both. Thanks be to God. Among others, my teacher has been sick nearly half of the time since I engaged him, and is not yet recovered. He lives in a village called Fa Hwo, thirteen lee west of this. On the 11th ult., in company with Bro. W. and Le-Chong, (Foo Quay,) I went to see him. He occupies the largest house in the village. Some of the family were formerly officers of government, and lived in affluence. The case is different now, or he would not seek employment with a foreigner. Although in poverty, he is far enough from the happy state of the poor in spirit. We were politely received, and even invited to his bed-side. His mother, a superior looking woman, thanked us kindly for our visit. I endeavored to refresh the mind of this man with some of the truths of religion which were particularly applicable to his case. To all this he assented; but, alas! he is yet a poor, blind, depraved heathen, although a brilliant scholar. When I first engaged this man, I spoke of going to his place some time, to which he, with true Chinese shyness, objected, as a thing improper. But it has been brought about with the greatest ease.

In regard to my labors, I have but little to say. Although I have had a teacher but about half of the time since Chung died, which was Feb. 11, I have been able to employ my time principally in the study of the language. If I could have a teacher regularly six hours each day, I should hope to make more rapid progress than is possible otherwise to do. But I shall endeavor to do what I can with such advantages as shall be afforded me. I have commenced the reading of the Chinese classics. But little can be done, however, in that line, without a teacher. We have kept up a regular service twice each Sabbath, besides a prayer-meeting in the Chinese, in which Bro. W.'s teacher and Le-Chong unite with us. The number of attendants is not large. Some individuals have dropped off, who, for a time, attended quite frequently. The great deceiver is doubtless at work, and will not suffer a single conquest to be made without a struggle. We have to fight for every inch of ground we gain. The average attendance is not much more than a dozen. But we are thankful for so many. In connection with what is especially the gospel message, which we endeavor to keep in view in every discourse, we take some pains to instruct them in Scripture history, and thus illustrate the character and attributes of the God of whom they are so wofully ignorant.

I have the satisfaction of informing you that our cook, Le-Chong, has received strength from above (as we trust) to own Christ before men. Once before he had made up his mind to go forward in baptism, but the enemy obtained a temporary advantage over him, by suggesting to him that if he should separate himself from the world, and unite with the people of the true God, his relatives would disown him, and his family would come to want. He was not left long, however, under this temptation. ach instruction was given as seemed to be emanded, and the battle was short. He ound no peace until he saw and confessed at he had “provoked to anger the true od” (as he said) in distrusting his provintial care. A few weeks afterward, on [illegible] 20th of October, being Sabbath, it was y happiness to wait upon this disciple in e ordinance of baptism. The place select[illegible] was just outside the great south gate. e rite was performed in the presence of e scores of Chinamen. In the evening e was more than an ordinary attendance our meeting, when, after the discourse, candidate was requested to come forward, , as he stood before the congregation in capacity of a disciple of Jesus, a brief ount was given of his conviction and conversion to Christianity. The necessity and importance of the Holy Spirit's influence was insisted on, followed by prayer and the imposition of hands, and afterwards the right hand of fellowship was extended to him. The congregation was orderly and attentive. Pray for this disciple, that he may be kept from the evil that is in the world, grow in grace, and be presented faultless before the throne of our God with exceeding joy.

I frequently find opportunity to introduce religious conversation in company with individuals, but have met with no marked encouragement that would interest you. To insure a good result it seems desirable to give instruction to the same individual daily, or at least frequently. Our acquaintance with the people is gradually extending. But this does not convert their souls. It is the work of one life-time to master the language, and it is the work of another life-time to mingle with the people enough to instruct and exhort them with all long suffering and doctrine. How one man, in half a life-time, is to accomplish all this, I know not, unless he be specially sustained by the mighty power of God. O for that faith that lifts up the soul to God, brings eternity near, and lays hold upon the promises of Him who is faithful and true. Often we are inclined to make the exclamation of one more worthy than we are, “Who hath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?” But in the morning we must sow the seed, and in the evening withhold not our hand.

On the 1st of Oct., I saw a poor man lying by the side of the Tong-zen-dong, (Hall of Universal Benevolence,) apparently much exhausted by hunger, or disease, or both There was a peculiar aspect which indicated that he was already very near if not passing through the valley of the shadow of death. I addressed him. He soon arose upon his feet, without a rag of clothing upon his ghastly frame. He appeared unable to speak, but reached out his hand to receive a few cash offered him, with the request to go and buy food. The next morning his lifeless body lay directly across the street a hundred rods to the north of the Tong-zen-dong. The tender mercy of the Chinese provides no poor-house for the friendless. They die by the way-side. After the struggles of life are over, charity (?) provides for them a decent burial. The case I have mentioned is only a sample of what may be seen at this season of the year almost every day.

Rev. Mr. Johnson, from Foo-Chou, has recently been in Shanghai on a visit. He represents the climate of Foo-Chou as less subject to induce fever and ague than that of Shanghai or Ningpo. Building timber is much cheaper than it is here. But the inhabitants are not so well disposed towards foreigners. There are eight missionaries on the ground, but no conversions yet. There are no stationary foreign merchants there. But the opium clippers visit the place. Their letter correspondence is carried on per overland by way of Amoy.

* * * * *

The two last mails are daily expected. The ship having the September mail, we hear, put in at Amoy on account of the sickness of the Captain. A steamer is now due with the October mail. If neither of these contains a remittance for us, we shall be in a bad condition. But it will be a discipline which we hope will do us good. If we could know beforehand about what we might expect, we could shape our course accordingly. We could at least dismiss our teachers entirely, and our workmen too, if necessary. And this we will do, so soon as we shall learn that the bare maintaining of existence will accomplish the object of our mission to China. It is very probable that the vessel having the September mail, which has put in at Amoy, has something for us. But we know not. This much I know, that I have deprived myself and the cause of the benefit of a teacher about half of the time for the last eight months, to avoid the embarrassment of being out of funds; and now for the last two months my health has been quite good, but I have not felt at liberty to call in another teacher in the absence of my sick one. It is probable that many of our brethren at home have but little idea of what is absolutely essential to the vigorous prosecution of our work. We are disposed to praise them for doing so well; for they have certainly done much. But it is possible we have undertaken a work that is too hard for us. For a family, however small, to live in this country without as much as one native to do all kinds of work, would be incompatible with missionary labor to any considerable extent; and to learn this most difficult of languages without a teacher, would be equally difficult. To obtain a dwelling that will accommodate two families and furnish a chapel, cheaper than the one we occupy, would also, in our opinion, be impossible, unless we build it ourselves. In what respect we can make any retrenchment in our expenses, without serious embarrassment to our work, I can hardly say. But we leave all in the hands of God, casting our care upon Him, knowing that he careth for us. We know that our brethren also care for us. Their care has abounded towards us far beyond our deserving. We were instructed, a good while ago, in case we were insufficiently sustained, to speak out plainly. But we would gladly avoid it if the good of the cause did not seem to demand it. Although we speak plainly, we do not wish to speak impatiently. We speak not on our own behalf, for we have little fear of being reduced to the necessity of begging our daily bread, except from the hands of Him who feeds the ravens. But for the cause of God we plead. We ask that the bread of life may be given to these wretched, starving poor. We ask for means to make known to them the character and attributes of the true God, their own lost and ruined condition, and the only way of salvation through Jesus Christ. We ask for means to prosecute our work, not hesitatingly and inefficiently, but with a vigor and energy that shall be, in some degree, commensurate with the necessities of those who are already lost, and are fast passing on beyond the reach of recovery.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS OF A TOURIST.

On board Packet-ship Garrick,
At Sea, Feb. 28, 1850.

Eighteen days ago, at nightfall, we saw the tops of the Neversink Highlands receding from view, as we journeyed eastward on our sluggish way. The next morning every thing of home had disappeared, and we were alone, except a ship bound for California running along about six miles to the leeward of us. The wind was light from the south-west, and continued so for three days, at the end of which we were just off Nantucket Shoals, some two hundred miles on our way.

I was disappointed in my preconceived ideas of the sea. I experienced no feeling of wonder or awe; and as to the idea of vastness—of overwhelming magnitude—so often alluded to, I must say, I consider it all imagination. It looks as any big fish-pond might look, nor did it look any larger when a fresh breeze of a couple of days had created a heavy swell. It was small—very small. Any plain country, of a few miles in extent, bounded by hills, conveys far grander ideas.

On the fourth day, a breeze sprung up from the south-east, and by night we had considerable swell, and were running along very briskly. The breeze continuing fresh, the ship rolled heavily; but I had a leeward state-room, and was in no danger of being rolled out. On the sixth day out, the wind had increased to a gale, and we were running along under close-reefed topsails at the rate of nine or ten knots. We now observed the waters lit with phosphorescent animalculæ of some kind, which appeared in vast shoals, and saw also the beautiful effect called by the sailors “beaming”—an illumination, apparently, of the water itself, where it breaks into foam. It is a pearly lustre, lighting faintly the sides of the ship, as singular as beautiful. Since that we have had a succession of favorable winds, and have made from 200 to 250 miles per day.

Capt. Eldridge is a very pleasant, generous man, humorous and gentlemanly in his manners. I can recommend his ship to the patronage of hitherward traveling friends. He understands his business, and seems to sleep with one eye and ear open.

This is one of the most beautiful days I ever beheld. There is a three-knot breeze from the southward, occasionally freshening to a four or five knot—the sky almost cloudless, and the air as warm as on a quiet sunlit spring day. I laid me down upon the deck of the wheel-house, and looked up into the sky, so deep blue that it was almost black by the white sails towering in a pyramid over me. The ship hardly careened, and there was no swell, while the wake bubbled and boiled as sluggishly as though it were enjoying the sweet idleness of the day. It seemed a very luxury to breathe in such a place—so quiet. The sailors in the rigging worked leisurely, and every sound fell on the ear with a distinctness that seemed like a concentrated silence. The sea-gulls, too, sailed around, with scarcely a motiion of their pinions, their white breasts and silver-fringed wings glistening in the sun, and turning their dove-like heads to get a better view of me, with a kind of naivete indescribably charming.

Liverpool, March 2d.—Here at last—on terra firma, comparatively speaking—twenty days and a few hours from New York, having arrived off Hollyhead early on the twenty-first day. We were in the longitude of Cape Clear the day before. Rounding the head, we came to off Point Linas, and waited for a pilot. The moon was full, but the sky was filled with rifted clouds, which had arisen with the wind, now a gale, and a most exciting one too. The sailors were aloft reefing topsails, and the wind blowing so that it was almost impossible to convey an order to them. Now and then the moon would break through, and then all eyes were directed in search of the pilot-boat. I was fortunate enough to put mine to some use by first seeing it. Then we lost it again; but it soon reäppeared to windward, bearing down before us—a little one-masted boat, of a singular rig, carrying two jibs and an immense mainsail. We got our pilot on board, and he having ordered the courses to be furled, the larboard watch and supernumeraries were ordered below, or rather had permission to retire. Next morning at 7 o'clock I went on deck, and found it perfectly calm, and misty. The headland, off which we lay to the night before, was in sight, and the bay was covered with small and large craft of every description. Just ahead was the Albert Gallatin—which sailed from New York on the same day that we did, or one after—under full sail, and signals flying for a steamer. There was a tug in the distance, but she did not get to us, being taken by a ship about five miles farther up the bay. In a couple of hours the breeze freshened, and we tacked, and on this tack got to windward of the Gallatin, and the Captain made every exertion to get so far inside of her as to take the first tug. About noon a smoke hove in sight, and, soon after, a steamer under it; and then the Captain's fever began to run high. We made a short log of this tack, as on the other we could run almost directly up the bay; and the breeze strengthening, we ran away from the Gallatin, she being, by the time the steamer reached us, two or three miles on our lee quarter. The tug steered directly for us, but so great was the Captain's anxiety, that he was quite uneasy lest she should go to the Gallatin. “Pilot,” said he, “do n't you think she'll pass us?” “Oh no,” said the pilot, “she'll not pass us.” Again and again the Captain repeated his interrogatory, occasionally taking a look at her through the glass. “Get up the best hawser, Mr. Maples, and put a bend in it;” “Stand by to clew up the courses,” and he mounted on the wheel-house, and almost before we were fairly within hailing distance, and before a word had passed from the tug, he shouted, “Hook on there—hook on!” Within half an hour there were other tugs down, but it was too late; the tide was running out, and we had got the only tug that was in time to have taken the Gallatin in, and she had to anchor and wait till next day.

March 4th.—On Sabbath day I walked out to the Prince's Park—a beautiful piece of ground in the environs of the city. I found flowers blooming and birds singing around me in hundreds—the sunshine almost oppressive. The grass was green and bright, and the buds swelling in full spring vigor. I rambled around several hours leisurely, in company with an old Yorkshire gentleman, who accosted me very benignly. He was seventy-five years old, and his days began to weigh heavy on him. He was waiting patiently, and in Christian hope, for death. When we parted he bade me an affectionate farewell, with the hope that the great event might find me prepared.

I find little in Liverpool to interest me. A few old paintings of merit were all that I saw professionally engaging. The immense trains attached to the drays attracted me. Such beautiful horses I never saw. Some of them were almost as high to the back as I am, and every line in their bodies is a line of beauty. Then there were carts drawn by donkeys, some which were certainly not three feet high. I leave for London in the morning.

CURIOUS CUSTOM OF THE ANCIENT EGYPTIANS.

The Egyptians had a funereal tribunal, by which the dead were tried, before they could be buried. After death, every Egyptian was brought before this tribunal, and, if convicted of having in his life acted unworthily, he was denied a place in the burial-place of his ancestors. This was a great disgrace to his family, and, according to the Egyptian theology, it deprived the spirit of the deceased of an entrance into heaven. One of the things which caused the infliction of this mark of disgrace, was that of dying in debt. If, however, the children or friends of the deceased should pay his debts, as they sometimes did, he was allowed to be buried. Such an institution as this must have had a powerful effect upon the conduct of the people in their commercial transactions with each other. A man who knew that every act of dishonesty, unfair representation, falsehood, or trickery, which he might practice in the course of business, might be remembered and uttered, to the disgrace of his family, over his dead body, would be cautious not to give occasion to such a procedure. As we have no exact information with regard to the mode of trial, we may perhaps be allowed to picture to our imagination the form of the proceedings. Let us suppose it was somewhat like this:

An Egyptian merchant dies—the day arrives for the investigation of his conduct. The hall of judgment is thronged with citizens; the body, followed by a long train of mourning relatives, is brought in, and placed in the midst; the judges take their seats, and the whole assembly is hushed into silence. An officer of the court proclaims—

“If any of you know any just cause or impediment why the body of our deceased fellow citizen should not be committed to the grave, ye are now to declare it.”

A voice—“I object to the burial, for I had often dealings with the deceased, and I could never depend upon his word.”

Another voice—“I object to the burial, for the deceased attempted to injure my character, in order to get away my customers.”

A third voice—“I object to the burial, for he lived at a most extravagant rate, when he knew he was unable to pay his debts.”

A fourth voice—“I object to the burial, for he made over his property to a friend, and then took the benefit of the insolvent debtor's act.”

The judges rise and exclaim—

“Enough! enough! Take him away! Take him away! You may throw away the body to be devoured by the beasts of the field, or the fowls of the air; but never let the earth be polluted by receiving into its bosom the worthless remnant of so vile a man.”

CHRISTIAN WARS.

BY WILLIAM B. TAPPAN.

A Turk, at Jerusalem, once said to Mr. Wolff, the Missionary, “Why do you come to us?” The Missionary replied, “To bring you peace.” “Peace!” replied the Turk, leading Mr. Wolff to a window, and pointing him to Calvary, “there, upon the spot where your Lord poured out his blood, the Mohammedan is obliged to interfere to prevent Christians from shedding the blood of each other!”

The angel's song that happy night
  When spirits stooped to mortal ken,
Warbled from lips and lyres of light—
  Was peace on earth, good will to men.

* * * *

And yet, Oh! God, the Christian's wrath,
  Through all her seas, through all her zones,
Has in Earth's bosom hewed a path
  That's whitened with her children's bones.

In thy Son's name the sword drinks blood;
  In thy Son's name, since first his Star
Spake peace, has urged the angry flood
  Of never ebbing, whelming war.

Drop, Christendom! thy boasted name,
  And let the humble take it—those
Who fear, in spite of taunt and shame,
  To count their Christian fellows foes.

VEGETARIANISM.

The advocates of exclusive vegetable diet held a Convention in New York last week, for the purpose of forming the “American Vegetarian Society.” Among the attendants were Doctors Sylvester Graham, W. A. Alcott, Joel Shew and R. T. Trall, and Revs. Wm. Metcalfe and O. H. Wellington. The following curious preamble and resolutions were adopted by the Convention:—

Man is evidently responsible to certain physical, mental and moral laws. Obedience to these will secure health and happiness; while disobedience inevitably produces misery and evil. Natural laws form an unique harmonious system, and Man partakes of this prevailing beauty in every law of his being. Constitutions may indeed differ—but there must be a universal law for the stomach as well as for the lungs. And the species of food prescribed by the universal law for the human stomach, will be found to comport best with the physical abilities, health, and the exercise of the intellectual and moral powers. Vegetarianism unfolds this Universal Law of Man's being. Its observance is a stepping-stone to a higher stage of existence, and removes obstructions which hinder the fulfillment of Man's highest aspirations, and it is the inlet to a new and holier life.

With these views impressed on our minds, we, who are here assembled in American Vegetarian Convention, have hereby

Resolved, That Comparative Anatomy, Human Physiology, and the chemical analysis of different animal and farinaceous substances, unitedly proclaim the position, that not only the Human Race may, but SHOULD subsist upon the productions of the Vegetable Kingdom.

Resolved, That the Vegetarian Principle of Diet derives its most ancient authority from the appointment of the Creator to Man, when he lived in purity and peace, and was blessed with health and happiness in Paradise.

Resolved, That though the use of animal food be claimed under the sanction of succeeding times, it rests only on the permissions accorded to Man in his degraded condition, and is a departure from the appointment of the Creator.

Resolved, That if Man would return to Paradise and Purity—to mental and physical enjoyment—he must return to the Paradisical Diet, and abstain from the killing and eating of animals as food.

Resolved, That there is found in the Vegetable World, every element which enters into the animal organization; and that combinations of those elements in the Vegetable Kingdom, are best adapted to the most natural and healthy nourishment of Man.

Resolved, That the approbation of Man's unsophisticated and unbiased powers of taste, sight and smell, are involuntarily given to fruits, farinacea and vegetable substances, in preference to the mangled carcases of butchered animals.

Resolved, That Flesh-eating is the key-stone to a wide-spread arch of superfluous wants, to meet which life is filled with stern and rugged encounters; while the adoption of a Vegetarian Diet is calculated to destroy the strife of antagonism, and to sustain life in serenity and strength.

Resolved, That as there are intellectual facts and a mental being into which the inebriate can never enter, and delights which he can never enjoy, so there are moral facts and a moral being which to the flesh-eater can never be revealed, and moral happiness in which he cannot fully participate.

Resolved, That cruelty in any form for the mere purpose of procuring unnecessary food, or to gratify depraved appetites, is obnoxious to the pure human soul and repugnant to the noblest attributes of our being.

Resolved, That the evidences of Linnæus, Sir Richard Phillips, Dr. Franklin, Sir Isaac Newton, John Wesley, Swedenborg, Howard, Jefferson, Rosseau, Akenside, Pope, Shelly, Sir John Sinclair, Arbuthnot, and a host of other living as well as ancient observers of Nature, testify to the truth of Vegetarianism.

Resolved, That in the Vegetarian Cause a new field of exercise is opened to the Moral Reformer, in which he is most earnestly and cordially invited to become a co-worker with Truth, by adopting its teachings in the government of his own life, and by diffusing its principles in all his efforts for the elevation of his fellow man.

Why the Quakers wear their Hats.—Quakers invariably wear their hats in places of public worship, or in public assemblies. We often see, in our assemblies and senate chambers, slouched hats hanging carelessly over solemn faces, and but few are aware how this custom originated.

Fox, the founder of collarless coats and broad-brims, was in the habit of attending the Episcopal Church. When the preacher uttered sentiments of which he disapproved, he would solemnly put on his broad-brimmed hat, and take it off again whenever a more welcome train of doctrine occurred. If he sat long with his hat on, and the ill-sounded propositions or fulminations continued, he would rise slowly, and silently walk out. Thus it appears, that it was for the purpose of habitual protest that the Quakers first learned to sit in places of worship with their hats on.

BEAUSOBRE ON THE AUTHORITY OF “THE FATHERS.”

Beausobre was a very learned French writer of the 17th century. He was a warm-hearted Protestant, a powerful preacher, and wielded an effective pen. When the royal signet was put upon the door of a Protestant church in France, in order to prevent public worship, he broke the signet, and on that account was forced to be an exile. In the year 1694 he went to Berlin, and became chaplain to the Court of Prussia. We read many things, now-a-days, which remind us of a passage of his writings on the authority of “The Fathers.” He says, in his critical history of Manichaeism, “Some will charge me with speaking disrespectfully of the Fathers. I grant, some expressions may have escaped me, which I might have softened; but then, narrations notoriously false, or monstrously exaggerated, bad reasonings, a blind belief of every thing reported to disgrace heretics, a reigning passion to render their persons odious—all this irritates an equitable mind. But what provokes beyond all patience, is to see that selfish abuse which some writers make of the names and testimonies of the Fathers. A sort of false reasoning, which I call the sophism of authority, hath been long introduced, and now continues to be applied to the most pernicious purposes. Reason and religion are oppressed, and in order to defend opinions evidently false, and practices grossly superstitious, a sentence is quoted from an ancient writer, and puffed off with the vain title of a saint and a great saint. People, on hearing this superb title, are seduced into an imagination that they hear an oracle, and sincerely believe that justness of thought, accuracy of expression, solidity of reasoning, and demonstrative evidence are necessarily connected with saintship and great saintship. They even fancy that such men were under the immediate influence of the Holy Spirit, inseparably connected with their writings. Reason, abashed and timid, durst not resist; or if it dare be so bold, admirers of antiquity will exclaim first at presumption and pride, and last at heresy. In vain Jesus Christ said, ‘One is your Master;’ and Paul, ‘Be ye not the servants of men.’ Never did Constantine VI. discover more wisdom and prudence than when he forbade the title of saint to be given to any except the Apostles. He saw the abuse, and endeavored to correct it. I esteem and honor the Fathers, but I do not think them infallible, either as evidences of a fact, or as just reasoners from facts allowed to be true. Even they who incessantly plead for their authority, occasionally criticise them. They have done more. They have corrupted their writings in an infinite number of places, and this they call correcting them.” [Christian Watchman.

IT DOES ME GOOD TO CONVERSE WITH SINNERS.

I learn their excuses. They all have excuses. They never deny obligation, but all excuse themselves from present duty. And in conversing with them, I learn what these excuses are. In many cases I never could or should conjecture them. Each one has an excuse of his own, and I find it does me good to know it.

I learn the difficulties that tried many. They have erroneous views, or strong prejudices, or meet with seemingly insurmountable difficulties. It is good for me to know them. To labor for the conversion of a sinner without knowing his difficulties, is idle.

I learn the wretchedness of sin and the power of the devil. I never know the power of the devil until I converse with sinners; his power to deceive, his power to harden, his power to destroy.

It increases my anxiety for their conversion. For a sinner with whom I never converse, I have no special anxiety. But no sooner do I begin to probe his heart than I begin to feel for him; and the deeper I go, the more do I feel, the more do I agonize for him in prayer, the more earnest am I in my labors and efforts to save him.

It enhances my gratitude for what God has done for my own soul. When I neglect conversing with sinners, I almost seem to forget that I have been converted myself. But the moment I commene this duty with them, I realize the wide difference in our moral condition, our views, feelings, and end. I was once as they are, perverse, stubborn, rebellious, and I exclaim, Oh, to grace how great a debtor!

I prize more the influence of the Spirit. How feeble is man in his efforts to convert the wicked! I talk in vain. But there is one at hand mighty to overcome, the Holy Spirit. Oh, how precious!

It makes me contentedly remain on earth, and cheerfully endure the greatest privations. Here is a blessed work to be done, every day and every hour. Why be anxious to leave it? Why concern myself under what circumstances I do it, whether in a palace or a hovel, on the land or the sea, in days of prosperity, or amid persecutions and death.

Oh, it does me good to converse with sinners. It makes me a better man and a better Christian. I have done it so little. I will do it more.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, May 23, 1850.

THE CONVENTION AT BERLIN.

The readers of the Recorder have already been apprised of a Sabbath Convention which was in prospect at Berlin, Rensselaer Co., N. Y. We were enabled to attend that Convention, and shall endeavor to place some account of it before our readers.

The meeting was held in the Seventh-day Baptist meeting-house, commencing May 15th, and continuing three days. The gathering of people was small, owing in part to the unfavorable weather, but still more to the secluded situation of the place, and to the little publicity which had been given of the matter. The Convention was organized by the appointment of Elder Thomas B. Brown, of New York, Chairman, and Elder Alfred B. Burdick, of Rhode Island, Secretary. During the first day, the business seemed to be confined entirely to those of our own denomination. The broad and liberal invitation extended to persons of all parties, to come in and discuss the several topics which might come up for consideration, had been overlooked, or deliberately disregarded. It is true, some observers of the first day of the week were present as spectators, but they chose to decline the repeated invitations given them to participate in the proceedings. Like the great Sunday Conventions, the discussion was, therefore, all on one side. The second day, however, changed the face of things. Two first-day Baptist ministers, (Messrs. Arthur and Rogers,) came in, and with them an increase of spectators, so that the house became comfortably filled.

The following are the resolutions reported by the Business Committee, which received the attention of the Convention:—

1. Resolved, That the Scriptures are the only standard of revealed truth—the only testimony which this Convention can conscientiously admit, in matters pertaining to faith or practice.

2. Resolved, That the weekly Sabbath was designed to be a constant memorial of the wisdom, goodness, and power of Jehovah, as displayed in the work of creation, and that the observance of it by the people of God is a standing testimony against the blasphemies of Atheism and the follies of Idolatry.

3. Resolved, That, inasmuch as "the Sabbath was made for man," that man who rejects the Sabbath, not only practically denies the wisdom and goodness of the Creator, but inflicts upon himself serious personal injury.

4. Resolved, That while the Scriptures abound in promises to all those who keep holy the Sabbath day according to the fourth commandment, we know of no Scripture in which God's blessing is promised to follow the observance of any other day, under any pretence whatever.

5. Resolved, That, in the judgment of this Convention, every jot and tittle of the ten commandments continues to this day in full force.

6. Resolved, That the time has come when the friends of the Bible Sabbath are called to gird themselves for a mighty contest, and that not only their prayers and personal labors, but their property, should be freely consecrated to, the universal restoration of this long neglected institution.

The first four resolutions had been acted upon and adopted by the Convention, before brethren Arthur and Rogers came. The fifth being called up, and some brief remarks having been made in support of it by Bro. Morton, Elder Rogers led off the negative in one of the most ingenious anti-Sabbath arguments to which we have ever listened. It had been advanced, on our side, that the law of the ten commandments was but a republication of the very same law which had been written on the heart of Adam. Elder R. maintained, that the law of the Sabbath could not have been one of those which were written on Adam's heart, in the act of creation, inasmuch as he was brought into existence on the sixth-day, and could not have known anything about the Sabbath till the day following. No doubt his friends and supporters thought this an unanswerable argument. But the fallacy of it consists in overlooking the fact, that man was the very last of God's works, and therefore the Sabbath must have commenced immediately after, that is, as soon as man became a living soul. Elder R. then went on to say, that the term "Sabbath" was not once used in the Bible, till we find it in the account of the falling of the manna, in the 16th of Exodus; disregarding what is said in Gen. 2: 2, that God rested (sabbatized, or kept Sabbath) from all his works. He then attempted to maintain, that the exodus of the Israelites from Egypt took place on the Sabbath, and that the institution was given to commemorate that event; that it was, therefore, purely a Jewish institution, in which Gentiles had no concern. He maintained, that at the death of Christ it was abrogated; and, finally, that the whole law, decalogue and all, was nailed to the cross. The "hand writing of ordinances," that was against the Gentiles, as set forth in Col. 2: 14, he contended, was as much the Decalogue as any thing else; for in what respect was the ceremonial law against the Gentiles, who never were under it? No, said he, it was the Decalogue that was against the Gentiles, inasmuch as it condemned them to death for their transgressions of it. After defending these points with much plausibility, he undertook to show that Christians were under a new law. His argument throughout was as strong a defense of anti-Sabbatarianism as we have ever listened to, and the partisans of that sentiment had every reason to be satisfied with their champion. But, in our opinion, his arguments, though plausible, were far from being according to truth. They were completely overthrown by the speakers who confronted him.

As for Elder Arthur, he had evidently not studied the subject. Indeed, he confessed as much. He seemed to feel quite confident, however, that we were in error, and that he should succeed in convincing us. It is probable, that his opinion was somewhat modified by the time the Convention was over. He occupied considerable time in showing that the Jewish and Christian churches were entirely different—a thing quite irrelevant to the question; for, though the two churches are not identical, and hence the ordinances of the churches are different, that proves nothing in reference to a law which concerns men simply as the creatures of God, and not as church members. He gave a most singular interpretation of the text, "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath;" contending that the word man meant the Jews, in contradistinction from the Gentiles, the latter being spoken of as "dogs;" in proof of which he referred to Matt. 15: 26. No doubt this interpretation was original with him.

After the sixth resolution had been disposed of, the following, submitted by Mr. Arthur himself, was discussed.

"Resolved, That the first day of the week, commonly called the Lord's Day, is to be set apart by the Christian Church as a day of religious worship."

Mr. A. seemed to think, that we had entirely overlooked the evidence which he was about to adduce in support of the resolution. But when he found, that we were perfectly well informed of all the arguments that the most powerful defenders of the "Lord's Day" had ever advanced, he appeared to look upon us in a different light from what he did before. After the resolution had been thoroughly discussed, the Convention, in deference to the feelings of Elders Rogers and Arthur, decided to take no vote on the question.

Late in the afternoon of Sixth-day, the Convention closed its session of three days, and adjourned sine die, after having first appointed a Committee to make arrangements for a future gathering of the same kind, at such time and place as to them may seem most expedient. The session, on the whole, was pleasant, and we trust profitable. Our sketch of its proceedings is necessarily imperfect, as we took no notes, and write altogether from memory. We have no time for reflections.

"A COLLEGE—WHAT IS NEEDED."

The writer of an article with the above heading, in the Recorder of May 9th, remarks, that in a former article he had endeavored to show the impropriety of a direct effort for a denominational college. Our first impressions were, that the writer failed in his endeavor to establish his position; and those impressions have been deepened into conviction by a perusal of the articles in review, by "A Member of the last Conference," and "A Friend of Progress," in the Recorder of May 2d and 9th.

In the article under consideration, the writer assumes, that "the great objection to a college is, that it will stand directly in the way of the education of the people." When a sentiment so opposed to the general opinion of mankind, and the experience of centuries, is set forth, we have a right to expect that it will be accompanied with arguments of no ordinary degree of conclusiveness. The common opinion is, that colleges, so far from hindering the education of the people, are among the most efficient means of promoting it. So universal has this opinion become, that our colleges enter largely into the data for estimating the intelligence of the people. This universal opinion is founded on universal experience; for history affirms nothing with more certainty, than that the educational interests of the people have advanced in exact proportion to the multiplication and advancement of our colleges. This is just what universal common-sense would pre-affirm; for what is to become of the thousand graduates who annually go forth from our college? Let our numerous and flourishing academies, and well-conducted common schools, answer. Strike from existence our colleges and college-educated men, and with the same fatal blow you annihilate our academies and common schools. Such a catastrophe would teach the poor struggling people the fallacy of the writer's assertion, and the universal cry would go up from every domicil in our land, "Give us back our colleges, for upon them depends the existence of our academies and common schools."

The writer remarks truly, that "in perfecting our plans, we must meet the wants of the people, or suffer the mortification of a disheartening failure." Now we affirm, that the people want nothing more than thoroughly-educated men (such as a college alone can afford) to conduct their academies and schools, and thus furnish them with facilities such as they can appreciate and embrace. Nor have we been wanting in "disheartening failures," resulting from this very want of efficient educators in our academies. How can our academies flourish, in which students surpass their teachers, and ask in vain for instruction? Such students will soon learn to study their Latin and Greek at home, unencumbered by school expenses, and such academies will soon sink to deserved oblivion.

But the writer goes on to fortify his strange position, by saying, that "had we a college, few, very few, compared with the whole, could avail themselves of its facilities." Now this argument is as strange as the position. Who does not know, that when a few become well educated, the many are thus placed on the highway to education? We hazard nothing in affirming, that one thoroughly-educated man in any community, be his profession what it may, will place that community fifty per cent. above surrounding communities in point of educational facilities. It is to this educated few that the people are indebted for their facilities. Look at the academies and common schools growing up on every hill-side and valley, by the untiring zeal and self-sacrificing devotion of this few, made competent to the task by the stern discipline of a college course, and tell us, is not much good done to the people by the education of this few? How then, we ask, do colleges stand in the way of popular education? The writer of the article under review, is one of the educated few; but who dare affirm that his education has opposed any obstacle to the facilities of the people? And who dare not affirm, that because he has been educated, hundreds of the people have been educated also? Give us, then, if all can not go to college, the few who may come forth champions to help the people. But why need we urge this point? The writer admits it. "This few might indeed be useful in carrying forward the enteprises of the denomination." Now, the writer objects to a college on the ground that it would stand in the way of advancing the people, because it would educate but a few; and yet that few would be useful in advancing the people! We are very willing to leave the task of unraveling these contradictions to those more learned. We think such reasoning "above and beyond the people, and therefore lost."

But this educated few "would be continually embarrassed for want of a corresponding advancement on the part of the people for whom they labor." Now, we will not charge the writer with "a meager view of education;" no, far from it; for we confess this last view is so expansive, (probably under the influence of that kind of evaporation to which the writer thinks all learned men subject,) that we, the common people, can not understand it. But we have ventured to ask of those whom we thought sufficiently learned to have their thoughts evaporated equally with the thoughts of the writer in the last quotation. We have received this explanation, viz., that it is inexpedient to have any one man educated above the mass, because he will be embarrassed in laboring for the people, who are not quite so far advanced as he is. If, then, no one man is to be educated in advance of the masses, it follows, that if educated at all, all must ascend an equal number of degrees in the scale of intellectual development in the same time. Such a sentiment would be repudiated, if uttered in the presence of the veriest school-boy. Yea, even the beasts of the field repudiate it, for they always choose their leaders on the ground of superior attainments. To expect the mass of mind to march up the rugged steeps of erudition with even front, were as idle as to expect the waters of the Mississippi, by one mighty leap, to bury themselves in the bosom of the ocean. It is absolutely impossible to equalize the facilities of mankind so that all can progress together. But if this could be done, who does not know, that with equal facilities one man will reach the zenith while another will scarcely have left the horizon? To repudiate, then, the idea that some men should aspire to pre-eminence, and thus become leaders in every good work, is a repudiation of nature itself, in every form of development. Universal experience teaches, that every reform has had its pioneers, characterized by superior attainments. Universal reason affirms, that no great reform can ever be consummated, except by the instrumentality of qualified leaders. And how do these leaders accomplish it? By instructing the people, less favored with opportunities than they, and thus conferring on the people those opportunities which, without these few, they never could have had. Take, for example, our academies—and how could the people ever have received the advantages which they afford, if there had been no colleges to educate the few who conduct them? How could our churches have the benefit of instructive preaching, if there were none qualified above them to impart such preaching? Can a man, no more advanced in the classics than another man, teach him? Can a minister, who is no more intelligent than his hearers, teach them? Can a blacksmith, ignorant of his trade, teach it to his apprentice? But, alas! they are embarrassed, because they know more than those for whom they labor! Poor things! Fortunate for them that intellectual development has a point of "evaporation," which, reducing their "pathos and vivacity," will render them less sensible to the extreme "embarrassment" ever attendant on the teacher who knows more than the taught. We wonder why the All-wise Ruler has not fixed an evaporating point to the ignorant, so that they might be less sensible to the embarrassment of knowing less than those whom they essay to instruct, for we have heard that embarrassments often arise from this cause.

Again, the writer says, "Another objectionable feature is, that those who build a college must do so under the inspiration of hopes based on ideal premises." We trust that no college will be built under the inspiration of such hopes; and, that the hopes of the Conference were not of this kind, we infer from the well-known character of those who acted there, as well as from numerous arguments already before the public. We agree with the writer, (although we have had no experience in college building,) "that it is easier to build on unoccupied ground than on the rubbish" of disappointed hopes. Our ground is unoccupied. No ruins of a fallen college encumber us. Let us put our shoulders to the wheel, and roll this majestic undertaking to a glorious consummation as soon as the providences of God shall warrant.

"It is said, that our candidates for the ministry must have these facilities; but that is a meager view of education, which anticipates improving the few and neglecting the many." True, but no such thing is anticipated. We have already shown, that our colleges are the most efficient means of diffusing education among the people. But let us suppose, for a moment, that none but our candidates for the ministry could have access to college, still we affirm, that it would be a means of educating the people; for, be it understood, that the minister is emphatically an educator, and efficient in proportion as he is educated. But no such contracted view was ever entertained by those who hope for a college. It is proposed to found and endow a college on such liberal principles, that it shall be emphatically the people's college—a place where the aspirations of our youth can be encouraged. Say what we may against colleges, we are indebted to them for almost every educational advantage which we possess. Without them, we should have no efficient academies, and without academies no efficient common schools. And yet we are indebted to other denominations for all these facilities. Our young men are driven out from us to encounter disabilities, discouragements, and invidious discriminations, which no free-spirited young man will or can encounter without a sacrifice of principle. The time has fully come, then, to begin this grand and beneficent enterprise, for the benefit of the people, and the whole people.

One of the People.

A COLLEGE—WAYS AND MEANS.

In attempting to give some details of a plan to promote the true educational interests of the denomination, I hope I shall not be understood as dictatorial, or so egotistical as to suppose that it is the only plan that can succeed. In fact, I verily believe, that the final triumph will be secured, whatever the particular measures employed. The leaven is at work, and no ordinary calamity can utterly subvert it. An educated people we should be, we must be, we shall be. Interest, reason, duty, happiness, and the indications of Providence, all conspire to bring about an end so desirable. My only wish is to find out the surest, best means.

In my last I proposed, as a proximate end, 1st. The efficiency of our present academies, and the addition of others as needed. 2d. That the young be aroused to the necessity of education, and to effort in its pursuit. 3d. Aid and encouragement to those who would else be impeded or falter in their course.

I would have those who are remote from an institution of our own, look around them and see if one is not actually demanded by the wants of the community of which they form a part. If so, there should be no delay so as to leave the ground to be occupied by others. The "children of light" should be wiser than the men of "this world." Luke 16: 8.

A sufficient number of our academies should be endowed, or otherwise enabled to furnish facilities for thorough instruction equal to a full college course, and yet so arranged that students may profitably spend sufficient time in college to receive their appropriate honors. If our academies are unincumbered with debt, and are erected, as they should be, for the public good, and not for speculation, a small endowment would add greatly to their utility, and render their facilities both more practical and more permanent.

The same object would be materially promoted by carrying out the other parts of the plan contemplated. Let our youth fill our academies, and the tuition fees, properly husbanded, will ordinarily defray the incidental expenses and maintain an able faculty. Let the poor be aided with appropriate means, and the rich see their true interest, and our academies will readily be filled. We should then have only to provide for those exigencies which occur in the fluctuations of fortune, and our educational interests would be planted in a field of promise, fertilizing by their own growth. With a population thus aroused and thus instructed, the erection of a college would be only as a pastime. "No long circuit of means would be required—no preparatory measures," such as were necessary in the early settlements of this country, but the move would be such as becomes "lovers of progress" in an age of railroads, steamboats, and telegraphs. It would only be necessary to commit the message to the wings of the electric dove in New England, saying to our brethren in the adjacent neighborhoods of Wisconsin and California, "We are ready," and the returning vibrations would echo the response, "We too are ready—go up and build."

To the work, then, brethren; and let us not sit in idle dreamings of some device to avoid the details of an intermediate passage from the cradle to manly stature. Our work is a work of toil and sacrifice; of toil rewarded by the precious consciousness of doing good and swelling the amount of intelligence and happiness in the universe; of sacrifice, on the part of the rich, such as is calculated to secure the permanence of wealth and the general diffusion of its benefits; sacrifice, on the part of the poor, of that false delicacy which would lead them to reject the proffers of others, lest they should seem to be dependent. Yea, rather, our business is to return to the spirit of those times when "they had all things common, and he that had gathered little had no lack, and he that had gathered much had nothing over."

1. Let every parent, then, look upon his children, and solemnly inquire within himself and before God, Am I, day by day, instilling into the minds of my children the spirit of progress, and a sense of the fact, that intelligence and goodness are the prime treasures of immortal beings, and that other treasures are valuable only as they tend to promote these? Have they all those facilities which will develop their powers and qualify them to bless the world and honor God? If not, let no sleep close the eyes, nor slumber the eyelids, till they have put in motion a train of arrangements which will secure to them the boon. If parents cannot command the means themselves, let them not blush to ask the interposition of others.

2. Let every philanthropist and Christian, and especially every minister of the gospel, look around him and inquire if there is any youth, of any age or sex, that is not improving the seed-time of life in preparations for a summer of beauty and excellence, and a harvest of ripened intellect and developed holiness. Let the rich from their abundance, and the widow from her mite, send in to some central organization, either church, association, or general society, or some board of trustees, the sums which, thus accumulated, shall put ample facilities within the reach of every young person who is willing to make efforts corresponding to provisions thus secured. I would not ask for the accumulation of standing funds, the interest only of which shall be doled out to the needy. Nay, rather, place it in the bosom of the poor, and God will secure the principal, and give an interest of thirty, sixty, or an hundred fold. Let the recipients of these funds return them, free from interest, in a suitable time after they have completed their course of study, and thus a second, and a third, may receive the perpetual blessing from the same gift. Let the work go on, widening and deepening, until, as upon the bosom of a mighty river, the vast accumulations of ignorance and error, now so formidable, shall be borne completely away, and fields of knowledge, clothed in living green, spread over the domain of earth, and the whole becomes one garden of our God.

In the plan above proposed I have not included provisions for theological instruction. The finances of that enterprise, I think, should be kept entirely distinct. Many would contribute to one, who would not wish to aid both. In some States, academies are excluded from the benefits of State funds where they are appropriating a part of their energies to a theological department. In relation to this, as well as to a college, I think we can do better than to make a great outlay in "brick and mortar" for external show. The plan agreed on by the Committee of the Central Association, and laid before Conference, is still the plan of my choice; but as no notice is taken of it in the minutes of Conference, and a very different one recorded, I suppose it was rejected, after the deliberations of "the oldest and wisest heads." That plan, in short, is to raise by subscription, in annual payments, (for five years as an experiment,) funds sufficient to support one theological teacher, and to purchase a small, well-selected library. Then let the charge of this work be entrusted to the best man whose services can be commanded, and let his instructions and lectures be free to all who may avail themselves of them. The plan may subsequently be enlarged or modified, as the wishes of those interested, and the indications of Providence, may seem to direct.

I have thus endeavored to present what, in my view, is the most safe and practical plan of advancing the educational interests of our people. If it does not anticipate the empty honors of home-made college titles, it does what I consider better; it proposes facilities for our youth to make themselves entitled to true honor. But if I am alone, and the opposite course is adopted, I shall still do what I can to aid my brethren in the work, and to avert, as much as possible, the reäction almost inevitable upon the adoption of the course proposed in the minutes of the last Conference. If I have not one of "the oldest and wisest heads," I have had a little experience in trying to repair the breaches of reäction, and I had rather that a few disappointed aspirants should feel a temporary "cold, damp, death-like blast," than that the whole denomination should fall from their "high and ardent hopes" into a slough of discouragements, from which twenty years of unremitting toil can hardly recover them.

JAS. R. IRISH.

The Baptist Irish Society.—This unpretending and very useful Society held its Anniversary in London a few weeks ago. It was organized in 1814, for the purpose of diffusing the Gospel in Ireland, mainly by the employment of missionaries and Scripture readers, the establishment of schools, and the distribution of Bibles and Tracts. Its income has never reached £3000 a year, yet it has brought 600,000 children within educational influences, and furnished them with testaments, school-books, &c. The Annual Report, presented at the Anniversary, stated that 16 missionaries, 9 Irish readers, and 24 schoolmasters, are now employed, and that there is regular preaching at 70 stations. One hundred Irish Baptists have emigrated to New York during the year. Returns from 14 churches show a gross increase of 79 members. The special claims of Ireland were urged by several speakers, and the causes of her wretchedness indicated. Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel was one of the speakers.

The English Baptist Union.—This organization, formed in 1831, to extend brotherly love and union among those Baptist members and churches who agree in the sentiments usually denominated evangelical, held a meeting in London on the 19th of April. Dr. Burns presided, and Rev. Dr. Godwin delivered the annual address. The following resolution, adopted by the meeting, indicates the present condition of the Baptist churches of England:

"Resolved, That the Union look with affectionate and undiminished interest on the indications of the state of the churches, furnished by the statistical returns of the several Associations; and that they cherish joy and gratitude to God while they record the fact, that in 682 churches whose numbers are reported, there has been a clear increase of 2,324 members, or an average of 3½ per church, still carrying forward, in a slight degree, the progressive augmentation of the rate of increase which has been observable for three years past."

A New Methodist Bishop.—Rev. H. B. Bascom, the distinguished Kentuckian, has been chosen a Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, by the General Conference now in session at St. Louis.

American Baptist Missionary Union.—This organization held its anniversay at Buffalo, commencing on Fifth-day of last week. From Reports presented on the occasion, we learn that the receipts, exclusive of receipts from coördinate Societies, were $87,539 25; Expenditures, 84,147 23; Present debt, 21,501 09; Total receipts of the year, from all sources, 105,827 20; Total expenditures for the year, 101,446 23; Number of Missions, 17; Stations and out-Stations, 329; Missionaries, 561, of whom 52 are preachers; Female assistants, 57; Native preachers and other assistants, 214; whole number of laborers, 323; number of churches, 157; Members, 12,290; Schools, 102, with 2,648 pupils; additions to the church, 1,236. Several Missionaries were in attendance, and gave interesting accounts of their labors among the heathen.

Methodist Missionary Society.—The Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church held its anniversary in New York one evening last week, at which the Treasurer's Report was read, and two or three addresses were delivered. The Annual Report was unfortunately absent with one of the Secretaries, and therefore no account was presented of the doings of last year. From the Treasurer's Report, it appears that the receipts for twelve months have amounted to $107,835 73, and the disbursements to $100,989 63, leaving in the treasury $6,846 10. The speakers expressed themselves pained to learn that the receipts had not been larger, and there seemed to be a general determination that they should be greatly increased during the coming year.

The Jewish Feast of Pentecost.—The Jews have three great annual feasts—the Passover, which occurs in the latter part of March, or on the 15th day of their month Nisan, in memory of their deliverance from Egypt; the Feast of Pentecost, which comes fifty days afterward, (occurring this year on the 16th day of May,) in commemoration of the giving of the law from Mount Sinai; and the Feast of Tabernacles, which occurs in September, and commemorates the forty years' wandering in the wilderness. The Feast of Pentecost, last week, was signalized in this city by the consecration of a new and elegant synagogue recently erected in Norfolk-st., at a cost of about $40,000. The exercises consisted of reading the Scriptures, singing, prayers, and addresses by several leading members of the Jewish Community, among whom were Rev. Mr. Isaacs and Rev. Dr. Lillienthal.

The Eng. Baptist Home Miss. Society.—The Annual Meeting of this Society was held in London on the 21st of April, when it was stated, that the income last year was £4,221; expenditures £4,523. Stirring addresses were made by Rev. H. Dobney, Rev. Charles Stovel, and others, who represented the home missionary work in England as greatly impeded by the large party laboring to bring all the people under the influence of ceremonialism and the priesthood.

Death of Missionaries.—Rev. Cyrus Barker, missionary to Assam, E. I. under, the patronage of the Baptist Missionary Union, died January 31, on his homeward passage, and was buried in Mozambique Channel. His disease was consumption. Mr. Barker sailed from Boston, October 22, 1839. * * * The decease of Rev. J. Peggs, late missionary of the General Baptists to Orissa in India, is also announced. He was a most active man and devoted Christian. He was the author of a history of the General Baptist Mission, and of several other works on India. His end was peace.

A Word to our Friends—Three numbers more will complete the sixth volume of the Sabbath Recorder. For the double purpose of extending the influence of the paper, and providing the means to increase its value, we want to commence the seventh volume with a subscription list greatly enlarged. This might easily be done, if the friends who have spoken favorably of our enterprise would volunteer their aid in the matter. Will they do it? Some will, we know, and we hope that many will.

Ordination.—A letter from Eld. Azor Estee informs us, that on Sabbath, May 11, by request of the Seventh-day Baptist Church at Lost Creek, Va., Bro. Samuel D. Davis was set apart to the work of the gospel ministry. Eld. Estee preached the ordination sermon, and gave the charge; Eld. Peter Davis offered the consecrating prayer, and gave the hand of fellowship.

Dr. Judson.—Letters from Maulmain have been received at Boston, bearing date of January 21st, which bring intelligence of the severe illness of Dr. Judson, the pioneer missionary. Fears are entertained by the friends of this good and great man, that his sickness may terminate fatally.

Meeting of Unionists and Reformers.—A Christian Union Meeting, irrespective of sect or creed, is called to meet at Cazenovia, on the 5th of June next. The enemies of Slavery, War, Intemperance, and Licentiousness are specially invited. Gerrit Smith Rev. S. J. May, C. A. Wheaton, and others, sign the call.

Eld. Joshua Clark requests his correspondents to address him at Brookfield, Madison Co., N. Y.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. SECOND-DAY, May 13.

Several petitions for the reörganization of the Judiciary of the District of Columbia were presented and referred.

Mr. Dickinson introduced a bill authorizing the coinage of a cent-piece, composed of copper and silver, the coinage of a three-cent piece, and to secure the re-coinage of the small Spanish and other foreign coins.

At about 1 o'clock the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the Bill to admit California into the Union, establishing Territorial Governments for New Mexico and Utah, and making proposals to Texas for the settlement of her Western and Northern boundaries.

Mr. Clay occupied the attention of the Senate with a speech which lasted till the hour of adjournment. He first made a statement of the sentiments of the Committee of Thirteen, showing what objections they had raised in committee to the proposed compromise, and how they had been answered. Then he took up the various plans which had been suggested, and endeavored, by contrasting them, to show the superiority of his. Afterward he replied to some persons who had objected to the plan of the Committee, especially Mr. Benton. Mr. Clay intimated his full conviction that slavery is abolished throughout New Mexico by the edict of the Creator, the Constitution of the people, and the act of their Legislatures. He advocated the provisions of the bill in relation to the recapture of slaves, and in the course of his remarks upon the subject alluded to Mr. Seward's position, as the advocate of a higher—a divine law—classing him with those who composed the Garrison meeting in New York, whereat, he said, Moses and all the prophets were rejected, and the name of the Savior reviled and contemned. Speaking of the slave-trade in the District of Columbia, he said that the first man who ever denounced that trade was a Southern man—John Randolph of Roanoke—and he believed there had been no time in forty years when, had the subject been energetically presented, a majority would not have been found in Congress in favor of its abolition. In conclusion, he expressed his conviction that the propositions of the Committee would succeed.

House of Representatives.

Nothing important was done in the House. Mr. Briggs of N. Y. introduced a resolution of inquiry relative to the facilities for coining bullion, which was adopted. Mr. Clark of New York made a speech in favor of freedom in the Territories. Mr. Savage of Tennessee rejoined. Mr. Stanly of N. C. gave notice of a motion to stop debate on the California question.

In Senate. THIRD-DAY, May 14.

The Deficiency Appropriation Bill was reported back from the Finance Committee, with a recommendation that the House amendments be concurred in, which was agreed to.

After the transaction of the morning business, the Census Bill was taken up. Most of the House amendments were agreed to. That providing that from and after the 3d of March, 1853, the House of Representatives shall be composed of two hundred and thirty-three members, gave rise to a long discussion, but was adopted, and the Senate adjourned.

House of Representatives.

The House decided, after a sharp struggle, to close the California debate on the first Tuesday in June. Speeches were then made, in Committee of the Whole, on the California Message, by Mr. Meacham of Vt., and Mr. Julian of Ind., both in favor of prohibiting slavery in the territories.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, May 15.

After the presentation of numerous petitions, and the transaction of other morning business, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill for the admission of California and the establishment of Territorial Governments. An unsuccessful attempt was made to lay the compromise business on the table in order to take up the bill for the admission of California. After this an interesting passage took place between Hon. Jefferson Davis and Mr. Clay, the former attempting to strengthen the compromise with a new provision directly in favor of the extension of slavery into the territories. Mr. Yulee then made a speech against the compromise, and Mr. Foote another in its favor, after which the Senate adjourned.

House of Representatives.

Mr. Bayly, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported bills for the payment of of Navy pensions, and revolutionary and other pensions, which were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The principal topic of the session, however, was the letter of Sir Henry Bulwer to Mr. Clayton in relation to the trade from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast of the United States, and against certain changes in our tariff. Speeches were made by Messrs. Brooks, Calvin, and Moore, but no action was had.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, May 16.

After the presentation of petitions, and the reception of reports, the Senate took up the bill to promote the progress of the useful arts, by an amendment of the Patent Laws. But after debate and the adoption of verbal amendments, the further consideration of the bill was postponed.

The Compromise Bill then came up, and several Southern Senators, including Davis, Foote, Yulee, and Clemens, spoke upon it, some saying that it would certainly pass, and others that it never could pass. It was evident from the discussion of this day, that a compromise between Southern Senators is quite as essential as between the North and South.

Adjourned over to Second-day.

House of Representatives.

The Canadian Reciprocity Bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The letter of Sir Henry Bulwer, the British Minister, on the coasting trade and the tariff, was then divided, the Committee of Ways and Means taking the tariff part, and the Committee on Commerce the other.

The Senate's amendment to the resolution to facilitate the coinage at the Mint, was concurred in. It authorizes the transfer of such money from the Treasury as can be spared from time to time.

The Senate's amendments to the Census Bill were partially adopted, and a Committee of Conference was asked for on those which the House would not agree to.

House of Representatives. SIXTH-DAY, May 17.

With the exception of a report exculpating Mr. Horner, the door-keeper, from the charges of Mr. Brown of Mississippi, the only business before the House related to the Galphin Claim. Members of the Committee to whom that subject was referred, made four distinct reports. The majority report was read, and all were ordered printed. To one of the reports the following resolutions are attached:—

1st. Resolved, That the claim of the representatives of George Galphin, was not a just demand against the United States.

2d. Resolved, That the act of Congress made it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the principal of said claim, and it was therefore paid, in accordance with law and precedent.

3d. Resolved, That the act aforesaid did not authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay interest on said claim, and its payment was not in conformity with law and precedent.

As some of our readers may not be familiar with this "Galphin Claim," of which so much is said, we copy the following statement of the case:—

"Galphin was an Indian trader, in Georgia, who, in 1773, had a claim against the Creek Indians. They ceded their lands to the then province of Georgia. Galphin prosecuted his claim against the British Government for years without success. He next directed his attention to the Government of Georgia, but they refused to pay the claim. As soon as our Government was organized, under the Federal Constitution, the claim was presented to Congress, and was constantly before it till 1848, when an act was passed, directing the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to audit and pay the claim. They did so, and $49,000 was accordingly paid over.

"Here, it was supposed, the whole matter would rest. But Mr. Crawford, after receiving the $49,000, immediately put in a claim for interest upon it from 1773 to the time of payment, amounting to about $198,000. Mr. Secretary Walker rejected the claim for interest as unprecedented and unauthorized by law. When Gen. Taylor became President of the United States, and Mr. Crawford Secretary of War, the matter was again presented before the Cabinet. Mr. Whittlesey, the Comptroller, refused to allow the claim, in the same manner as his predecessor had done before him. Mr. Meredith, the Secretary of the Treasury, applied to the Hon. Reverdy Johnson, Attorney General, for his opinion, and he decided in favor of the legality of the claim. Mr. Meredith then ordered Mr. Whittlesey to approve it; he did so, under protest, and the $198,000 was forthwith paid. Mr. Crawford, it is said, received about $90,000 as his share."

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the steamer Hibernia, which arrived at Boston on Fifth-day last, one week later news was received from all parts of Europe.

The great event in England is the birth of another Prince to strengthen the throne of Queen Victoria. It was announced on the morning of May 1st, by the usual waste of gunpowder.

From France we have the result of the Paris election, which was in favor of the Socialist candidate, Eugene Sue, by a majority of 8,445. The efforts of the French Government to suppress the democratic papers still continue, but with no very flattering success. The French Government had received intelligence from Senegal, to the effect that an attack had been made by the natives of the Coast against the inhabitants of St. Louis. It is said that M. Lamartine and his wife set out in a few weeks for the East, and that he has expressed his determination never again to return to his native country, unless summoned by the people.

A letter from Rome, dated April 18th, says: "His Holiness has now been in Rome nearly a week, and during this period his whole time has been taken up in courtesy to French authorities and officers; and while his Holiness has refused to give audience to his Roman and personal friends, he has taken no steps whatever to alleviate the sufferings of his people. In short, it is clear that the country is to be governed with more severity than during Gregory XVI.'s worst period."

It is announced that a Republican movement has broken out in Iceland, and that the Danish Governor has been driven away. The maintenance of the commercial monopoly of Copenhagen, of which the Icelanders have long complained, is the cause of the outbreak.

A letter from Smyrna, of the 15th ult., in the Observatore Triestino, states that shocks of earthquake have become so frequent there that the ground is in a state of continual oscillation, and that many houses have already been damaged.

A shock of earthquake took place on the 14th ult., at Ragusa, which exceeded in violence and duration that of 1843, and threw the inhabitants into a perfect state of consternation.

Subscriptions have been obtained in New York for "the People's Bathing and Washing House," to the amount of twenty-two thousand dollars, aad there is no longer a reasonable doubt that it will be established. The design is to enable every person to have a bath at the bare cost of providing the needful accommodations, and to proffer to every poor family to do its washing in one-fourth the time, with less than half the labor and expense now required, while the household is saved the dirt and discomfort of "washing-day."

AMERICAN LEAGUE OF HUMAN BROTHERHOOD.—A Convention of members of this League was held at Worcester, Mass., last week, when officers for the ensuing year were elected, and interesting addresses were delivered. Elihu Burritt was chosen President; Amasa Walker, Corresponding Secretary; Thomas Drew, Jr., Recording Secretary; Anthony Chase, Treasurer; Rev. Elnathan Davis, Home Secretary and General Agent. Among the Vice Presidents we notice the name of Gerritt Smith of Peterboro. The following resolutions, expressive of the sense of the Convention, were adopted:—

Resolved, That the principles of peace are the principles of Christianity, and that it is the duty of every philanthropist, patriot and Christian, to labor for their diffusion among all communities and nations.

Resolved, That this meeting fully approves of the proceedings and objects of the recent Peace Congress at Paris, and of the proposition to hold another of the same character at Frankfort, Germany, in the month of August next.

ANOTHER CUBAN EXPEDITION.—Another expedition is said to be on foot for the overthrow of the existing Government of Cuba. Its strength is variously estimated at from 5,000 to 10,000 men, many of whom were participators in the late Mexican war. Several vessels, with men and provisions, have sailed from New Orleans and the Atlantic ports, ostensibly for Chagres and California, but really for the conquest of Cuba. Gen. Lopez is the commander of the expedition, and he counts upon the assistance of a large body of Cubans. Of course it is impossible at present to estimate the results of this undertaking, but hard fighting is looked for.

NEWSPAPER MOVEMENTS AT WASHINGTON.—"The Republic," the Administration paper at Washington, has recently been transferred from the editorial management of Messrs. Bullett and Sargent to that of Allen A. Hall, late Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, on account of personal differences between the former and members of the Cabinet. A new paper is soon to be started at Washington, it is stated, for the purpose of advocating more earnestly the interests of the South. Some seventy Southern Senators and Representatives have united in an address in favor of the measure.

HORRIBLE SUFFERING.—Joliet, Ill., May 1 Six persons from this town on their way to California were lost upon the Plains, where they suffered everything but death. Four of the lost company died, but the names of the unfortunate men who fell victims to starvation are not given. The company, it seems, left Salt Lake for California, but lost their way and wandered southward. After wandering in that dreary region for months, they struck the Pacific Ocean 400 miles south of San Francisco. The following is an extract from the letter: "We have had a severe time of it. Four months and two weeks we were lost in the wilderness—wandering around and trying to find our way out We traveled over roads where no white man had ever been before. We lost all we had—wagons, horses, oxen, cows and everything. Three months we had to live on horses and oxen. We killed them and ate them, intestines and all. Four of our company starved to death. We were six days without water. You cannot think how much we suffered." [Detroit Tribune.

JEALOUSY AND ATTEMPT TO MURDER.—In Philadelphia, on the evening of the 15th inst., a young Englishman named Richard Foote, made an attack upon a Mrs. Ann Walker, aged 18 years, wife of James Walker, at her residence, 326 South Fifth-st. He made the deadly assault upon her with a knife, inflicting eight shocking wounds upon her arms, breasts, and back. At last accounts she was in a very critical situation. Foote had been committed to prison. The cause of this murderous attack is briefly as follows: Foote was a lover of Mrs. Walker when she was unmarried. He recently left the city to work in an iron furnace. During his absence she married Walker. This was about three weeks since. Foote returned to the city some days since, became infuriated with jealousy upon hearing of her marriage, and vowed revenge. That night, according to determination, he entered her dwelling and attacked her as above described. It is extremely doubtful whether she will recover.

ARREST OF A MAYOR.—The Mayor of Pittsburgh, (says the Philadelphia North American,) appears to have a hard road to travel. Ever since he was taken from prison and inaugurated, either himself or his enemies have been constantly getting him into trouble and suits at law. His latest difficulty is stated thus by the Pittsburgh Journal: "An elderly landlord had a troublesome tenant, an old woman, whom he had long been endeavoring to get out of his house, but without success till last week, when she signed an agreement to leave. Repenting afterwards, she sent for the Mayor to protect her from ejection. The landlord sent a couple of officers to put her out with her furniture, but the Mayor appearing, endeavored to stop them. The landlord and the Mayor thereupon got to quarreling, and the result was, that the latter was arrested and bound over to keep the peace for threatening violence."

DIVORCE GRANTED ON THE GROUND OF INTEMPERANCE AND DESERTION.—In the Supreme Court, at Boston, a few days ago Elizabeth L. Crispin appeared for divorce from James Crispin. It was proved, that defendant was a man of intemperate habits, and had wholly deserted his family for about six years, and that during that space of time he had neglected to furnish them the least means of support. The evidence also proved that the wife, by her own industry and prudence, had respectably supported her family of five children, and purchased and paid for an estate which she now occupies. The Court granted the divorce, and ordered a decree to be entered securing to her the said estate.

COST OF RIOTS IN PHILADELPHIA.—The Philadelphia Inquirer says: From official sources we learn that the following sums have been paid by the county of Philadelphia for riots, pay of military and civil posse, since the year 1842 up to 1849, inclusive:

1842	Lombard and St. Mary-st. riots,	$6,368 50
4843	Kensington, pay of military, &c.,	790 96
1843	Harper's brick yard,	22 50
1845	Damages from riots, pay of military &c.	35,301 23
1846	Riot in Southwark, 1844,	7,647 91
1846	Riot in Kensington, 1844,	23,421 66
1847	Claims of troops,	8,000 00
1848	Judgment for damages in late riots,	53,498 69
1849	do. do. do.	34,815 59
	Total	$174,366 84

SEA RACE.—The Sea Witch and Samuel Russel, two of our finest clippers in the Canton trade, sailed, the former on the 13th and the latter on the 9th of April, for California. Considerable excitement exists as to their relative arrivals at San Francisco. The Samuel Russel was spoken 32 days out, and had then run about 6,000 miles. The Sea Witch has not been heard of since she left. The Sea Witch has made the fastest time on record, having been from the port of Canton to the port of New-York in 76 days. The Samuel Russel is a fine vessel and has proved herself since her sailing to be a "racer." [Tribune.

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.—The Mercantile Library has received from James Lenox, Esq., a beautifully-printed copy of Washington's Farewell Address, being a literal copy of that renowned document, prefaced by two finely-engraved portaits after the pictures of Peale and Stuart. Appended are the statement of Mr. Claypole and some other documents showing the history of the Address. It will be recollected that Mr. Lenox was the purchaser (last winter) of the original manuscript of this Address, for the sum of $2,500, we believe. He has caused to be printed 54 copies folio, and 175 quarto, which are intended for presents only.

FIRE AT CORNING, N. Y.—A letter to the N. Y. Tribune, dated at Corning, Steuben Co., N. Y., May 18, says:—"This morning at 11½, the wind blowing from the northwest, a fire originated in the Corning and Blossburg Dépôt, which has consumed all the business portion of our village from the Clinton House to the lower end of the village, destroying property to the amount of over Three Hundred Thousand Dollars. There is not a store, grocery, bank or any other building left, except two public houses and what few private residences there were in the west end of the village.

SUMMARY.

The brig Silenus, from Cape Haytien, brings dates to the 21st April, confirming the previous intelligence of the confinement of Mr. Wilson, the American Consular Agent there. The cause of his imprisonment was the breaking of the Custom-House seals of a vessel, for the purpose of saving some coffee in a lighter from a coming storm. The French Consul interfered and obtained his release. Mr. Wilson has left for Port-au-Prince, where the matter was to undergo an investigation.

Intelligence was received in St. Joseph's, Mo., April 25, from the Bluffs, that there are about 3,000 teams for California at that point, and that they are continually arriving in large numbers—that everything necessary for the emigrant is extremely high, and the supplies almost completely exhausted. Corn is selling at $2,25 per bushel, flour $5 per hundred, and other articles necessary for an outfit in the same proportion.

A dispatch from N. O., dated May 11, says, that during the past few days considerable quantities of arms and ammunition have been received and several vessels have left with men, artillery, &c., ostensibly for Chagres, but supposed bound for the invasion of Cuba. Yesterday the Spanish Consul offered $6,000 for the charter of a steamer to convey dispatches to Cuba. The owners, however, refused, and the Consul then sent them in a fast schooner.

A letter was received at Washington, May 14th, announcing that the slaves in Union Township, Monroe Co., Va., had planned for an insurrection and murder of all the white inhabitants of the place, when they would escape to Ohio. The thing, however, was frustrated by a negro girl, who gave information concerning the plot, and sixty of the slaves were arrested and placed in confinement.

At Nashua, N. H., recently, a man named Hart Allen, between 40 and 50 years of age, who has a wife and a large family of children living, took a cord, and placing it about the neck of his youngest child, who was sleeping in bed, strangled it; and then took his own life by hanging himself. No motive but insanity can be assigned for the deed.

Letters have been received from Nicaragua to the 22d of April, which state that the States of Honduras, Nicaragua, and San Salvador, indignant at the aid given the rebels in Gautemala, in the late attempt at revolution, had raised an army of 5,000 men, and were about to march upon that country. The whole of Central America was quite unsettled.

Land Warrants are dull and fluctuating. Operators do not feel disposed to move in them until Congress either passes or gives the quietus to the Land Donation project, now before that body. Should a bill pass giving a quarter section of land to every actual settler, these Warrants would probably fall to $50 each, whereas, if the project should be killed, they would rise to $160 or $170 each. So says the Tribune.

At the recent session of the Legislature of Rhode Island, five bank charters were granted, one in Providence, one in Phenix Village, one in Coventry, one in Richmond, and one in Hopkinton. The first is to start with a capital of $100,000, the others with capitals of $50,000, and all with liberty to increase.

A large number of drum-fish, says the Snow Hill (Md.) Shield, are to be found dead in different parts of the Synepuxent Bay. When harpooned they bleed as freely as when alive, which would seem to indicate the torpor of some disease rather than death.

The Boston Traveller states that the City Registrar, from data in his office, says that about sixteen births, five marriages, and ten deaths, occur daily in that city.

Six trains of cars leave Albany for the West every day, as follows:—

1st. 7½ A. M.—Express train—in 13 hours.
2d. 9 A. M.—Way-Mail train.
3d. 11½ A.M.—Emigrant and Freight train.
4th. 2 P. M.—Accommodation train.
5th.5 P.M.—NewExpress train—13 hours.
6th. 8 P. M.—Accommodation train.

The Havana (Chemung Co., N. Y.) Journal of May 4, gives the particulars of a fatal affray beteen a young man about 17 years old, named Horace Bailey, and a number of drunken Irishmen. It seems that a dispute arose, in the course of which Bailey was attacked, and drew a revolver, with which he shot two of his assailants dead. He has delivered himself up to the authorities, and is generally regarded as having acted in self-defense.

The ship Andalusia, Capt. Wilson, arrived at Baltimore on the 6th inst. from California. The A. sailed from Baltimore on the 19th of April, 1849, for California, with a full cargo of goods and a large number of passengers, and has been absent one year and seventeen days. She is the second merchant ship that has returned from California.

The ordinary revenues of the United States for the quarter ending March 31, are, as reported officially, $12,923,984—a larger sum than ever before collected, and this sum has exceeded the current expenditure for the quarter by more than three and a half millions of dollars.

The Providence Journal says that the sales of printing cloths in that city for the week ending May 11 have been larger than ever before known. One hundred and twenty-eight thousand pieces have been sold at a decided improvement in price.

Mrs. Frances Sargent Osgood, (wife of S. S. Osgood, the artist,) a lady very widely known as an authoress, died in New-York, on Sunday, May 12, of consumption, aged 37 years.

The Detroit papers say that there never was a period in Michigan when the wheat crop gave a fairer promise than at present, and there is every ground to expect that the yield will be abundant, and of the best quality.

New York has made it an offense, punishable by imprisonment or a heavy fine, for a telegraph operator, clerk or messenger, to divulge the contents of a private message, or refuse or neglect to transmit or deliver the same.

On Wednesday, May 15, says the Milwaukie (Wis.) Sentinel, the Milwaukie Female Seminary will be reorganized under the name of the "Milwaukie Normal Institute and High School," and go into operation on a plan proposed by Miss Beecher.

There was recently a great freshet on Black River in the vicinity of Watertown, which destroyed several buildings, carried off a good many saw-logs, and did damage to the amount of some thirty thousand dollars.

Two fatal cases of Cholera occurred at St. Louis, on Monday, May 13. The interments in 12 Cemeteries for the week were 94, of which 27 were Cholera.

There was a severe frost in Portland on Saturday, May 11, and the ground in many places was frozen as though it was midwinter.

The fare on the Auburn and Syracuse Road has been raised 20 per cent. which has caused some surprise in that part of the country.

It is said that the through fare between New York and Boston, by the Norwich route, will be reduced in a few days from $4 to $2 50.

A fine specimen of the Glossy Ibis was shot near Fresh Pond, in Cambridge, Mass., on Wednesday last.

More than ten thousand emigrants, from all parts of Europe, arrived at New York in the week ending May 16, 1850.

Western Association.

THE attention of the churches of the Seventh-day Baptist Western Association is called to the subject of their annual correspondence with that body. The plan of that correspondence has not been rendered sufficiently definite, the result of which has been, that we have failed to elicit from that source much that it would be desirable to bring before the Association respecting the labors and condition of the churches. It will be seen, by a reference to the Minutes of the last Session, that a Committee was appointed, "to prepare and present to the churches instructions in regard to matters deemed proper to be reported in their letters." The report of the Committee, with an amendment of the Association is published in the Minutes. It is very desirable that the letters presented at the approaching Anniversary, should, as far as practicable, conform to that plan. A fear that the subject might be overlooked by some of the churches has prompted the publication of this notice. T. E. BABCOCK, Cor. Sec.

Western Association.

THE Seventh-day Baptist Western Association will hold its Fifteenth Anniversary with the church in Friendship, Allegany Co., N. Y., commencing on the Fourth-day before the fourth Sabbath in June (19th day of the month,) 1850.

The churches are requested to "lay by them in store as God has prospered them," that it may be forwarded to the Annual Meeting for the purpose of liquidating the debt incurred by the Executive Board in the associational mission.

Christian Psalmody—Pocket Edition.

IN compliance with requests from various quarters, the publisher of the New Hymn Book—Christian Psalmody—has issued a second edition, on lighter paper and with smaller margins, by which the bulk and weight of the books are reduced about one-third, rendering them much more convenient for carrying in the pocket. The price is also reduced 12½ cents per copy. Those wishing books, of either edition, can now be supplied. Price of the larger edition from 75 cents to $1 50, according to the style of binding. Price of the smaller edition from 62½ cents to $1 00. Orders should be addressed to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Central Association.

THE next session of the Seventh-day Baptist Central Association will be held with the Church at Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in June, (5th day of the month,) 1850.

North-Western Association.

THE North-Western Seventh-day Baptist Association will hold its annual session with the Church at Milton, Rock Co., Wis., commencing on Thursday, the 4th day of July next. Eld. Stillman Coon is to preach the introductory discourse. S. C. BURDICK, Rec. Sec.

FOR BOSTON, VIA NEWPORT AND FALL RIVER, by the splendid and superior steamers BAY STATE and EMPIRE STATE, of great strength and speed, particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound, running in connection with the Fall River and Old Colony Railroad, a distance of 53 miles, to Boston only. Leave Pier No. 3 North River, near the Battery. The steamer EMPIRE STATE, Capt. Comstock, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 5 P. M. The BAY STATE, Capt. Brown, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 5 P. M. This line is the only one that runs direct for Newport. For freight or passage apply on board, and either to TISDALE BORDEN, 70 Wall-st. or at the office of the Line, at the corner of Washington-st. and Battery-place.

Central Railroad of New Jersey.

Summer Arrangement, commencing April 1, 1850.

PASSENGER TRAIN UP.—Passengers will leave New York by steamboat from pier 1 North River, or by the New Jersey Railroad, foot of Cortland-st., at 9 A. M. and 5 P. M.; leave Elizabethtown at 10 A. M. and 6 P. M.

PASSENGER TRAIN DOWN.—Leave White House at 5.45 A. M. and 1.45 P. M.; North Branch at 5.55 A. M. and 1.55 P. M.; Somerville at 6.10 A. M. and 2.10 P. M.; Bound Brook at 6.20 A. M. and 2.20 P. M.; Plainfield at 6.40 A. M. and 2.40 P. M.; Westfield at 6.55 A. M. and 3 P. M.; Elizabethtown at 7.15 and 10.30 A. M. and 3.20 P. M.

The freight train (with passenger cars attached) will leave White House at 3.30 A. M., Somerville at 4.30, Plainfield at 5.15, and Elizabethport, by steamboat, at 7.30 A. M. Returning, leave New York, by steamboat Red Jacket, from pier 1 North River, at 1 P. M.

History of Romanism.

In a large octavo volume of 750 pages, printed in large type, on the finest paper, and embellished with more than fifty engravings, chiefly from Original Designs, and bound in muslin, extra gilt. Price $3. THE HISTORY OF ROMANISM, from its earliest origin to the present time, by the Rev. John Dowling, D. D. A new and enlarged edition, with the Author's last additions, and a Supplement, containing a Sketch of the Life of Pope Pius IX., &c.

The best evidence of the intrinsic value of this remarkably popular work is to be seen in the fact that within the comparatively recent period of its first publication, the extraordinary number of 17,000 copies have been disposed of.

The following is an extract from a letter from the Rev. Dr. Giustiniani, the converted Roman Catholic priest, who is abundantly qualified by education, observation, and extensive study, to testify to the fidelity and value of a "History of Romanism."

"If the reader wishes to be acquainted with the errors of Romanism, he has only to open the pages of Dowling's History. If the reader is anxious to read an epitome of the history of the popes, their ambition; their intrigues; their avariciousness; their tyranny; their superstitions, and their mummeries, he can here find all proved and authenticated by the most accredited authors of the Church of Rome." L. GIUSTINIANI.

"It reflects much credit on the skill, patience, industry, and judgment of the author; he appears very justly to have conceived the idea of a work, which has long been regarded as a desideratum by a large portion of those interested in the great controversy with the Romanists."—Protestant Churchman.

"We regard it as a most important addition to the historical and religious literature of the age. Its contents form a rich storehouse of historical instruction, which should be placed within the reach of every family."—N. Y. Christian Intelligencer.

"It presents a succienct, but sufficiently full, history of the rise, progress, errors, cruelties, and present condition of the Papacy, authenticated by reference to the most undoubted historic sources, related in a spirited, engaging, and impressive style, and arranged in the most lucid manner. It abounds in facts and incidents, and, with its beautiful illustrations, is better adapted to furnish a vivid and impressive portraiture of Romanism as it is, than any other book we know of."—N. Y. Evang.

"The detached portions of Romish history, which were every where to be met with, needed to be brought together and presented in systematic order. The reading of one book thus becomes better and cheaper than the reading of many."—Boston Recorder.

"It is written with the ready, popular eloquence, for which the well-known author is distinguished, and cannot fail to arrest attention to the controversy of which it treats. It is a strongly Protestant work, and exhibits the deformities of Popery with great power."—N. Y. Recorder.

THE ERUPTION OF VESUVIUS.

The following vivid description of the late eruption of Vesuvius, is by a correspondent of a London paper.

The insufferable dullness and gloom which have reigned in this fair city for some weeks past, malgré the Carnival and the usual balls and gaieties, have at last been dispelled by the excitement caused by one of the finest eruptions of Mount Vesuvius ever known. For some twelve or fourteen days, the mountain has been in labor, giving manifest indications, by groans and wailings, of bringing forth speedily something more than a mouse. On the 6th, volumes of smoke and vapor, with occasional sheets of flame, were succeeded, from time to time, by awful subterranean rumblings; and, on the morning of the 7th, the lava made its appearance, running down the mountain, on the side of Torre Annunziata, in seven or eight distinct streams. On the evening of the latter day, a party of us ascended to the hermitage, and thence, on foot, with guides and torches, to the cone, from whence a fine view was obtained of the lava at a white heat, and it was pumped out of the crater, and thence bent its way in the direction of Pompeii and the Bosco Reale. This ascent was very fatiguing and disagreeable, and one of the party had a narrow escape from fracturing a limb by a fall. During the night of the 8th, the roaring and bellowing of the crater kept most people from enjoying their rest, and on the whole of the 9th, volumes of smoke, lava, and vapor, together with huge stones and serriæ were ejected without intermission. On the evening of this day, a special train was announced to leave Naples at six o'clock, for Torre Annunziata, returning at eleven. About 400 natives and foreigners availed themselves of this opportunity; and a strong party of Inglesi, with guides and torches, and mules and donkeys, proceeded from the station at Torre Annunziata to the Bosco Reale, which is about five miles, through narrow lanes and country roads. There was no cause for apprehension, however, as the Government had taken care to send strong bodies of troops, both horse and foot, for the protection of life and property, and the preservation of order. The sight that met our view on our arrival at the Bosco was grand in the extreme. The lava presented a frontage of at least a mile and a half, and was advancing slowly, but steadily and surely, and devouring everything in its way. On the road we had met parties of poor peasants carrying beds, chairs, pots, pans, and other moveable furniture, which they had been able to save from the devouring liquid; the women and children rending the air with their cries and supplications to San Gennaro, the patron saint of these parts. These poor wretches were thrown on the world homeless and pennyless.

By the time of our arrival, which was about nine o'clock, the lava had taken complete possession of the wood, having devoured about half of it. At times a row of three or four hundred saplins caught fire simultaneously, producing a vivid flame that lighted up the country for miles around. Some splendid full-grown ilex, oak, and ash trees, offered in their ponderous trunks a momentary resistance; but it was to no purpose, the larger ones generally exploding with a loud report and a leap of twelve or fourteen feet in the air, to be consumed like tinder on their descent. It was curious to observe, when, from a sudden rush of lava, which always occurred after a temporary obstruction, how the larger trees gave out tens of thousands of little jets of steam from the knees and elbows of the smaller branches. It was owing to the roots and trunks coming immediately and suddenly in contact with the lava, and before the whole tree had had a preparatory roasting previously to its final combustion. In these cases the tree generally exploded; those, on the contrary, that had had their initiatory grilling, generally bowed their heads slowly and majestically, dying, like Cæsar, in their dignity. As this novel and brilliant spectacle quite absorbed our attention, the majority of us lost the return train to Naples, and decided to pass the night on the spot. There was no moon, but the stars shone clearly, and the sky was cloudless; a cold tremontana, however, on one side, and the insupportable heat of the advancing furnace on the other, made it necessary for us to keep revolving from time to time like bottle-jacks before the lava, to obviate being frozen on one side and baked on the other. At about three o'clock in the morning the eruption was at its hight. The amount of lava was quintupled, and the masses of stones which shot up into the air descended with a reverberating crash. It was the discharge of these stones which caused a noise that rendered our voices inaudible. I can only compare it to the concussion produced by the broadside of a three-decker. The ground at times trembled under our feet, and a wailing, sobbing, distressing sound, seemed to indicate that Nature was undergoing a horrible subterranean convulsion; and thus gave vent to the "throes and throbs" of her agony. At about four o'clock the destroyer advanced to a farm-house and outbuilding, which seemed, from their solidity, being built of rubble stone, and joined with the well-known Roman cement, likely to offer a stout resistance. And here the lava seemed to be endowed with consciousness and instinct. No sooner did it feel the momentary check than it commenced rising like the water in the lock of a canal, and from being at its arrival about twelve feet deep, speedily arose to about thirty; and attacking the bomb-shaped solid stone roof of the main building, and at the same time running in at the windows and doors, caused a rarification and condensation of air, that made the whole concern sauter with a terrific report.

A still more interesting and affecting spectacle was presented about an hour after, by the destruction of a small church, embosomed in this hapless wood. The lava here, as at the farm, had a rather tough job, from the extreme solidity of the edifice; and, with a sort of instinct and conscious pride in its own irresistible power, it dashed forward to the attack, despite the moans and chants of a parcel of Franciscan friars connected with the church, and of the mute sorrow of the poor curé. The ornaments of the altar, together with the pictures, statues, and finery of the Virgin and the patron saints, and the parish records, had all been removed; but the incessant entreaties of the curé failed to induce his parishioners to put their shoulders to two fine doors and lift them off their hinges to a place of security, which they could easily have done. The bells also might have been saved with little exertion. No; the Virgin or the patron saint would either appear corporeally, that is, visibly, and stop the sacrilegious destroyer, or the edifice would resist and go scathless. From time to time the bells were tolled mournfully, and curé, monks, and parishioners, chanted the funeral dirge of the sacred edifice where most of them had been baptized, and which was associated with all the prominent parts of their little secluded lives. The lava here insinuated itself into the crypt of the building, thereby undermining it so that it was literally a "temple rent in twain," the two nearly equal portions of which rocked and tottered to their base, and then fell—belfry, bells, and all, into the burning gulf. Several passages of the "Inferno" of Dante were called to recollection this night, and the divine poet ably describes what here palpably and tangibly represented hell though upon earth. For half an hour an intense dark green flame played over where once stood the doomed edifice, caused perhaps by the fusion of the bell-metal below. In other parts blue flames of various degrees of intensity and depth of color played and flickered about. All night parties arrived from Naples, who had missed the train; and the wood was glittering with torches approaching and receding in the distance. The arrival of a large body of priests, mounted on all the available jackasses and mules in the neighborhood for miles round, caused an immense sensation among the rustics, as there was little doubt that these worthy men would soon settle the business of the ruthless enemy, and put things to rights; so to it they went, clergy and laity; and on our departure from this scene of desolation and woe, the welkin resounded with the exertions of some hundreds of pairs of lungs. Much of the beauty of the effect faded on the approach of daylight, and when we left, which was at exactly half-past six in the morning, the lurid glare and vivid brilliancy of the lava was succeeded by a black carbonaceous dullness, with only here and there a deep red glow; the volume of lava had also diminished, and the crater was hushed. Nature seemed to have a slight intermission of her pangs, to be resumed the following evening.

On our return to Naples, we learned that a tragedy of another and a more sanguinary kind had been enacting elsewhere during the night. Hundreds visited the crater itself, and the mountain was literally dotted with little bright star-like points, ascending and flitting like will-o'-th'-wisps. The effect was picturesque in the extreme. A party of American officers of the squadron here, with characteristic and national rashness and curiosity, approached too near, and one of the officers, a fine, handsome young fellow, received a mass of hot calcareous matter on the right shoulder, which stripped the flesh to the bone as far as the elbow. There was no actual fracture, but the hemorrhage was so violent, and so long a time elapsed before he received proper medical aid, that he lies with little hope of recovery. But another accident, within ten yards of the same spot, and almost at the same time, terminated fatally. The victim of his rashness was a Polish officer, who received a mass of stone of some tons weight on the left thigh, which caused a compound fracture, and there he lay and bled to death, his blood running down into the very crater itself, where it boiled, and hissed, and steamed. A Neapolitan gentleman, who related the particulars to us, nearly lost his life, in his exertions to bring the body down the side of the mountain, for at the time the lava and stones fell in all directions thick and fast. Another individual, a native, had the dexter side of his lower jaw completely removed by a stone, which was shot obliquely out of the crater, while he was stretching over peering into its fiery depths. The catalogue of contusions, abrasions, and lesions on that eventful night would nearly fill one of your columns.

MANUFACTURE OF RAZORS.

The manufacture of razors, like that of surgical instruments, is one of the highest branches of cutlery handicraft, on which the very superior workmen are employed. They are made of rods of cast steel, half an inch broad, and just as thick as a razor's back, which rods are first attacked at "the razor forge." To manage the operation, two men are required—a maker and a striker. The maker manages, with his left hand, the rod, glowing red, while he uses the hammer with his right; and the striker wields a sledge hammer, delivering his strokes alternately with those given by the maker. The sounds issuing from the smithies where these double hammers are at work (weighing respectively 3¾ lbs. and 7 lbs.) have not only found commemoration in Handel's "Harmonious Blacksmith," but in the poems of one of our poets, who dwells over

Vulcan's strong sons, who, with nervous arms around
The steady anvil, and the glaring mass,
Clatter their heavy hammers down by turns,
Flattening the steel.

The anvil for razors is a little rounded at the sides, which enables the forger to give the blade a thinner edge, and thereby save the grinder much trouble. The razor blades, as soon as they leave the anvil, are hardened by being heated to a white heat, and then immersed in cold water. They are next tempered by being laid side by side, with their edges upward, with a flat iron plate over the fire until they have acquired a yellow brown color, which leaves them still very hard. The grinder now takes possession of them, and in his hands they are subjected to three operations—grinding, glazing and polishing. From the concavity of the razor blades, they must, of necessity, be ground upon stones of very small diameter; and the object of grinding the blades upon one of four inches is to impart to the edge or cutting side a uniform thinness of a certain width that shall supersede the necessity of grinding after use. Indeed, we consider a razor that requires grinding to be no longer fit for office; it ought to be cast off like an old coat, or superannuated and exempt from further work, like a broken down exciseman; or else, like an old blood-horse in a dung cart, condemned, when worn out, to serve a less noble office, that of cutting corns. As razors, like most cutting instruments, require a certain temper, they are ground on a whetstone, which has its trough filled with water sufficiently that the edge of the stone may, as it passes, just touch the water's surface. The next operation is glazing, which consists of applying successively emery of different degrees of fineness, until the article is rendered as smooth as it can possibly be made by such means. The tool for glazing is composed of a circular body of wood, formed of many pieces put together in such a manner that the edge of the instrument always presents the end of the wood. The pieces, are placed in this position in order that the contraction of the materials may not destroy the circular figure, which would otherwise be the case, as the wood contracts laterally. The surface of the glazing tool is prepared for use by first touching it with a sharpened hammer, and then filling up the notches with emery and tallow. Polishing is next performed by means of a circular piece of wood covered with buff leather, which, from time to time, the workman covers with the brown-redoxide of iron, called crocus. The speed of the glazing instrument in its rotation, is about fifteen hundred feet in a second, which is more than double that of the grinding stone. The speed of the polishing tool is much less than the latter, being not more than seventy or eighty feet in a second. [Domestic Economist.

MORE 'RAPPINGS'—SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.

The following letter appeared in the New York Tribune of the 14th inst., accompanied with a remark by the editor, that he has a private note, from a reliable source, assuring him of the sincerity and honesty of the relators mentioned, and that whenever he ascertains, by unquestionable live-men's testimony, that Sir John Franklin is confined at Yongtong, or any other inland city on the island of Niphon, he shall believe in the spiritual origin and essential verity of the 'Rappings.'

SCOTT, Cortland Co., N. Y., Wednesday, May 1.

Last evening, a number of young people were assembled at the house of Mr. Cottrell, in this town, for the purpose of conversing with the spirit rapping; and as Mr. Cottrell and myself had held communications with the spirit in regard to the origin of the Aborigines of this country, we proceeded to ask a few questions at this time—to all of which we received satisfactory answers; and, after conversing upon various interesting subjects, the conversation turned upon the fate and whereabouts of Sir John Franklin, about whom so much interest has been manifested by all civilized nations, but whose fate has up to this time been shrouded in mystery. The first question asked was, "Is he yet living?" to which we received an affirmative answer. "Is he where the Esquimaux reported that they saw him?"—'No.' "Did he find a North-West Passage, and sail through Bhering's Straits?" 'Yes.' The question was then asked if the spirit would spell out the name of the place where he is at present; and it spelled out Yongtong, which we found out by further inquiries was a city situated 70 miles from Jeddo, on the south-western coast of the island of Niphon, the largest of the Japanese group. The spirit revealed that, after experiencing almost unparalleled hardships in finding a passage, he had gone to the island for the purpose of trading with the natives; that he was attacked by them, and, after an obstinate resistance, in which part of his men were killed, himself and the remainder were taken prisoners. They were placed in close confinement, where they have been 11 months, and are treated with the greatest cruelty and insult.

To all who are acquainted with the character of the Japanese, the treatment of Sir John and his crew is not a matter of wonder, as it is well known that they will neither trade nor hold communication with any Christian nation except the Dutch, while to the English they appear to owe a particular hatred. As regards the city of Yongtong, its distance from Jeddo, or whether it in reality exists, we have no means at present of ascertaining, but presume those better acquainted with the geography of those islands will be able to tell.

The spirit with whom we held these communications purported to be that of Daniel Cottrell, a sea-captain and brother of Peleg Cottrell, at whose house the rappings are heard. He had visited almost every quarter of the earth, and, being a studious observer of men and things, was consequently a man of extensive information—a man acknowledged by those who knew him to be of a kind, benevolent disposition, ever ready to do what he could for the cause of Humanity, being the same disposition which he manifests now, as he has in several cases prescribed remedies for the sick, and appears ever ready and willing to advise those who aak it in sincerity of heart.

Placing implicit confidence as we do in the truth of these revelations, we deemed it to be our [illegible], and due to the cause of Humani[illegible] make them known to the public.

ADVENTURES OF AN EMIGRANT GIRL.

A story is told by the Glasgow Saturday Post, of the adventures of a young lady, Miss Mary Brown. She was daughter of a gentleman lately dead, and inherited a small property from him, on which she lived. Her only near relative in Glasgow was a "ne'er do weel" brother, a cab-driver, who, having himself been disinherited, constantly teased her and extorted money from her. Having friends in America, she determined to emigrate, and took her passage by the "City of Glasgow" steamer. Her brother, disappointed and vexed at her intended departure, formed a scheme to detain her. A trumpery claim was reared up, and a meditatione fugæ warrant applied for. This he swore to, and got the warrant. Armed with this authority, and attended by two sheriff officers, he watched the sailing of the vessel. Miss Brown, with her friends, was on board; they remained with her till the signal for sailing was given, and bidding her farewell, they went on shore, and walked down the quay. Now was the cab-driver's opportunity; seeing his sister deserted by her friends, and no help to hand, he sneaked on board the vessel, and caused her to be apprehended in presence of the passengers, the ship's crew, and the immense multitude of on-lookers. In vain did she remonstrate against such shameful conduct—violence was resorted to, and she was dragged on shore, and refusing to listen to their proposals for letting her off, she was carried to Sheriff Bell. The sheriff, after hearing the case, detected the trick, and dismissed the case. She left the sheriff's office, and met her friends; she was freed from her tormentors. A new dilemma now arose. The vessel had sailed—Miss Brown's passage was paid, and all her luggage on board. To overtake the vessel seemed hopeless, but still she was resolved to make the attempt. Hiring a cab, she drove to the Greenock Railway station, and finding a train on the point of starting, was speedily conveyed to Greenock. Fresh misfortunes seemed to arise—the "City of Glasgow" steamer had passed Greenock nearly half an hour before the arrival of the train, and was seen slowly steaming past Gourock. A Gourock steamer was leaving the quay, and Miss Brown went on board of it. The Gourock steamer was rapidly overhauling the huge "City of Glasgow," when all on a sudden the latter was seen to "bout ship," and steam towards Greenock. The cause of this sudden change arose from an accident which happened to the oil cistern on board. A steam tug was dispatched to Greenock for a fresh supply of oil, and hence the delay which proved so fortunate for the persecuted orphan. Taking a small boat, Miss Brown was rowed towards the vessel, and received on board amid the cheers of the passengers. A new matter of consternation now arose; the captain, thinking she would not get away, had landed all her luggage at Greenock, and there was no hope of getting it. Farther vexation was put an end to by the return of the tug carrying the oil, with all Miss Brown's luggage on board. Certain friends at Greenock had seen her luggage on the quay, and forwarded with the tug. Thus were all farther impediments happily got over.

TRAVELING IN MEXICO.

The style of diligence travel in Mexico is preferable to that of any other country. The passenger is waked at three o'clock in the morning and has a cup of chocolate brought him, (and no one has drank chocolate who has not drank it here,) takes his seat, and has nearly reached the end of the second post by sunrise. The heavy stage, of Troy manufacture, is drawn by six horses, four leaders abreast, who go on a dashing gallop as long as the road is level. About 11 o'clock a breakfast of six or eight courses is served up in good style, the coachman waiting until the last man has leisurely finished. There is no twang of the horn, and cry of "All ready!" before one has bolted the first mouthful. Off again, there is no stoppage till the day's journey is over, which is generally about four o'clock, allowing ample time for a long walk and sight-seeing before dinner.

The fare from Guadalajara to Mexico—500 miles and six day's journey—is $60, and the traveling expenses $2,75 per day. One is partly reconciled to this enormous price by the admirable order and exactness observed on the line, and the superior accommodations with which he is treated The originator and total proprietor of the lines, Senor Zurutza, has amassed a fourtune of nigh one million of dollars from his profits. In their administration, he administers a singular industry and energy, presenting the most marked contrast to the state of affairs in all other departments of this mis-managed Republic. He is a Biscayan by birth, but looks the portly Englishman more than the Spaniard. [Bayard Taylor.

PEMBINA.

Old folks, brush up your memories, and young folks, get down your maps, and tell us where Pembina is. Musical name, isn't it?

Well, go up the Mississippi, make a wake through Lake Pepin, hear the evening gun from Fort Snelling—up till up till away through the woods on your left glitter the waters of the Elk Lake—on, till your canoe glides into the Itasca, the birthplace of the Mississippi, and then, hurrâ for the Red River! Up you go, till you hear the murmur of the Lake of the Woods on the east, and the hum of Selkirk's Settlement is wafted to the ear by the north-western wind, and just there, in latitude 49 and longitude 29 west, five hundred miles from St. Paul's, is Pembina! The inhabitants of this remote settlement are half-breeds, a cross of Indian and French, as happy as the day is long, and affording a lively instance of the well-known affinity of the French men for the Indian women. This association of the two races favors the side of civilization more than barbarism; therefore the Pembinas are civilized. They live in houses; they use carts, and raise grain. Yet the circumstances of their location, or a lingering of the Indian instinct, lead them to find their chief subsistence in the chase. Their arms are guns; their dress is half way between that of the whites and the Indians. They wear wild-looking fur caps, blanket coats, pants secured around the waist by a belt, and deer-skin moccasins. Their complexion is swarthy, their hair and eyes black. Their language is an impure French, though all probably talk Indian besides.

"Falls of St. Anthony ring on the ear"—

In the Spring they put a small patch of ground in seed, and pack off to the buffalo plains for the chase. In the Winter they hunt for furs. These are their articles of export. As soon as the roads are dry in the Spring, a caravan starts off for St. Paul's, with these articles for the purpose of trade.

The equipage is novel and curious. A single ox is harnessed into the thills of a cart, with a collar and pad, as we harness a horse. The cart has high wheels, without a particle of iron about any part. Circular strips of green hide are stretched around the ends of the hubs, so that when the skin becomes dry it makes a tight band. A low covering of linen cloth is hooped over the top of the cart, which suits the squatting posture of the women and children, who sometimes come too, and it serves for a canopy at night.

Frequently a caravan of this people is seen coming into St. Paul's, strung along some twenty in number. The journey occupies fifty-five days.

These people, says the Minnesota Pioneer, are simple-hearted, and accounted as citizens of the Territory, entitled to vote and hold office. [Hallowell Gazette.

The cost of the eleven principal railways in England is £59,915 per mile, or nearly $298,750 per mile. At this rate, the "Erie" would have cost the trifling sum of ($130,000,000) one hundred and thirty millions of dollars!

EXTENT OF EARTHQUAKES.

The undulations of some of the great earthquakes have spread to an enormous extent. The earthquake that happened in 1842 in Gaudaloupe, was felt over an extent of 3,000 miles in length; and that which destroyed Lisbon had its origin in the bed of the Atlantic, from whence the shock extended over an area of about 700,000 square miles, or a twelfth part of the circumference of the globe; the West Indian Islands, and the lakes in Scotland, Norway, and Sweden, were agitated by it. In linear distance, the effects of that earthquake extended through 3,000 miles, the shocks were felt through a line of 2,700 miles, and the vibrations or tremors were perceptible in water through 4,000 miles. It began without warning, and in five minutes the city was a heap of ruins.

The earthquake of 1783, in Calabria, which completely changed the face of the country, only lasted two minutes; but it was not very extensive, yet all the towns and villages for 22 miles round the small town of Oppido were utterly ruined. The destruction is generally accomplished in a fearfully short time; the earthquake at Caracas, in March, 1812, consisted of three or four seconds, separated by such short intervals that in 50 seconds 10,000 people perished. Baron Humboldt's works are full of interesting details on this subject, especially with regard to the tremendous convulsions in South America.

Sometimes a shock has been perceived under-ground, which was not felt at the surface, as in the year 1802, in the silver-mines of Marienberg, in the Hartz. In some instances miners have been insensible to shocks felt on the surface above, which happened at Fahlun, in Sweden, in 1823—circumstances in both instances depending on the elasticity of the strata, the depth of the impulse, or obstacles that may have changed the course of the terrestrial undulation. Variety.

On the blade of the pocket-knife taken from Professor Webster are two mottos; on one side, "Do unto others as you would that others should do unto you;" on the other side, "When an opportunity offers itself to do a good act, never fail to improve it." How many bright young hopes have been crushed by the simple violation of that "golden rule," which, instead of gleaming from the little steel blade, should have been engraven upon the heart of its owner.

Foreign papers state that at the funeral of the Danish poet Oehlenschlager, who expired lately of apoplexy, in the eighty-first year of his age, upward of twenty thousand persons were present. The streets through which the procession passed were strewed with sand and green boughs, and the houses hung out black flags hemmed with silver.

It has been so cold in Kamtschatka the past winter, that the governor was compelled to quit his usual residence, and retire to his subterranean palace, which is twenty French metres below the surface of the ground. It seems all the wealthy people of that country have under-ground dwellings, which they resort to in very cold weather.

When Judge Peters of Pennsylvania was Speaker of the House of Assembly, one of the members, in crossing the room, tripped on the carpet and fell. The house burst into laughter, while the Judge, with the utmost gravity, cried, "Order, order, gentlemen, a member is on the floor!"

Recently a man at Aston, near Thame, was leading a cart-horse, when the animal caught him in his mouth and threw him down, and then knelt upon him until the breath was quite out of his body. The poor fellow was quite dead when he was taken up.

Punch says that the reason why editors are so apt to have their manners spoiled, is because they receive, from one correspondent and another, such a vast number of evil communications.

Some ignorant and infatuated persons in Cardington, Rushbury, and other parishes, says an English provincial paper, are signing a petition to the Almighty to chain the Devil!

An excellent epitaph was given many years ago, in few words, on the tomb-stone of an elderly lady:—"She was always busy—and always quiet."

Don't try too hard to be happy. Many run about after felicity, like an absent man hunting for his hat, while it is in his hand or on his head.

Proud men never have friends; neither in prosperity, because they know nobody; nor in adversity, because then nobody knows them.

Eclectic Magazine for the Year 1850.

THE Eclectic Magazine of Foreign Literature, Science, and Art, aims to present to its readers a complete survey of the whole field of British Periodical Literature, comprising the selections of all the articles of the most able and celebrated Reveiws, Magazines, and Journals, which have any interest or value to American readers. It not only contains the articles which are desirable in those periodicals reprinted in this country, but in the far greater variety of able and popular Reveiws, Magazines, &c., which form so splendid an element of the literature of the day, and which are inaccessible to the mass of American readers, except by some such medium as the Eclectic Magazine. By omitting what is merely local in interest or feeble in character, the ample size of the Eclectic Magazine enables the editor to embody all that is really desirable in the whole range of journalism. As only the best articles of each periodical are selected, it is evident that the contents of the Eclectic Magazine must be superior to those of any one, however great or celebrated; and, taken together, must constitute a more desirable and able body of periodical literature than can be found elsewhere in the same compass.

Each number is embellished with a suberb steel engraving, from the well-known burin of Mr. Sartain, of subjects of elevated character and general interest, including portraits of distinguished living authors and celebrities, making twelve rich and elegant prints in a year.

TERMS.

The Eclectic Magazine is issued on the first of every month, in numbers of 144 large 8vo. pages each, on fine paper, making three volumes a year, with title-pages and indexes. Price $5 per year, if paid strictly in advance—otherwise invariably $6.

The work will be promptly sent to any one who will send us $5 by mail, or otherwise, post-paid. Address W. H. BIDWELL, Editor and Proprietor, 120 Nassau-street, New York.

☞ The Magazine above described, fully sustains the character given to it in the prospectus, and is justly regarded as the best work of the kind to be had. We shall be happy to forward the subscription of any of our friends who may find it more convenient to communicate with us than with the publisher.

A SCENE IN HAWAII.

THE RETURN OF A MISSIONARY'S SON TO HIS BIRTH-PLACE.

It was Sabbath, when, after long and tedious voyages, I arrived at the island of K., where my journeyings were to cease. Hastening on shore, I sought the residence of the missionary stationed in the small but beautiful village of K., which by the enterprise of foreign residents is fast becoming a place of mercantile importance. I found the villagers assembled for divine worship in the spacious thatched church, which stood a few rods distant from the house. It was soon noised among the people that the son of a missionary, whose voice had oft proclaimed to them the ways of eternal life, and whose memory was still precious with them, had arrived from the land of his fathers, and the islanders, together with their native preacher, who had been addressing them, flocked about the dwelling to welcome me back to my native isle. Unwilling that they should appear to be desecrating the day of rest, the missionary desired them to return quietly to their homes, which they did, after a warm and individual salutation.

On the following morning, provided with a guide and a horse for each of us, I proceeded on my journey to the village of W., about fifteen miles distant. Traveling was performed entirely on horseback, there being no vehicles in use. My road lay through a beautiful country, capable of the highest cultivation, lying in undulating hills with gently-sloping sides, covered with grass of the richest coloring, presenting at a distance the appearance of a carpet of green velvet, of such peculiar richness as to excite the covetous desire of many a passer-by. And winding in every direction among these hills, were gurgling rivulets of the clearest water, flowing down from the mountains, while along the banks of the streams were numberless little hamlets, where the islanders dwelt and cultivated their little gardens, filled with favorite fruits. A few hours' ride through this scenery of almost celestial loveliness, brought me to the village of W. The river of the same name, on the banks of which the village is located, flows through a deep valley formed by precipitous bluffs of solid rock on each side, a hundred feet high. The valley is about a hundred rods in width, and is frequently overflowed by the river, rendering it exceedingly fertile. From the top of the bluff into the valley, the descent is by a road cut into the steep rocky sides. As I stood on the brow of this bluff, the scene before me was one of exceeding beauty—the valley extending to the right till lost among the hills, and to the left the bluffs sloping rapidly to the level of the shore. Calmly flowing through the valley was the river, over which canoes were rapidly gliding, or in whose waters the amphibious villagers were sporting. As I looked down upon it, I was reminded of that "Stream whose gentle flow

Supplies the city of our God."

From one end of it to the other, this valley was under the richest cultivation. Hundreds of thatched houses dotted the scene, surrounded by gardens, all regularly laid out into squares and oblongs, and enclosed with walls and hedges. In every direction might be seen little canals and aqueducts to irrigate the gardens. Indeed, the valley from one end to the other, afforded a sight beautiful beyond description—the dark leaves of the taro forming a rich contrast with the lighter green of the banana trees, which extended in rows in every direction, loaded with their yellow delicious fruit, while tall cocoa-nut trees leaned gracefully over the banks of the river, and numberless tamarind, bread-fruit, and orange trees were seen in every quarter.

As I viewed this scene, there was a silent throb of joy in my breast, for this was my birth-place. We descended the bluff, and as we entered the village, my guide informed the villagers who I was. One and another hurried to meet me, and with joy welcomed me back again. The old men and women, whose memory ran back to former days, could not refrain from tears of joy, and embraced me as though I had been their child. The scene beggars description—they were not simply tears, but wailings, which might be heard a long distance, and brought around me the whole village half frenzied, so impatient to grasp my hand that I was compelled to stop and salute them individually. As I passed by each house, children of every age, old men and women leaning on their staves, came out, and demanded a hearty shake of the hand. My way was fairly hedged and my horse could hardly advance, for the hundreds of islanders that had flocked about me.

I hastened on to the mission premises, which were a little beyond the village, and as I approached I found that many had run on in advance to give notice of my arrival. But what a scene! The yards, the house, the rooms were filled; and, as I approached the gate, they shouted, "There he comes! there he comes!" Dismounting from my horse, I pressed through the crowd, and there, at one side of the room, beside the table, sat an aged lady at her work. Her brow was deeply wrinkled, and her cheeks were pale and sallow and sunken. Her head was sprinkled with gray hairs. There was a care-worn look about her, which seemed to say that she had passed through years of toil and privation. But to me there was something expressive about her look, as though I might have seen her in former days; and in her eye there was something peculiar in its expression as it first met my own; for it seemed as if I must once have known that eye, that look before. But I knew it not—it was a stranger face to me.

I entered the room—it was my mother. But my pen shrinks from revealing the secret stirrings of the human heart when deeply moved, nor can it paint a scene whose feelings knew no bounds. It was eighteen years before that we had parted—mother from her son—long years of anxious thought, and now we met once more, strangers to each others' looks. Again I sat beside my mother, and listened to the same voice which taught my infant lips to lisp. Was there not joy there? They only who have passed through the scene, who have felt the sting of tender partings and realized the joys of meeting, can tell.

But the scene about us was exceedingly affecting. Three or four hundred natives, eager to see and hear, were in or around the house, some sitting in chairs, others on the floor, or crowding around the windows and doors, all weeping and deeply moved. They would press around me, and again constrain me to shake hands with them. At length an old woman pressed through the crowd, and with hurry and agitation entering the room, fell at my feet, and, embracing them, wept like a child. I endeavored to release myself from what seemed more like human worship than any thing else, but for ten minutes she would not release her hold. This woman had been a nurse and faithful family servant for many years, and was a devoted Christian. It was truly affecting to receive these warm demonstrations of joy at my return. They would sit and rehearse incidents of former years, and tell how small I was when I left for America, and seemed astonished to find me full grown now, and added a thousand other incidents of passing interest.

During the afternoon of my arrival and the following day, they continued to visit me, and almost every one brought presents, so that I found I had several scores of fowls, several bushels of sweet potatoes, together with cocoa-nuts, bananas, melons, bread-fruit, oranges, &c. Among the rest, an old chief came, followed by his servant, loaded with poultry and vegetables as gifts. Unbounded joy seemed to take possession of every one at my return, after so long an absence.

But a stillness reigned about my home which seemed to show the changes which eighteen years had wrought. One was absent; it was he whose cheerful voice was often heard among his youthful band, leading them in sacred praise to that eternal One, before whose throne he now is mingling with the redeemed; and as I thought of that sad hour when he was called to part with his youthful group, and commit them to the keeping of Providence—the parting made more keen by the thought that he might never see their faces again—I was forced to exclaim, "Oh the trials of a missionary's heart, none can know them but they who experience them!"

PROTESTANT MISSIONARY EFFORTS IN HAYTI.

Correspondence of the Independent.

The principal missionary labor upon this Island, thus far, has been perfomed under the auspices of the English Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society. About thirty years since, Rev. Messrs. Cutts & Brown established a mission in this city; but were permitted to prosecute their labors only two years, when a revolution occurred. With the change of government commenced a series of the most cruel persecutions; the missionaries were driven from the Island, and the little band they had gathered were left to buffet the storm alone.

But they were God's chosen ones. Though called to endure bonds and imprisonment, and to suffer many things for the name of Jesus, they still continued to meet together as they could, at "the dead of the night, in the glens and secret places" of the hills adjacent. There, like many others "of whom the world was not worthy," they strengthened each others' hearts, and enjoyed the pure worship of God.

After a few years, some of their own number, who had been to England to be educated, were permitted to return and minister to them, and thus they continued until twelve years ago the little praying band that had endured so much, were permitted to greet again a missionary from England. From that they have been allowed to prosecute their labors without hindrance from Government, and have gone on establishing missions until now they have stations at seven of the most important towns. The general superintendent of the mission, Rev. M. B. Bird, resides at this place. He and his excellent lady have been called to suffer much while laboring to extend a pure Christianity over this beautiful Island; they have not only been in the midst of the general shock and consternation of the terrible revolution the Island has undergone, but experienced a more awful calamity and a more signal deliverance in the terrible earthquake of 1842, at Cape Haytien. That city was remarkably well built, and contained from nine to twelve thousand inhabitants. By a single shock every building was leveled to the dust, and in that instant more than half the population launched into eternity. Mr. Bird was reading in the piazza of his house, and was thrown into the street, and mysteriously escaped with scarcely a scratch or a bruise. Mrs. Bird was in a small room in the third story, with an infant a few days old in her arms. A small piece of floor where she sat was sustained in some way by a post beneath and she and her child were rescued in safety. A servant with another child was in the basement, and timbers fell over them and shielded them, and they too were found unhurt. Thus in the midst of the terrible consternation and suffering about them, the missionaries were permitted to gather their entire family, and thank God for this signal deliverance. They soon removed to this place, where, with hearts glowing with love for poor Hayti, they still with cheerful zeal prosecute their benevolent labors.

When we take into consideration the unsettled state of the Island, the success of this mission is truly remarkable. They have been enabled to erect a commodious chapel and a large school-house, and have a most interesting congregation, and a large and well-conducted school. They report 145 church members, and 600 attendants upon public worship. Their free day shcool, in which religious instruction is made very prominent, numbers 300 scholars of both sexes, and is supported entirely by subscriptions raised among the people here. This church and school have been gathered, with very few exceptions, from the Catholic population.

At Port-au-Plaat, on the north side of the Island, and under the Spanish Government, they have a church numbering 128 members, a Sabbath school of 100, and a day school of 170 scholars, with an average attendance on public worship of 350. At Cape Haytien they have a church of 21 members, a day school with 154 scholars, and an average attendance on public worship of 250. They also have flourishing missions at Samana, Gonaives, Eayes and Jeremie.

Within a few years the Free Baptist Missionary Society of the United States has established missions at Port-au-Prince, and at Port-de-Paix, which are going on prosperously. The English Baptists have also a station at Jacquel, of which I know but little, but believe it is prosperous.

Still more recently, Rev. Mr. Cushman was sent out by the Foreign Evangelical Society, and established a mission at St. Mark, but died, greatly lamented, after laboring but a few months. Since his death this most hopeful and interesting station has remained vacant, until quite recently Rev. Mr. Neal, a converted French Catholic Priest, has arrived, who will take Mr. Cushman's place.

These statements and statistics give but a meager idea of the results of Protestant missionary labors. They have accomplished incalculable good. Perhaps the most interesting fact is, not that a few of the great mass of this neglected people, so long the deluded votaries of the man of sin, have been reclaimed from their errors, and are now, as we trust, "living members of their living head;" nor that the good seed has been sown in many other hearts;—nor that so many children, rescued from papal influence, are being educated in Protestant Sabbath and day schools. To my mind, there is greater interest in the fact that so strong an impression has been made in favor of the Protestant religion.

A MINISTER'S WIFE.

The duties of a minister's wife do not differ essentially from those of the wife of any other Christian. The domestic circle is is the important sphere of a woman's activity; and the duties that engage her there, must, on the whole, be considered the same in every private family. The time of a pastor's wife is as much needed and occupied at home as that of any other wife. And no minister, who understands the conditions of his permanent influence for good upon the people of his charge, will desire her to exchange her duties, imposed by God, for such labors as a false spirit of the age demands. The official duties of the ministry belong to the husband; he has been ordained to the work; his wife is his help-mate in this particular calling. Hence she need not be the President of every benevolent association in the congregation; nor need she go from house to house and pay pastoral visits. To visit the sick and the afflicted, and to mingle with the poor and rich families of the congregation, is indeed a part of her duty; but not of the first importance. She ought to sympathize with her husband in his studies, in his pastoral life, in his trials; make his home pleasant and happy; manage all domestic affairs to the best advantage; cheer and console him in his dark hours; and go hand in hand with him, so far as the position of her sex will allow, in his endeavors, by the use of all proper means, to promote the interests of Christ's kingdom. Her life should indeed be exemplary; but so should that of every Christian wife be. She should be zealous in every good work; but not in those which belong to the office of the ministry.

No one will deny that her position is different from that of a layman's wife. She is indeed a city set on a hill. But none of the duties of a wife cease to be hers, because her husband is a minister of the gospel. She should be the wife of a minister; this is all; that is, her whole character and life should be adapted to the solemn vocation of her husband. In this respect only, is her position peculiar; yet important in the highest sense of the term.

The husband should be a pattern of a minister and of a pastor; not of female cultivation and refinement. His wife should be a pattern of a minister's wife; not of a female pastor, or of a female reformer. The position of a woman is as elevated, and her power for good as great, as that of a man. If their proper relation, however, be destroyed, both are at the same time insulted and degraded. Let a woman be a woman, and a man be a man; but wo to the world when women become men, for then men will become women. [German Ref. Mess.

MAHOMET'S SERMON ON CHARITY.—In one of his traditional sermons, transmitted by his disciples, is the following apologue on the subject of charity. When God created the earth, it trembled until he put mountains upon it to make it firm. Then the angels asked, "O God, is there any thing of thy creation stronger than those mountains?" And God replied, "Iron is stronger than the mountains, for it breaks them." "And is there any thing of thy creation stronger than iron?" "Yes, fire is stronger than iron, for it melts it." "Is there any thing of thy creation stronger than fire?" "Yes, water, for it quenches fire." "O Lord, is there any thing of thy creation stronger than water?" "Yes, wind, for it overcomes water and puts it in motion." "O our Sustainer! is there any thing of thy creation stronger than wind?" "Yes, a good man giving alms; if he give with his right hand and conceal it with his left, he overcomes all things."

WORDS FOR MUSIC.

BY REV. DR. BETHUNE.

I love to sing when I am glad,
Song is the echo of my gladness;
I love to sing when I am sad,
Till song makes sweet my very sadness;
'T is pleasant time,
When voices chime
To some sweet rhyme in concert only;
And song to me
Is company—
Good company when I am lonely.

Whene'er I greet the morning light,
My song goes forth in thankful numbers,
And 'mid the shadows of the night,
I sing me to my welcome slumbers.
My heart is stirred
By each glad bird
Whose notes are heard in summer's bowers;
And song gives birth
To friendly mirth
Around the hearth, in wintry hours.

Man first learned song in Paradise,
From the bright angels o'er him singing;
And in our home, above the skies,
Glad anthems are forever ringing.
God lends his ear,
Well pleased to hear
The songs that cheer his people's sorrow;
Till day shall break
And we shall wake
Where love will make unfading morrow.

Then let me sing while yet I may,
Like him God loved, the sweet tongued Psalmist,
Who found in harp, and holy lay,
The charm that keeps the spirit calmest;
For sadly here
I need the cheer,
While sinful fear with promise blendeth;
O, how I long
To join the throng,
Who sing the song that never endeth!

THE PRAYERLESS HOME.

BY PROF. ALDEN.

"I have a good offer for my farm," said Mr. Earl to his wife, "and I think I shall sell it."

"Why do you wish to sell it?" said Mrs. Earl.

"The land is stony and partly worn out. I can go into a new country where land is cheap and fertile, and realize a much larger return for the same amount of labor."

"If we go into a new country, there will be no schools for our children."

"Our children are not old enough to go to school; by the time they are old enough, it is most likely schools will be established wherever we may go."

"We may also be deprived of the privilege of attending church."

"We can take our Bibles with us, and can read them on the Sabbath, if we should happen to settle at a distance from a place of meeting."

"It will be better for us to remain here, where we can educate our children, and bring them up under the sound of the gospel."

"I must do what I think is required by the interest of my family."

"Pray remember that property is not the only thing needed by our children."

A few days after this conversation, the bargain was concluded, and the farm became the property of Mr. Hale. Mr. Earl was to put him in possession of it early in the spring.

Mr. Earl was descended from one of the early Puritan settlers of Massachusetts. His ancestors, for many generations, had been devout members of the church of Christ. He was the first alien from the commonwealth of Israel. His mother was an amiable, but not a pious woman—and some thought it was owing to her that he had not profited by the instructions of his pious father, and had turned a deaf ear to the gospel which he had heard from his infancy. He loved the world, and in order to secure a large portion of its goods, he was willing to leave the home of his childhood, and the graves of his fathers, and to take up his abode on the borders of civilization.

His wife was one who preferred Jerusalem to her chief joy. The old time-worn meeting-house, with its high, square pews, and huge sounding-board, was as beautiful to her as the most faultless specimen of architecture to the connoisseur. She desired that her children might grow up under the influence of the truths which were proclaimed in that house. Her chief desire, with respect to them, was that they might become rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom. In the spring she was constrained to bid farewell to her native village. After a wearisome journey, she found herself and family in what was then a wilderness, in the western part of New York. The gospel was not preached in the vicinity, nor was even the log school-house erected. For a time Mr. E. observed the Sabbath so far as resting from labor was concerned. He even spent some time in reading the Bible, but he did not pray. In consequence, that blessed book was gradually laid aside.

The climate, and perhaps the labors incident to a life in the wilderness, caused Mrs. E. to fall into a decline. When, after a lingering illness, she bade her husband farewell, she charged him to send her children to her native home, that they might there be taught, in the school-house and the church, truths which could make them wise unto salvation. Mr. Earl complied, in part, with his wife's request. He sent his daughter Julia, who was now nine years of age, and her younger brother. The older one he detained, to assist him in his labors.

It was six years before Julia returned to her father. She had spent that time among the pious friends of her departed mother. She found the home of her childhood greatly changed. A neat village surrounded the tasteful dwelling now occupied by her father. The spire of the village church rose aloft, and the school-house was not far distant. She rejoiced to return to her home, though she was to meet its chief charm no more. A check was soon given to her joy. When she sat down to the evening meal, the blessing of God was not invoked. It was with difficulty that she could eat. When the hour for retiring came, she was still more unhappy, as the family separated without prayer.

Mr. E. soon perceived that his daughter did not feel at home in his house. It made him sad at heart, for he had long looked forward to her return, with hope that she would restore in part, at least, the loss he had experienced. He said to her one day—

"Julia, you do not seem to feel as much at home as I could wish."

After some hesitation, she replied, "I do not feel safe here."

"Do not feel safe!" said he in astonishment.

"I am afraid to live under a roof where there is no prayer."

The remark went to the father's heart. He thought of all the mercies he had received, the protection he had experienced, unasked! He continued to think of his ways, till his soul fainted within him. He looked at his oldest son, a Sabbath-breaker, and ignorant of God, and could not conceal the truth, that it was owing to the act of removing him in childhood from the means of grace, and exposing him to influences that in all probability would prove his ruin.

In a few days he asked Julia to read the Scriptures and pray in the family. It was with joy that she heard the request, but with great difficulty that she complied with it. It was not till she was reminded of the joy it would give to her mother, could she be a witness of it, that she consented to make the attempt. In a few weeks, on a Sabbath morning, the father himself took the Bible, and having read a portion, kneeling down, and with tears besought God to teach stammering lips how to pray. Light, peace, and safety took up their abode in a dwelling now no longer prayerless. [Mother's Mag.

COVENANT OF THE OBERLIN COLONY.

Lamenting the degeneracy of the church, and the deplorable condition of our perishing world; and ardently desirous of bringing both under the influence of the blessed gospel of peace; and viewing with peculiar interest the influence which the valley of the Mississippi must exert over our nation and the nations of the earth; and having, as we trust, in answer to devout supplication, been guided by the counsel of the Lord; the undersigned covenant together under the name of the Oberlin Colony, subject to the following regulations, which may be amended by a concurrence of two-thirds of the colonists:

1. Providence permitting, we engage as soon as practicable to remove to the Oberlin Colony in Russia, Lorain County, Ohio, and there fix our residence for the express purpose of glorifying God, and doing good, to the extent of our abilities.

2. We will hold and manage our estate personally, but pledge as perfect a community of interest as if we held a community of property.

3. We will hold in possession no more property than we believe we can profitably manage for God as His faithful stewards.

4. We will by industry, economy, and Christian self-denial, obtain as much as we can above our necessary personal and family expenses, and faithfully appropriate the same for the spread of the gospel.

5. That we may have health and money for the Lord's service, we will eat only plain and wholesome food; renouncing all bad habits, and especially the smoking, chewing, and snuffing, of tobacco, unless it be necessary as a medicine; and deny ourselves all strong and unnecessary drinks, even tea and coffee, as far as practicable, and every thing which is simply calculated to gratify the palate.

6. That we may add to our time, health, and money, for the service of the Lord, we will renounce all the world's expensive and unwholesome fashions of dress, particularly tight lacing and ornamental attire.

7. And yet more to increase our means of serving Him who has bought us with His blood, we will observe plainness and durability in our houses, furniture, carriages, and all that appertains to us.

8. We will strive to feel continually, that we, as the body of Christ, are members one of another, and while living provide for the widow, the sick, and the needy, as for ourselves and families.

9. We will take special pains to educate all our children thoroughly, and train them up in body, and intellect, and heart, for the service of the Lord.

10. We will feel that the interests of the Oberlin Institute are identified with ours, and do what we can to extend its benefits to our fallen race.

11. We will make special efforts to sustain the institutions of the gospel at home and among our neighbors.

12. We will strive to maintain deep-toned and elevated personal piety, to provoke each other to love and good works, to live together in all things as brethren, and to glorify God in our bodies and spirits which are His.

In testimony of our fixed purpose thus to do in reliance on divine grace, we hereunto affix our names.

BEWARE OF THE DIFFUSENESS OF ANGER.

Some where in Dr. Channing's diary, he warns himself in nearly these words. No passage in his Memoir has impressed us more with a sense of his nice moral discrimination in respect to his own conduct. We commend the expression to the young. Beware of the diffuseness of fault-finding.

A little boy slams the door violently. "Don't my boy, do so," his mother says, "it disturbs your little sister." The boy feels that he has done wrong, and determines to obey his mother. But she goes on to say with increased warmth, "It is the third time that you have waked her up this evening." This neutralizes the effect of what was said before. "I should think a boy of your age might know better than to make such a noise." Here the boy begins to grow impatient. "It costs me, and you know it does, a great deal of trouble." He is now a little irritated, and soon, as the torrent of words comes more vehemently, his irritation entirely stifles the first suggestion of conscience, destroys his good resolutions, and drives him almost immediately into some other disagreeable act. Parents, beware of the diffuseness of fault-finding. One sentence is always better than two, and hardly any thing is worse than a harangue. [Christian Register.

THE YOUNG INFIDEL.

The following sad account of a young man who for a time attended the ministry of the Rev. Baptist Noel, of London, illustrates the fearful consequences of breaking away from the influence of the gospel:—

The young man was the son of pious parents, and for several years was regular in his attendance at the house of God. At length he became acquainted with some young men of infidel principles. The more he associated with them, the less pleasant he found it to listen to the gospel. Ere long he absented himself wholly from the sanctuary. He then began to indulge in the pleasures of sin; and went to such lengths in criminal indulgence, that he soon laid the foundation of a fatal illness. Three months after he had abandoned the house of God, he was on the verge of the grave. Mr. Noel was then called to visit him. The dying youth refused to converse with the man of God; but covered his head with the bed-clothes. After several vain attempts to enter into conversation with him about that Being before whom he was soon to stand in judgment, Mr. Noel offered a prayer for him, and was about to quit the apartment. Just as his hand was upon the latch of the door, the young made an effort to sit up in bed, and asked Mr. N. to stay a minute. Mr. N. returned to the bed-side. The sufferer's strength was well nigh exhausted. He whispered in the ear of Mr. Noel the apalling words, "I'm lost." He sunk down in the bed, drew the clothes over his head, and never spoke again.

I'VE DONE SMOKING.

Our friend delivered himself thus, honestly and in earnest. As he emptied his mouth of the last cigar, our mouth became full—full of blessings.

Blessed is the man himself. He is more wise, more cleanly, more savory, and more reasonable than when he went smoking and puffing about like a locomotive.

Blessed is the man's wife. She is the happier woman for the four reasons mentioned in the last sentence, and for many more. She had hoped against hope for the last puff; but it has been made at last. We seem to see her face brighten—her step is more elastic—her voice is sweeter—her welcome to her husband as he reaches home is more cordial. She has our hearty congratulations.

Blessed is the man's house. An unsavory spirit has gone out of it. More easily can it be kept neat and tidy. Old repellencies will repulse no more.

Blessed is the man's apparel. A certain fragrance has left it; but not to the sorrow of those oft in proximity with him. His wardrobe is minus a real annoyance, and plus the benediction of many a friend.

And blessed is the man's health. In the smoke and fire he so long kept up beneath his nostrils he fed an insidious enemy. And his whole nervous and digestive system unites in the bendiction we now indite.

And blessed is the man's pocket. A leak is stopped. As much as before will flow in, and less flow out. We seem to hear a voice from that quarter, "There will be better days in the department of our master's dominions."

And blessed be the man's resolution. May it tower aloft, like a granite pillar, above all the smoke and fire that may assail it. That last puff! Be it the last! And though the smokers will not join, yet there will be enough to unite in a hearty Amen. [Trav.

PARENTAL INDULGENCE.

The subjoined passage from the travels of Sir Charles Lyell, the great geologist, contains too much truth to be lost, however unpalatable it may be.

"The director of the State Penitentiary in Georgia told me, that he had been at some pains to trace out the history of the most desperate characters under his charge, and found they had been invariably spoiled children; and, he added, if young Americans were not called upon to act for themselves at so early an age, and undego the rub and discipline of the world, they would be more vicious and immoral than the people of any other nation. Yet there is no country where the children ought to be so great a blessing, or where they can be so easily provided for.

"Many young Americans have been sen to school in Switzerland; and I have hear their teachers, who found them less manageable than English or Swiss boys, maintai that they must all of them have some das of wild Indian blood in their veins. Englishmen, on the other hand, sometimes a tribute the same character to republican i stitutions; but in fact they are spoiled lo before they are old enough to know th they are not born under an absolute mo archy."

AN EXCELLENT SUBSTITUTE.—An old cle gyman was in the habit, as soon as he g into the pulpit, of placing his sermon in crevice under the cushion, where he left during the singing of the accustomed psal One Sunday he pushed the sermon too f into the crevice and lost it. When t psalm was concluded he called the clerk bring him a Bible. The clerk, somewh astonished at the unusual request, broug him a Bible, as he was desired. The clergyman opened it and thus addressed the co gregation—"My brethren, I have lost m sermon; but I will read you a chapter Job worth ten of it."

THE EASTERN ASSOCIATION.

The Seventh-day Baptist Eastern Association held its fourteenth annual session at Shiloh, N. J., commencing on Fifth-day, May 23d, and ending on the following First-day. The delegation in attendance was unusually large, embracing nearly all of the ministers within the bounds of the Association, together with a good number of laymen. There were also present Elds. Eli S. Bailey and Enoch Barnes from the Central Association, and Eld. N. V. Hull from the Western Association.

The Introductory Discourse was preached by Eld. Alfred B. Burdick, of Pawcatuck, R. I., from Zech. 4: 6—"Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts." The design of the discourse was to illustrate and enforce the duty of the church to seek and rely upon the aid of the Holy Ghost in the work of converting the world. In doing this, the preacher first reviewed the efforts for the world's conversion within the last half century; he then considered the question what proportion of these efforts bear the seal of Holy Ghost work; and concluded by enumerating some of the defects in the present plan of benevolent action, which hinder the coöperation of the Holy Ghost.

At the conclusion of the discourse, the Association was called to order, and the following officers elected, viz: Sherman S. Griswold, Moderator; A. B. Burdick and A. D. Titsworth, Secretaries.

Letters were presented and read from every church belonging to the Association, except that at Newport, R. I. A letter was also presented from the Church at Berlin, N. Y., containing a request (which was granted) for admission into the Association. The letters from the churches generally do not give a very flattering account of their condition. It is cheering to notice, however, that two or three of them have enjoyed revivals, and report additions by profession. The Church at Pawcatuck has received fifteen members in this way during the year, and the Rockville Church twenty-eight. To the New York Church eleven members have been added, mostly by letter.

In this connection we may as well copy the Report on the State of Religion, prepared by a Committee, and adopted by the Association, as follows:—

"The Committee on the State of Religion respectfully report, that from an examination of the letters of the churches, they find that a few of them have been watered by the dews of heavenly grace; but from most of them there is a complaint of coldness and a want of spirituality. O, brethren, this is a sad tale to tell, when there is bread enough and to spare in our Father's house. The fault must be in the churches. It cannot be in God. He is always ready and willing to hear the voice of his children, who cry unto him day and night, and to avenge them of their adversaries. In view of our coldness and stupidity, we feel called upon to search our own hearts, to humble ourselves in the dust before God, and faithfully use all the means of grace that God has appointed, in hope that we may be restored to the joy of his salvation, and upheld by his free Spirit. The eyes of all are upon us as a denomination, and some there are who would rejoice at our downfall; but our hope is in God, and in the word of his grace, which is able to build us up, and give us an inheritance among all them that are sanctified. Let us seek the Lord, until he come and rain righteousness upon us."

The Executive Committee to carry forward Missionay Operations within the bounds of the Association, made a report of their labors. It seems that the Committee have been embarrassed from their inability to obtain a minister who could devote himself wholly to the work. They have, however, by the assistance of Eld. Henry Clark, supplied the Church at South Kingston, R. I., with preaching half the time; and Bro. Clark has also labored a portion of the time in Newport, Wakefield, Charlestown, and other places, preaching, visiting, distributing tracts, &c. In addition to this, Eld. S. S. Griswold took a missionary tour in the State of Maine, where he lectured a number of times on the subject of the Sabbath, visited a number of isolated Sabbath-keepers, and circulated a quantity of Sabbath publications. The receipts of the year, in consequence of there being no permanent laborer, and therefore no special demand upon the churches, have been very small—only $136 50. For the coming year, it is proposed, if a suitable person can be obtained, to keep a missionary laboring all of the time in Newport, Jamestown, Phœnix, Charlestown, and vicinity.

Several subjects of general and denominational interest were brought up and discussed before the Association, of which we have time now to notice only the following.

The subject of Ministerial Education and Support was presented by the report of the business committee appointed last year. To that report was attached a resolution, "that in order to meet the demands for ministerial labor among us, we must more earnestly seek out young men possessing the requisite piety and talents for the ministry and encourage them to devote themselves to that calling, raise the necessary means to give them a suitable education for their work, and support the gospel ministry in such a manner that the pastors of the churches shall not be obliged to abandon their stations to obtain a support for themselves or their families." This resolution was advocated with much earnestness, and at considerable length, by several of the brethren, among whom were Elds. Hull, Crandall, and Griswold. Eld. John Davis also spoke upon it, his remarks being mainly designed to suggest the danger of making too much of education, and the possibility that the deficiency of ministers may result from other causes than inadequate support. The resolution was adopted; and we think that most of those who listened to the discussion were satisfied of the soundness of its positions, and the importance of urging them upon the attention of the people at the present time.

A communication on the subject of Education, was presented to the Association in behalf of the Trustees of DeRuyter Institute. It seems that they are desirous of promoting some arrangement by which gratuitous instruction shall be furnished to any and all worthy youth who are anxious to study, but unable to meet the expense. Their plan is to raise a fund, by annual contributions from individuals favorable to the object, which shall be loaned, without interest, to such young men and young women as the several churches or societies may recommend and the Trustees approve—the money to be refunded by the loaner as soon as he is able, unless, in consequence of becoming a missionary, or for some other reason, the Trustees think proper to release him from the obligation. The Association passed a vote approving the plan, but took no farther action upon it.

The following resolutions upon the subject of education were also adopted, after remarks by Elds. Lucius Crandall, W. B. Gillett, N. V. Hull, and Eli S. Bailey:—

Resolved, That in the opinion of this Association, the time is near when we shall need a College and Theological Seminary, and that measures ought to be taken, as soon as practicable, to carry this object into effect.

Resolved, That a Theological Department should be established in connection with some one of our institutions of learning as soon as may be practicable.

The subject of Sabbath Desecration, especially by co-partnerships with those who do not keep the Sabbath, was fully canvassed. The Business Committee introduced a resolution, "that we deem it a matter calling for censure and discipline, for members of churches to place themselves in circumstances, by forming co-partnerships, so that either themselves, their families, or those in their employ, will be under the necessity of doing business in violation of God's holy law." This resolution led to a lengthy discussion, in which brethren T. B. Brown, L. Crandall, N. V. Hull, W. B. Gillett, I. D. Titsworth, A. B. Burdick, and others, took part. The feeling appeared to be deep and general, that the time has come for Sabbath-keepers to take a higher stand in respect to the manner of observing the Sabbath, and that by so doing they will most effectually sustain and advance the interests to which they profess to be devoted. The resolution was adopted.

The following resolution, upon the same general subject, was also adopted:—

Resolved, That this Association considers visiting on the Sabbath for other than strictly religious purposes, to be a violation of the Sabbath.

After an interesting session of three days, the Association adjourned, at 3 o'clock P. M. on First-day, to meet at Berlin on the fifth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, 1851, at 11 o'clock A. M.

The Religious Exercises connected with the Association were more numerous and better attended than is common on such occasions. On Fifth-day evening, a sermon was preached by Eld. Eli S. Bailey with special reference to tract operations. The following evening was occupied by Eld. S. S. Griswold in a discourse bearing upon domestic missions, or missions within the bounds of the Association. On the Sabbath, sermons were preached by Elds. Enoch Barnes, Daniel Coon, and N. V. Hull. First-day morning, Eld. T. B. Brown preached on the subject of Foreign Missions, and a collection was taken for the Missionary Society; Eli S. Bailey preached in the afternoon, and Geo. B. Utter in the evening.

The Church and Society at Shiloh have recently commenced building a new meeting-house, which is to be completed in the course of the present summer. It will be of brick, and cost about five thousand dollars. The old house has been donated to a Society recently organized for the purpose of promoting education, and is to be extensively altered to fit it for this new use.

Meeting of Alumni.—The Alumni of the New York Union Theological Seminary form an Association, the object of which is "to perpetuate that mutual interest which its members felt as students of the Seminary; to promote an acquaintance among the graduates of all the classes; to enlist the sympathy and coöperation of the Alumni in advancing the best interests of their Alma Mater; and, by an address, narratives of personal experience, friendly counsel, and exercises of devotion, to increase the piety of its members and their usefulness in the work of the Lord." Their meeting this year was held at the Seminary on the 13th of May. Rev. Mr. Hopper, one of the Vice Presidents, occupied the chair, and made a few introductory remarks; after which the officers for the ensuing year were elected. An obituary notice was then read of Rev. Noah F. Packard, a member of the association, who died at New Orleans in 1847. Resolutions were adopted expressing the deep sympathy of the Alumni in the prosperity of the Seminary, and pledging their efforts to promote its best interests. After the transaction of other miscellaneous business, an opportunity was afforded for each one to give a brief account of his labors and experience. The time thus occupied was a most delightful season of fraternal intercourse. The meeting was closed with singing a parting hymn and prayer.

GLIMPSES OF DOMESTIC LIFE IN CHINA.—NO. 4.

Shanghai, December, 1849.

It is sad to turn from a scene pleasant and grateful to the memory as the one I last described, to find the very next page traced in the mournful shadows of the tomb. Yet so it must be. I can not turn away from her, in whom my newly-awakened interest was fast increasing, to dwell upon abstract scenes of every-day life. I will not leave her alone, at the very entrance of that dark valley of sorrow through which I find her so soon called to pass. I will go to the house of mourning, but I will take you with me, even all unprepared as ourselves. That house, how desolate—how gloomy! The teacher had gone up to his couch, whence he was never again to come down. Mr. C. was immediately invited to his room, and I, after conversing a while with the family, was asked whether I would like to see him. I replied, "If the teacher would not object." The suggested doubt seemed to give the family pain, and I followed them by a retired way, Mr. C. having been conducted up by quite a different route. My own path led through the apartments of the wife, who was sitting alone, the image of quiet despair, tenderly caressing her infant son. She only gave me, in passing, a mournful expression of recognition, almost unintelligible through suppressed emotion. Custom, even in that sad hour, must keep her apart from even the groups of now afflicted, sympathizing friends. The sisters accompanied me, and the visit was one of the most unconstrained cordiality and sympathetic friendship. Never shall I forget his appearance, as he sat upright in his little single bed, or, rather, bedstead, a description of which I must give you, as it forms so important a back-ground to the melancholy picture still fresh in my mind.

The bedstead is not unfitly represented by writers as resembling an alcove or recess in the wall, the carved fancy work on three sides, often highly ornamented and richly gilt, leaving it only open in front, across which is suspended, at the top, a rich frill of crimson silk, the close net of blue silk or cotton gauze, which hangs within, making it seem still more confined. The bed itself consists of a single straw matress or mat, such as the foreigners use for carpets, thrown upon the basket-work bottom, which is smoothly stretched upon a narrow frame-work of plank. Blue cotton quilts constitute the only covering, the "paucity of white linen," on beds as well as bodies, forming a striking feature in their code of contrarieties, when contrasted with the customs of foreigners. The pillows are long, four-sided and angled, sometimes of red morocco, sometimes of coarse canvas, or the bamboo matting so much used here. They are easily opened by removing the square piece at the end, and may be filled at pleasure, with straw or chaff, or made the receptacle of such other commodities as are thus, for the time being, conveniently disposed of, making them literally, as far as their capacity will allow, "a bed by night, a chest of drawers by day." Indeed, I have known foreigners to avail themselves of these ambiguous articles for the better security of treasure in traveling, their ostensible character of portmanteau making them quite unsuspicious to all the world but the Chinese, and their veritable reputation as pillows rendering them as little the subject of curiosity to the people, a part of whose nationality they may be said to constitute. These pillows are most admirably adapted, as no doubt they are designed, to accommodate the long cues of the gentlemen, and the elaborately plaited tresses of the ladies, which, by this contrivance, are spared the necessity of daily repairs—a task by no means inconsiderable. The different members of the family have each their separate bed, that of the wife being made sufficiently large to accommodate an infant, (which she often nurses until the age of five or six years); the couch of the wife and child occupying the same room with, and a little removed from, that of the husband and father. This single-bed system has one peculiar advantage, that of allowing its occupant to monopolize all the counterpanes, which serve him for night-clothes, his day garments being all laid aside upon retiring to rest.

But the suffering being, whose surroundings were of the simple kind described, could not avail himself of even the scanty comforts which his couch afforded. He sat upright, and unsupported, clad in his usual habiliments of blue cotton, with his little cap of silk and velvet resting upon the full intellectual brow, made still more ample by the fatal finger of disease. His countenance glowed with love and gratitude, as he thanked us, repeatedly and earnestly, for our kindness to him, and expressed the hope, which was still strong, spite of the distressing cough which almost suffocated him, that he should soon be restored to his wonted health, and to his accustomed duties. We trusted it might be so. Alas for our short-lived hopes.

When I again saw him, the harassing cough was stilled, the dilated temples no longer throbbed with pain, the intelligent eyes were closed, and the unconscious form laid quietly back upon the unchanged bed. The cap only had been removed, and the head covered with a coarse brown paper, laid smoothly upon them, over which was drawn the blue cotton counterpane, so life-like that, as I turned it back, and gazed upon the unsunken features, I almost hoped to see the calm eyes open, and the expressive lips part, as they were wont to do, with the accents of kindness, of gratitude, of instruction.

But now another figure had taken the foreground of the picture, and while I wept for the dead, my sympathies instinctively clung to the living—to the young wife, now so stricken, smitten, and afflicted. She was seated near the bed's foot, clad in the white mourning habit of the natives, the scarf of white muslin bound about the head, and falling backward half way to the ground, swaying back and forth in her sorrow, and constantly lifting her tearful eyes from the corpse to my face, in the most supplicating manner, as if she would demand of me the idolized being who had, day after day, and month after month, been lost to her for our sakes, and who had only returned to her to be by one stroke removed from her sight forever. The other female relatives were gathered around the bed, uttering their lamentations in one confused outburst of grief. "Call for the mourning women, that they may come; and let them make haste, and take up a wailing for us, that our eyes may run down with tears, and our eyelids gush out with waters," is the immediate thought suggested by those scenes of mourning in which women are the principal actors, as in the present case. Their lamentations were far more turbulent than was the plaintive sobbing of the wife, but far less earnest, far less affecting to the beholder. O, I could well believe, with the sympathetic Greeks in their funeral rites, that if the accents of his best-beloved had no longer power to thrill the frame of the sleeper, nothing less than the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God could ever break his slumber. Like the departed among those same Greeks, too, was he destined soon to be arrayed in his best apparel—the cap, being the insignia of his literary standing, placed upon his head—his traveling boots drawn upon his feet, emblematical of a departure for untraveled climes, himself a sojourner in that bourne from whence no traveler returns. Thus was he placed in his richly-carved coffin, to be henceforth the recipient of that homage which the heathen, in his blindness, renders to the creature, rather than the Creator. This is literally true of these idolatrous Chinese, for the worship of ancestors is their highest worship.

The question so often agitated in our own country—so often theoretically asked, and abstractly discussed, "Have the heathen a knowledge of the true God?" becomes to the missionary most painfully tangible—most practically exciting. However reluctant he may be to admit the conviction, it is, in China at least, soon forced upon him, that this heathen people have not a knowledge of the true God. They will tell you of gods many, and lords many, but when you would lead them beyond their highest (the dual principle, heaven and earth) to the one great Creator of All, they can not follow you. Their foolish hearts are darkened. There may be traces of a knowledge which they once had of the invisible God, made known by the visible things of Him; but as they did not like to retain Him in their thoughts, He gave them up to a reprobate mind; they became vain in their imaginations, changed the truth of God into a lie, and the glory of the Uncorruptible into an image made like to corruptible man. Thus, that which may be known or God, seems no longer manifest in them, but, darkly groping, they hasten to the revelation of that wrath which pursues the ungodly, or to the outstretched hand of that mercy which may pluck some of them as brands from the burning.

"A COLLEGE—WHAT IS NEEDED."

The Recorder of the 9th inst. contains the promised article upon the above subject. But as different men often look at the same object from very different points of view, and have very different impressions when looking at it from the same point, they will doubtless often come to widely different conclusions. So it happens in relation to "what is needed" in sustaining the educational interests of our denomination. Permission is, therefore, very respectfully asked, to express an opinion, in some essential particulars at variance with our brother's. In doing so, however, it becomes necessary to bring his main argument briefly under review.

"The great objection to a direct effort for a denominational college," says our brother, "is that it will stand directly in the way of educating the people." The only argument by which this proposition is sought to be sustained, is that "few, very few, compared with the whole, could avail themselves of the facilities of a college." Is not this true of every college in the land? But does it thence follow, that colleges stand in the way of the education of the people? The proposition of our brother is general in its application. If its validity, when applied to our own people, be sustained, the general proposition is sustained. If the general proposition be not sustained, the particular falls with it. A simple appeal to facts will be sufficient in testing the general proposition. Who then are, and have been, for the last twenty years, the great movers and sustainers of the educational interests of our country? Who have constituted the very center, the spirit, and the life of those grand and gigantic efforts to give every child in this wide land the advantages of a good common-school education, free of charges for tuition? Who devised those noble and elegant structures that are now fast taking the places of the school houses of former years? Who have suggested the supplying of these with neat and inviting furniture, suitable and valuable apparatus, and choice libraries? Who have contributed most largely to revolutionize the modes of instruction there? Who have been going from district to district, employing the learning and wisdom gathered from the colleges of two continents, to arouse a deeper educational interest among the people, and induce them to provide larger means and facilities for primary instruction? The answer to all these questions cannot be doubtful. And where did the Manns, the Barnards, the Emersons, the Potters, and, in short, the large host of the educators of the present generation, any one of whom is a host within himself, get that discipline of mind, and versatility of character, that has so preëminently fitted them for their Herculean labors? Surely it is not too much to affirm, that our colleges have been among the most efficient agents in elevating and giving character and consequence to all our primary institutions of learning, and that there is a debt of gratitude owed to them that ought not to be soon forgotten. Nor, indeed, have these primary schools attained a position where they can dispense with the aid of the colleges. As in times past, so in times to come, must their elevation and progress depend, in no small degree, upon the colleges. Colleges are to the intellectual world what the sun is to the physical world; and the intellectual can no more dispense with the former, than the physical can with the latter. It is, therefore, believed, that so far from the higher seminaries standing directly in the way of the education of the people, they are among the most direct and essential agencies for securing that most desirable object. The three grades of institutions, common-schools, academies, and colleges, found in all civilized countries, did not result from chance, nor cast, but from the necessities of a complete system of instruction. And no matter what shall be the advancement of common-schools, the academies and colleges will surely advance as rapidly. Unchangeableness is written upon but few things in this age; progress, gradual and sure, upon almost every thing.

If, then, these three grades of institutions exist necessarily, the impropriety of the phrase, "the people's colleges," meaning common-schools alone, is sufficiently manifest. That phrase, originated by political demagogues who wished to show themselves the special and only friends of the "dear people," should escape the lips of the educator only in execration. By it, it was designed to represent that there was one grade of schools established for the mass—the poorer classes as such, and another grade for the few—the rich, the aristocratic, as such—than which no representation could be more untruthful. There is no such aristocracy of educational interests in our land. The avenues of education are alike open to all. No man is ever turned from the doors of a college because he has no money to pay his tuition fees. And the highest college honors are far more frequently conferred upon the poor than upon the rich. All these institutions are emphatically the people's, based upon the principles of the most liberal democracy.

It is also proper to state, that the advocates for a denominational college among our people, are not quite willing to admit that they take a "meager view of education." They pretend not to possess very great comprehensiveness of mind, yet they protest that they never "anticipated improving the few, and neglecting the many." It is because their attachments and their sympathies are with the many, that they have put their hearts and hands to the work of building a denominational college.

Another thought: Those upon whom "the carrying forward of the enterprises of the denomination shall devolve," ought not to be very thoroughly and extensively educated, because, in that event, "many of their plans, productions, thoughts, and sympathies, would be above and beyond the comprehension of the people, and therefore lost; and much of the vivacity and pathos of their own characters would evaporate for want of aliment in a kindred sympathy." And is it so, that our brother is arguing against a highly educated ministry, missionaries, editors, educators, &c. Time does not permit to discuss this question here. But no truth is clearer of demonstration, than that he who does not bring his thoughts and productions to the capacities of those for whom he labors, is himself but indifferently educated. It is not because he knows so much, but because he knows so little. Surely, we live amidst the constant recurrence of events too stirring, and too big with the destinies of a world, for men to have any fear that they shall rise so far above the multitude as to evaporate. He whose intellectual and moral attainments are the brightest, will most clearly see how far short he comes, intellectually and morally, of meeting the vast responsibilities of life, and will have most occasion to deplore his own deficiencies. Far greater reason have public men to fear, lest they shall rust out, and be laid aside, as useless rubbish, long ere the evening of life shall set in, because they have not kept pace with the spirit of the age.

But, criticism aside, "what is wanted?" A college and theological seminary. Nothing less. The time has come "when our youth cannot be accommodated without a sacrifice of principle, or a greater sacrifice of other interests than it would cost to build a college." The "sacrifice of principle," by the policy of educating our youth abroad, has been well stated by "A Friend of Progress," in the last Recorder. The "sacrifice of other interests" may be shown by an appeal to facts. It is a fact, that we are constantly embarrassed in carrying forward our denominational enterprises in consequence of a deficiency in the number of our educated men. A society calls for an agent, and none is to be had without taking a brother from his pastoral duties, from which he can ill be spared, and to which he must return with the least possible delay. He takes a rapid tour among some of the more prominent churches, visits a few brethren, makes as good an explanation of the objects of his agency as time will permit, and returns home. He goes like a meteor, and happy if he makes as much impression. Missionaries are called for, and the fields proposed to be occupied are pointed out, but no response is given. Many would go—feel the spirit of universal brotherhood stirring them to undertake noble deeds; but they are not qualified—lack the education. An Association resolves to employ a missionary to present the subject of the Sabbath within its own bounds, but the man to do it is not to be had. This is not a fancy sketch. The failure of our societies to get agents and missionaries, the past year, sternly admonishes us that something is wrong. An academy asks for a principal, or an assistant teacher, and is either unsupplied, or is supplied by a brother who interrupts a successful prosecution of studies to assume the responsibility. Whenever a vacancy occurs, our churches supply themselves with a minister with the greatest difficulty. The candidates for the ministry among us are few, and, under our present educational provisions, will be fewer still, as the progress of light and knowledge put their veto upon uneducated men entering the ministry. We are embarrassed. It is in vain to conceal it. But the cause, and the remedy, what are they? The cause is manifest. The remedy, it must be applied, or we must abandon our denominational enterprises; nay, more, our existence as a denomination. Our young men must be sought out, and furnished at home with means for an education that will enable them to compare favorably, and cope successfully, with the laborers of other denominations. The Baptists either have founded, or are founding, colleges in almost every State of this Republic; the Methodists are fully equaling them; the Presbyterians have from their earliest history had them; and wherever a small body of Christians separate themselves from the rest of their brethren for conscience's sake, their first care is to provide a college, that they may be supplied with well-educated sustainers of their various schemes. And do we expect to be an exception, and still be successful? If such be our trust, it is a delusion. Already have we lost some of the finest talents of this country, because we were so deficient in educational means. It is in vain to shut our eyes to the painful truth. But it is replied, We now have as many men to carry forward our plans as we can sustain. Give us the educated men, and they will find the means. It is developed mind that develops wealth, and converts this sterile earth into a paradise. But "we can whittle out a cheaper way" than to build a college? Do, dear brother, for the love of truth, be about it, and whittle it out and give us a practical demonstration of its practicability. You shall not be impeded in your good offices. If the better way be shown, the most hearty coöperation shall be given. It is trusted, that our educators will not spend their efforts in contending with each other. While the plans, the needs, the ways and means, are under discussion, each may give his own views, and sustain them by arguments which may seem good to himself; but when the plans have been matured, all will doubtless lend a helping hand to the good work.

Anniversary of the American and Foreign Bible Society.—The Thirteenth Anniversary of the American and Foreign Bible Society was celebrated at the Norfolk-st. Baptist Church on the forenoon of Wednesday, the 22d inst. The chair was taken by the President. Wm. Colgate, Esq., read an abstract of the Treasurer's Annual Report. We gather from it the following particulars:—

Receipts.

Balance in the Treasury, April 6, 1849,	$631 95
Legacies, during the past year	1,162 25
From churches, associations and individuals	18,536 66
Donations from Auxiliary Societies	10,833 80
Sales of Bibles and Testaments	9,043 15
Returns for books donated	2,517 20
Making the whole receipts	$41,625 01

Expenditures.

Baptist Miss. Union, for Scriptures in China	$1,500 00
" " " " " in Siam	1,500 00
" " " " " in Assam	1,000 00
" " " " " for Karens	3,000 00
" " " " " for Telloogoos	500 00
" " " " " in France	500 00
" " " " " in Germany	1,000 00
English Bap. Miss. Union, India	2,000 00

Salaries and Traveling Expenses	10,379 08
Total Expenditures	$41,235 33
Balance in the Treasury, April 6, 1850	$389 63

An abstract of the Managers' Annual Report was then presented by Wm. H. Wyckoff, Esq. This report is of considerable length, and goes over much ground, which we have not space to follow. The principal subject of debate during the session of the Society was the proposed new version of the Bible. After a great deal of animated discussion, it was finally, by a large majority, decided to reject the proposition of a new translation. The Society then proceeded to the election of officers, after which it adjourned sine die.

Essays on Benevolence.—Three of the prize essays on Systematic Benevolence, which had the $400 premium divided between them, have been published by the American Tract Society, in a neat 18mo. volume, with the title "Systematic Benevolence." The essays are written by Rev. Parsons Cooke, D. D., 36 pp.; Rev. Samuel Harris, 87 pp.; and Rev. E. A. Lawrence 163 pp.

The Newspapers in New York and New England.—From a list of newspapers published by A. M. Pettingill, Boston, we learn that there are printed in

Maine	53	Rhode Island	21
New Hampshire	85	Connecticut	46
Vermont	39
Massachusetts	177	Total in New England	371

☞ Correspondents whose communications have reached our office since Third-day of last week, will please find an apology for any apparent neglect of them in the fact that the editor has been absent in attendance upon the meeting of the Eastern Association, and returned only in time to look to the more pressing matters connected with the issue of this paper.

General Intelligence.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. SECOND-DAY, May 20

Mr. Davis, of Mass., from the Committee of Conference, on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Census Bill, made a report which was concurred in. Numerous petitions were presented, and many reports from committees on private cases were made. On motion of Mr. Dickinson, the bill to establish a Branch Mint at New York was made the special order for Friday next; the bill to promote the progress of the Useful Arts was again taken up and amended on motion of the Patent Committee.

House of Representatives.

The House made a feint of looking into the Cuba business; but there was nothing accomplished.

In Senate. THIRD-DAY, May 21.

The Senate took up Mr. Yulee's resolution of inquiry relative to the invasion of Cuba, which was amended on the suggestion of Mr. Walker, to call on the President for information as to the authority by which he has dispatched national vessels to intercept the expedition. After some considerable discussion, it was, on motion of Mr. Clay, laid on the table, in order to consider the Omnibus Bill.

House of Representatives.

The House listened to and referred two or three bills of comparatively little importance, and then resumed the consideration of the California question. Mr. Haymond made a non-intervention and anti-Nashville-Convention speech; and Mr. Geery and Mr. King of Mass. made Northern speeches in in reply.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, May 22.

The Senate devoted its debates mainly to the Omnibus Bill, Mr. Upham, Mr. Soulé, and Mr. Downs acting as speech-makers. Mr. Pratt, of Md., proposed an amendment to Jefferson Davis' proviso, which the Mississippi Senator accepted. It was to the effect that the section of the Omnibus Bill, which prohibits the territorial legislatures from passing laws either to introduce or exclude slavery, shall not be construed to prevent them from passing any law necessary to protect the rights of any kind of property; that is to say, if slave-owners make their way into New Mexico, and their slaves assert their right of property, which God gave them, in themselves, their masters may still have their right of property in the same beings established and defended by law the same as in Georgia or Carolina.

House of Representatives.

In the House, the report of the Committee on Elections, refusing to admit the delegates from New Mexico and Deseret to seats as Representatives, was considered, with no other action than postponement until California shall have been disposed of. The first Tuesday in July is fixed for the renewal of the discussion relative to New Mexico and Deseret.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, May 23.

Mr. Hale submitted a resolution, inquiring into the necessity of amending the rules of the Senate, in relation to admission upon the floor. Mr. Mangum moved a substitute, providing that printed permits be prepared, by which each Senator may daily admit to the floor one person. After a spicy debate, the whole subject was referred to a Select Committee. After debate upon amendments proposed, the bill was again laid over, and the Omnibus Bill was taken up. After some colloquial remarks between Mr. Soulé and Mr. Davis of Miss. and Messrs. Foote and Hale, the Senate adjourned.

House of Representatives.

The House varied the monotony of its exercises by a rather animated debate on a proposed increase of the army for the protection of the frontiers exposed to the Indians. But without disposing of the question, the House adjourned.

In Senate. SIXTH-DAY, May 24.

The Senate was occupied with the bill to establish a Branch Mint at New York. Mr. Benton moved to amend by providing for another Branch Mint as well as an assaying office at San Francisco. Mr. Butler moved to amend this by providing for still another Branch Mint at Charleston, in order that the commerce of the country need not be concentrated at New York, and the relative importance of the South suffer diminution. Both these amendments were defeated, after which the Senate adjourned till Second-day, when it will resume its fruitful discussions.

House of Representatives.

The House passed the bill for the increase of the army, and then adjourned till Second-day.

FROM CUBA.

By the U. S. Steamship Ohio, we have received from Cuba the intelligence of the taking of Cardenas by the invading forces. Gen. Lopez landed at Cardenas, about 90 miles from Havana, on the 17th inst., with about 500 men, and took possession of the town. The garrison consisted of one company of about 60 men, who made but a slight resistance. They were driven into a church, and after losing three men killed, they surrendered. Several other vessels left New Orleans previous to the Creole, containing in all 12 or 15 hundred men, but where they are to land is not known. The greatest excitement existed in Havana, amounting to a panic. The city was under martial law, and several thousand militia had been enrolled, and arms were being given them. The resident foreigners were called upon to enrol. There were 1,500 troops at Matanzas, and 800 were dispatched from Havana at 1 o'clock A. M. of the 20th, to reinforce them and march against Lopez. It was rumored that the force under Lopez had increased to 2,000, and that he was already half way to Matanzas. On the 16th news was received that a large body was collected on "Woman's" Island, near Cape Catoche, Yucatan. The General of Marines, with several vessels and about 3,000 men, started immediately for that point. Just before the Ohio left, the Spanish steamer Pizzaro came in with 105 prisoners. The report was, that they were to be shot that day at 12 o'clock, or at least one out of every ten; the balance to be confined in the dungeons of Moro Castle. The force on the Creole, with which Gen. Lopez effected the landing, is but a small part of the Expedition. It is known that some ten or twelve vessels have left New Orleans and different parts of the Gulf, probably to land simultaneously at different points. It was reported that Lopez had broken up the Railroad to Cardenas in several places. The merchants and bankers in Havana were removing their money, &c. to the Fort for safety. The Ohio, Georgia and Falcon, were compelled to anchor at the entrance of the harbor. Capt. Schenck protested through the American Consul to the Captain-General, and demanded a safe anchorage, but was refused and told he might go to sea as soon as he pleased. None of the passengers were permitted to go on shore except those having passports. No communication was allowed between the passengers, not even between the officers, until a permit was obtained from the Captain General.

LATER—The following is an extract from a letter received at Charleston, per steamer Isabel, dated Cardenas, May 20, 1850:—

"Gen. Lopez, accompanied by about 500 men, landed at this place from the steamer Creole, between 2 and 3 o'clock on the morning of the 19th May, (Sunday.) After a short struggle with the few troops stationed here, they took possession of the town, and then besieged the house of the Governor, where they met a good resistance. They set fire to his house. He was consequently forced either to give up or to be burned to death. The invaders kept possession of the town until yesterday, when they left about 8 o'clock, carrying with them our Governor, one or two officers, besides the money they had robbed from the public Treasury. They had a second action with the troops before leaving, and several were killed on both sides.

"We open our letter to advise you of the safe arrival of our Governor with the two officers captured by Lopez. Near Paypieda they fell in with a fishing smack, and it is said that Lopez agreed to put them on board, on condition that the Governor would use his influence to save the lives of those left behind. Five of Lopez's gang are now in the stocks."

A telegraphic dispatch from Savannah, May 26, says:—

Much excitement was produced here last night by the arrest of Gen. Lopez by the U. S. Marshal, under orders from the President of the United States. His aid, Maj. Sanchez Essnaga, was also taken into custody. They were carried before Judge Nichols of the District Court. The Court room was densely crowded. No evidence being adduced to justify commitment, the parties were discharged at about 11¾ o'clock last night. He left the city at 7 o'clock this morning (Sunday) for Mobile.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

By the late arrivals we have the following intelligence from Europe:

All is quiet in France. A new electoral law has been passed by the Assembly, which will considerably restrict the right of suffrage. The people permit with great good humor, the insanity of the government. The Greek question has been settled—England having obtained the ultimatum demanded by Mr. Wyre. Letters from Rome state that tranquility prevailed in that city and throughout the Roman States, but that arrests continued to be made there, and that the public mind was rather agitated. Numerous and varied as are the difficulties with which the recently-restored Government of Pio Nono has to contend, they all sink into comparative unimportance before the specter-like apparitions of an exhausted Treasury and an exploded Loan, which now rise menacingly before the harassed vision of the Minister of Finance. The fact is, that the Papal Government is at the present moment completely at the mercy of the great European capitalists. The head of Catholicism is at the feet of the Jewish chiefs, the Messrs. de Rothschild. Intelligence has been received that a very extensive organization is being formed in Sicily to once more throw off the hated yoke of the Neapolitan Bourbon. Austria is to pay Russia three million seven hundred rubles for the assistance of the Czar in crushing Hungary. She has handed over to Haynau, the atrocious butcher, the estates of the murdered Count Bathyani, and to Jellachich the large possessions of General Ernest Kiss. Turkey has fixed the imprisonment of Kossuth and his brother patriots at nine months, beginning July last, and has given notice to this effect to the Austrian Internuncio. They are now, therefore, free. The diplomatic arrangements between England and Spain have been definitively settled. The English expedition in search of Sir John Franklin sailed on the 8th. The chief topic in England was the increase of steam navigation, and there were many projects on foot for the improvement and enlargement of the steam marine of the country. Among the new designs is one that has been talked of for many years—the connection of the western ports of Ireland with Halifax by a line of steamers. This is a very important movement—important to Ireland, and of very grave interest to the commercial men of Liverpool.

Latest from Europe.

On Second-day morning, May 27, the new Steamship Asia arrived at Halifax, with one week later news from Europe, which was published in New York, in less than ten days after it left Liverpool. The most important item is, that the French and Russian Governments have taken umbrage at the mode in which Lord Palmerston's agent at Athens brought the Greek difficulty to a conclusion, and have withdrawn their Ambassadors from London. From France, we have reports of a very violent agitation, occasioned by some proposed change in the electoral law. A considerable rise in bread stuff is also reported.

The Middletown (Conn.) Sentinel and Witness says that Balcomb, one of the murderers of old Mr. White, a few weeks since, has confessed his participation in the murder and robbery. He charges Calhoun with having struck the first two blows, and then he struck him also, three or four times. Menasseth and Cobb, who started with them on the business, made some excuses, and did not go to the house. The next day, the money was divided equally between the three white men, the Indian (Menasseth) not being present. He also confesses, that they had laid their plans to murder and rob others—and also to rob the Winsted Bank. They are, however, cut short in their wicked career.

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.—The steamship Crescent City reached this port on Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock. The steamer Tennessee arrived at Panama on the 12th of May, having left San Francisco on the 21st of April. She brought $588,000 in gold dust, 132 passengers, and the U. S. mails. The Crescent City brings $2,000 in specie to Cann & Brothers, and about $200,000 in the hands of passengers. The steamship Philadelphia arrived at Chagres on the 15th inst. and was to leave on the following day.

There has been a large fire in Sacramento City. The loss is estimated to be about $60,000. The question of admission or independence seems to be the prevailing political topic at present.

California papers speak of the prospects of gold-diggers as quite satisfactory. They also say that the stocks of lumber which have accumulated in the market, have rendered the value of the article almost nominal. Real estate has fallen to at least one-third of its former value, and there are very few operations at that. Rents have gone down, in an equal ratio, and will have to go still lower. John H. Peoples, editor of the first American paper published in Mexico during the war, Lieut. Bache, of the United States Navy, Lieut. Browning, and two others, were drowned in an unfortunate expedition to Trinidad bay.

FROM THE ISTHMUS.—From copies of the Panama Echo, of the 7th inst., and the Panama Star, of the 9th inst., brought by the Ohio, the following intelligence is gleaned:

The Small Pox is rapidly spreading in this place, several victims having already fallen. Col. Allen, Mail Agent of California, the principal proprietor of the Pacific News, left here on the Oregon last Wednesday for San Francisco. We understand he gave $25,000 for Mr. Faulkner's interest in this establishment. The crowd of passengers bound for California, congregated in this city in the early part of the week, has been immense. As a consequence of this rush of emigrants, tickets for the steamer Oregon, which sailed from this port last Wednesday evening for San Francisco, rose to an exorbitant price. As high as $1,000 to $1,200 was offered and paid for a cabin ticket, and from $600 to $800 for a steerage passage. Sailing vessels, too, the Sea Queen, Miceno, Sarah & Eliza, Lalla, Gustave, Norman and others, were in great demand, and tickets on them commanded a premium, in many instances from 25 to 50 per cent on first cost. The Panama market is at present well supplied with mules; the average price of these animals ranges from $80 to $100 per head. Beef Cattle are selling in this market at $20 to $25 per head, weighing probably from 400 to 500 lbs. Hogs are plenty in the country, and very fat. The Pork we get here is very sweet, and greatly relished by travelers. Hogs bring from $12 to $20 per head, weighing from 150 to 200 lbs.

A MISSING WHITE BOY FOUND WITH A TRIBE OF INDIANS.—Some two years ago a Scotch couple named McDonald, living in Pictou, Nova Scotia, lost a son aged six years. The boy when last seen was in the woods, and as, after a thorough search, he could not be found, living or dead, it was generally supposed that he had been eaten up by bears, which were quite numerous in that vicinity at that time. There the matter rested, and soon after the father died. Within a short time, however, the widowed mother has received information that a white boy about eight years old is living with a tribe of Indians located at some distance above Pictou. The Indians can give no satisfactory account of how they became possessed of the boy, who, upon being questioned, answered with a Scotch accent, that his name was McDonald. The mother, satisfied with the description of the boy, is now on her way to the location of the Indians to reclaim him as her lost son. [Boston Traveler.

PRINTING PRESS SPECULATION.—A gentleman of New Orleans, in June last, shipped to San Erancisco a printing press, with the necessary type, etc. They cost there about $2000. By the Ohio he received a letter informing him that they had safely arrived, and had been sold to a company at Sacramento City for $15,000. Some of the members of this company are well known. Their purpose in making the purchase, was to establish a new paper to be called "The Sacramento Transcript," the first number of which was to be issued very soon after the sailing of the California. The publishers express confidence in their ability to make it the best paper in California.

RUSH OF EMIGRANTS.—An astonishing and unprecedented number of immigrants arrived at New-York from Europe last week. From the 13th to the 19th inst., they numbered seventeen thousand eight hundred and one, being an average of 2,543 per day, or at the rate of 927,000 per year. Twenty-three vessels arrived on one day, with 4,859. One vessel, the Western World, brought over 800 passengers.

SUMMARY.

The evening train from New York, Saturday, killed a man who was walking on the track near Newington, between Hartford and New Haven. He was old and grey-headed, and supposed to belong in Lowell; nothing was found on his body, which was brought to Hartford, to indicate his name. He was partially intoxicated at the time. The cow-catcher of the engine struck and broke both his legs and threw him off the track; but he was dead when those on the train reached him.

The 11th of June next will be a memorable day for those who take an interest in the progress of the Temperance Reform. The Sons of Temperance hold a jubilee in Boston on that day, and it is estimated that 30,000 will be present. A large delegation from this City are preparing to be there. The fare will be placed so low that none need remain at home on that account.

A half century ago two merchants of Hillsborough county, Mass., were implicated in extensive counterfeiting operations, and held to bail for their appearance at Court in large sums. Both forfeited their recognizances and fled. One of them afterward became Mayor of a city in Maine, and the other a member of the Canadian Parliament.

The evidence adduced in the examination of the Wentworths, looks dark against the prisoners, and they will undoubtedly be sent to New Hampshire. Miss Kelly testified to having seen Henry in Manchester the night of the murder, and though she never saw him before or since, she pointed him out among the persons in the Court room. One or two witnesses were examined for the defense who testified that they saw him in Saco the same night; but their evidence, in some particulars, was contradictory.

As an evidence of the progress of California, the Pacific News, of the 17th March, states that six months since there was not a steamer in the California waters, except the Pacific Mail Steamers, and that at the above date there were fifteen steamers running on the rivers, some half dozen on the coast as far as Panama, eight steamers on the stocks nearly ready for launching, and about twenty-five on their way from the States.

The Ohio State Journal states that a block of Ohio marble, from the Xenia quarry, four feet long, two feet high, and fourteen inches deep, will be presented by Gov. Ford, in behalf of the State of Ohio, to the Washington Monument. The venerable Judge Burnet, of Cincinnati, has furnished the following inscription, which the Governor has decided to adopt: "Ohio: [Coat of Arms.] The Memory of Washington and the Union of the States. Sunta Perpetua."

Donaldsonville, La., was visited by a tremendous storm on Saturday, May 11, which did considerable damage. The steamers Mary Foley and Chalmette lost their chimneys and pilot houses, and several of their officers were severely injured. The damage to property is immense. The sugar houses of Messrs. Trist, Ventriss, Picau, and Judge Duffell, have been leveled to the ground, together with several small buildings.

Five thousand tons of T rail have been purchased for the Rome and Watertown Railroad, and part of it is on the ground. Engines and cars have also been contracted for, and it is expected that the road will be put in operation from Rome to Pierpont Manor, a distance of 35 miles, the present season. The reliable means of the road are already $800,000 and increasing.

The project of a railroad from Syracuse to Binghampton is again agitated. It is stated that eastern capitalists stand ready to take the remainder of the stock, after the subscription of $100,000, by individuals on the line of the road, and the sum already subscribed lacks but from $4,000 to $6,000 of that amount.

On Saturday last, a Jew, who gave evidence in the Liverpool Police Court in a case of felony, refused to sign his deposition, as by so doing he would violate the Sabbath. Mr. Rushton said that as the witness refused to sign the deposition, on religious grounds, he would allow him to do so on the following Monday.

The Minnesota Pioneer says that the flood of immigration has at last burst through the barriers of Lake Pepin, and St. Paul is crowded with hundreds of strangers, old and young, western and eastern, of much and of little experience in frontier life. The present population of St. Paul is about 1,000, nearly all of whom landed there during the past year, strangers in a strange place.

The cholera is abating in the cities on the southern and western rivers. The cases are almost totally confined to emigrants, who, having arrived at New-Orleans, were immediately shipped up the river without any opportunity of recovering from the ill effects of confinement during the sea voyage.

A new and dangerous counterfeit on the Bank of Whitehall (N. Y.) has just made its appearance. It is a fac simile of the genuine bill, and can with difficulty be detected. The signatures are not good, but the engraving appears to be an exact transfer of the original.

Hon. William C. Preston, the Senator, has resigned the Presidency of the University of South Carolina, to take effect at the next meeting of the Trustees, in December. "Continued debility," is assigned by him as the reason.

Six hundred bushels of green peas and five hundred quarts of strawberries were shipped from Norfolk, Va., for Baltimore, toward the close of last week. Some four hundred bushels of peas were also taken to Washington and Alexandria.

From an article in the Cincinnati Price Current of the 1st inst., it would appear that there are now in operation, west of the Allegheny Mountains, 97,200 spindles consuming yearly 27,150 bales of Cotton.

A lad named Buck, 15 years old, fell off the great rock in Fryeburg, Me., known as the "Jockey Cap," last week, a distance of eighty-five feet; and badly bruised and injured him, though, strange to say, not a bone was broken, and he is expected to recover.

The Maryland State Agricultural Society will open its Fair and Cattle Show on the 17th.

By the arrival at this port of the brig Virginia, Captain Cooper, 14 days from Port-au-Prince, we learn that the United States ships Albany, Yorktown, Germantown, and the steamer Vixen, were still in port, and that the commander of the fleet had demanded a certain sum of money from the Haytien Government, and they were waiting for an answer, which had not been given when Capt. C. sailed.

There was a terriffic storm at Oswego on Friday. The house of James Platt was struck by lightning, but no one was injured. Immense quantities of hail fell, and the Lake was tossed into a tempest of foam. No particulars of loss are given.

The scythe-snath shop of Edwards & Beckwith of Charlemont, Franklin Co., Mass., was destroyed by fire last Wednesday night. Loss $2,500; partially insured at the People's Office, Worcester.

There have been one hundred and two deaths by small pox in Boston, from December 1, 1849, up to the 18th inst. The disease is prevalent throughout the city. There are several cases at the South End.

On Sunday afternoon, May 19, a sail-boat, containing four young men, was capsized in the Schuylkill River, above the Columbia Railroad bridge, by a sudden flaw of wind. One of the occupants saved himself by clinging to the bottom of the boat. The other three were drowned.

The steamer Columbus, bound from New Orleans to St. Louis, collapsed one of her flues, by which one man was instantly killed, and some 10 or 12 persons were scalded. Several jumped overboard, and are supposed to have been lost.

MARRIED.

On Thursday, May 23d, 1850, by Eld. J. Croffut, Mr. JOHN MURPHY to Miss PHEBE A. CROFFUT, all of New York.

DIED.

In Westerly, R. I., May 23d. EDGAR H. BABCOCK, aged 19 years, son of Asher M. Babcock. His illness was very short. He was attacked with pleurisy, which terminated by congestion of the lungs. He was a young man of more than ordinary promise. Hence he was loved and esteemed by all who knew him. He embraced the gospel of Christ about two years since, and was baptized into membership with the Seventh-day Baptist Church, in the fellowship of which he joyfully walked and labored until his decease.

"Life's labor done, as sinks the day,
Light from its load the spirit flies;
While Heaven and Earth combine to say,
How blest the righteous when he dies."

At Hopkinton, R. I., May 21st, JOHN CALVIN, son of Benjamin and Lydia Ann Kenyon, aged 1 year 10 months and 8 days.

Western Association.

THE attention of the churches of the Seventh-day Baptist Western Association is called to the subject of their annual correspondence with that body. The plan of that correspondence has not been rendered sufficiently definite, the result of which has been, that we have failed to elicit from that source much that it would be desirable to bring before the Association respecting the labors and condition of the churches. It will be seen, by a reference to the Minutes of the last Session, that a Committee was appointed, "to prepare and present to the churches instructions in regard to matters deemed proper to be reported in their letters." The report of the Committee, with an amendment of the Association is published in the Minutes. It is very desirable that the letters presented at the approaching Anniversary, should, as far as practicable, conform to that plan. A fear that the subject might be overlooked by some of the churches has prompted the publication of this notice. T. E. BABCOCK, Cor. Sec.

Western Association.

THE Seventh-day Baptist Western Association will hold its Fifteenth Anniversary with the church in Friendship, Allegany Co., N. Y., commencing on the Fourth-day before the fourth Sabbath in June (19th day of the month,) 1850.

The churches are requested to "lay by them in store as God has prospered them," that it may be forwarded to the Annual Meeting for the purpose of liquidating the debt incurred by the Executive Board in the associational mission.

Christian Psalmody—Pocket Edition.

IN compliance with requests from various quarters, the publisher of the New Hymn Book—Christian Psalmody—has issued a second edition, on lighter paper and with smaller margins, by which the bulk and weight of the books are reduced about one-third, rendering them much more convenient for carrying in the pocket. The price is also reduced 12½ cents per copy. Those wishing books, of either edition, can now be supplied. Price of the larger edition from 75 cents to $1 50, according to the style of binding. Price of the smaller edition from 62½ cents to $1 00. Orders should be addressed to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Central Association.

THE next session of the Seventh-day Baptist Central Association will be held with the Church at Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in June, (5th day of the month,) 1850.

North-Western Association.

THE North-Western Seventh-day Baptist Association will hold its annual session with the Church at Milton, Rock Co., Wis., commencing on Thursday, the 4th day of July next. Eld. Stillman Coon is to preach the introductory discourse. S. C. BURDICK, Rec. Sec.

History of Romanism.

In a large octavo volume of 750 pages, printed in large type, on the finest paper, and embellished with more than fifty engravings, chiefly from Original Designs, and bound in muslin, extra gilt. Price $3. THE HISTORY OF ROMANISM, from its earliest origin to the present time, by the Rev. John Dowling, D. D. A new and enlarged edition, with the Author's last additions, and a Supplement, containing a Sketch of the Life of Pope Pius IX., &c.

The best evidence of the intrinsic value of this remarkably popular work is to be seen in the fact that within the comparatively recent period of its first publication, the extraordinary number of 17,000 copies have been disposed of.

The following is an extract from a letter from the Rev. Dr. Giustiniani, the converted Roman Catholic priest, who is abundantly qualified by education, observation, and extensive study, to testify to the fidelity and value of a "History of Romanism."

"If the reader wishes to be acquainted with the errors of Romanism, he has only to open the pages of Dowling's History. If the reader is anxious to read an epitome of the history of the popes, their ambition; their intrigues; their avariciousness; their tyranny; their superstitions, and their mummeries, he can here find all proved and authenticated by the most accredited authors of the Church of Rome." L. GIUSTINIANI.

"It reflects much credit on the skill, patience, industry, and judgment of the author; he appears very justly to have conceived the idea of a work, which has long been regarded as a desideratum by a large portion of those interested in the great controversy with the Romanists."—Protestant Churchman.

"We regard it as a most important addition to the historical and religious literature of the age. Its contents form a rich storehouse of historical instruction, which should be placed within the reach of every family."—N. Y. Christian Intelligencer.

"It presents a succienct, but sufficiently full, history of the rise, progress, errors, cruelties, and present condition of the Papacy, authenticated by reference to the most undoubted historic sources, related in a spirited, engaging, and impressive style, and arranged in the most lucid manner. It abounds in facts and incidents, and with its beautiful illustrations, is better adapted to furnish a vivid and impressive portraiture of Romanism as it is, than any other book we know of."—N. Y. Evang.

"The detached portions of Romish history which were every where to be met with, needed to be brought together and presented in systematic order. The reading of one book thus becomes better and cheaper than the reading of many."—Boston Recorder.

"It is written with the ready, popular eloquence, for which the well-known author is distinguished, and cannot fail to arrest attention to the controversy of which it treats. It is a strongly Protestant work, and exhibits the deformities of Popery with great power."—N. Y. Recorder.

THE CROCODILE.

[A Fable for little folks and great ones too.]

BY MRS. J. L. GRAY.

On the banks of the fertile and many-mouthed Nile,
A long time ago lived a fierce crocodile,
Who round him was spreading a vast desolation,
For bloodshed and death seemed his chief occupation;
'T was easy to see
No pity had he;
His tears were but water—there all could agree.

The sheep he devoured, and the shepherd I ween;
The herd feared to graze in the pastures so green,
And the farmer himself, should he happen to meet him,
The monster ne'er scrupled a moment to eat him.
There never before
Was panic so sore,
On the banks of the Nile as this creature spread o'er.

Wherever he went, all were flying before him,
Tho' some in their blindness thought fit to adore him;
But as they came near, each his suit to prefer,
This god made a meal of his base worshiper.
By day and by night
It was his delight,
His votaries to eat—it was serving them right.

Grown proud of his prowess, puffed up with success,
The reptile must travel—how could he do less?
So one fine summer morning, he set out by water,
On a pleasure excursion—his pleasure was slaughter!
To Tentyra's isle,
To visit awhile,
The careless inhabitants there to beguile.

Tho' the Tentyrites thought themselves able before
To conquer each monster that came to their shore,
Yet now they, with horror, were fain to confess,
That this crocodile gave them no little distress.
So in great consternation,
A grand consultation
Was called to convene, of the heads of the nation.

It met; but, alas! such the terror and fright,
They failed to distinguish the wrong from the right;
When, just at this crisis, an Ichneumon small
Stept forth on the platform, in front of them all,
With modesty winning,
To give his opinion
Of measures and means to secure the dominion.

"Grave sirs," said he, bowing, "I see your distress,
And your griefs are, I fear me, past present redress;
Yet still, if to listen should be your good pleasure,
I think I can help you, at least in a measure;
For 'tis my impression,
A little discretion
Than valor itself is a far greater blessing.

"No doubt, 'tis a noble and great undertaking,
Great war on a mighty great foe to be making;
But still, I assure you, 'tis better by far
Not to let this great foe become mighty for war.
While the crocodile lies
In an egg of small size,
To crush him at once you should never depise.

"You see me before you, a poor feeble creature;
Yet I cope with this monster—for such is my nature,
And while you have met here in grand consultation,
This one crocodile to expel from the nation,
I thought it a treat
For breakfast to eat
A dozen or more, which I happened to meet."

And now that my fable is pretty near ended,
I think there should be a brief moral appended;
Beware how you let evil habits grow up;
While feeble and young, you to crush them may hope;
But let them remain
Till strength they attain,
You may find your best efforts to conquer them vain.

CHEMICAL PROPERTIES OF BUTTER.

Butter is nothing more than the substance formed by the union of the oily particles contained in milk. Each of these globules is surrounded by a very thin film of casein, or curd, which can be easily detected with a microscope. When the temperature of the cream or milk is raised, these, from their lightness, press towards the surface, break through the delicate covering which envelopes each globe, and run together into an oily mass; this is butter. The same result is attained by beating or violently agitating the cream, as in churning. This union is purely mechanical, and no chemical action takes place except in the formation of the acid by which the cream is soured, and which is absolutely necessary before the buttery particles will unite. Thus the cream must either be permitted to stand until it sours, or else it becomes sour during the process of churning. In the latter case it is often necessary to raise it to a higher temperature, and sometimes it is best to add a little sour milk, or some other acid substance while churning, and this will be found often to hasten the formation of butter. In many parts of Holland they are very careful to skim the milk while yet sweet, but allow the cream to become sour before it is churned. By churning the cream sweet, you obtain butter of a more delicate flavor but in less quantity. When soda or ammonia is used to keep the cream sweet, you obtain the largest possible quantity of butter, and it has all the delicate flavor peculiar to that made from sweet cream. In many countries all the milk is churned, under the impression that in this way more butter is obtained than from the cream alone. This can not be the case where the cream has been properly separated from the milk; and besides in churning the whole of the milk, it is impossible to separate all the butter, from the difficulty of acting equally upon and keeping in motion so large a body of fluid. In the vicinity of towns, where there is ready sale for butter-milk, it may perhaps be good economy to churn milk; but in the country where there is no market for butter-milk, it is undoubtedly a better plan to churn only the cream, while from the skimmed milk a marketable cheese can always be manufactured. The proper temperature of cream in churning is about 55 deg.; when the whole milk is churned it should be 8 deg. or 10 deg. higher. If it is raised too high, the butter comes quick, but it is usually soft and white. This is often the case in warm weather and the only remedy is to use ice, or to keep the milk in a very cool dairy. In churning, the motion should be regular and moderate; slower in warm weather than in cold, that the temperature may be uniform throughout the the whole mass; and it has been found, from a series of experiments, that the hardest and finest quality of butter was obtained after churning at the above temperature from an hour and a quarter to an hour and a half. To ensure good hard butter at all seasons of the year, particular attention should be paid to the temperature of the cream, and on a good dairy farm, ice should always be accessible, by which, even in the hottest summer weather, the cream can be brought down to the proper temperature.

It is well known that the food of the cow influences both the quantity and quality of of the butter. When the cow is fed on hay or dry fodder, the butter always comes the hardest; and it is said that the orange carrot, when fed to milk cows, will impart an agreeable flavor and a rich yellow color to the butter. To add the juice of the carrot to the butter after it is made, as is sometimes done to give it a saleable color, is a very bad plan, as it makes it more difficult to keep sweet. When butter is to be kept any length of time, it should be worked as free from butter-milk as possible. The imperfect manner in which this is done, is the principal cause of its becoming rancid so soon. On taking it from the churn, it should be placed in a linen cloth and pressed between two boards until most of the butter-milk is extracted; it should then be washed in cold water, changed as often as it becomes milky, and after being salted it should be set away in a cool place until the next day, when, by again working it over, the remainder of the butter-milk can be easily separated. Now let it be put down in earthen or stone-ware jars, packed as closely as possible, and after sprinkling the top with salt, let a thin layer of powdered charcoal be put over all, the more effectually to exclude the air and to absorb those gasses, the tendency of which is to hasten decomposition. Butter put down in this way can be kept sweet a long time, even in warm climates. In Holstien, where very choice butter is made, they pack it in firkins made of beechwood charred on the inside. The salt used should be of the best quality and very fine. Much butter is spoiled from using salt containing lime and other substances which hasten decomposition. Salt can easily be purified by pouring upon it a little warm water and allowing it to drain; it dissolves and takes out the lime and other extraneous substances, and leaves the salt nearly pure. The quantity usually added to butter is one ounce to the pound. After butter has become rancid, it can be restored and made perfectly sweet by a very simple process. This is, to wash it well in cold water, salt it anew, and add a little sugar, say half an ounce to the pound. This will be found to render it much more palatable, although it may not entirely restore that delicate flavor peculiar to new and sweet butter, which once lost can never be restored.

The above hints on making and preserving butter, I have translated from a French Agricultural Journal with such additions and alterations as make them applicable on this side the Atlantic.

THUNDER AND LIGHTNING.

These sublime and terrific phenomena are well known to every individual, and are occasionally displayed in every region of the globe. A thunder storm usually happens in calm weather, though sometimes it has been accompanied with furious winds. A dark cloud is observed to attract other clouds to it, by which it continually increases both in magnitude and apparent density; and when it has thus accumulated to a great size, its lower surface swells in particular parts toward the earth, and light flimsy clouds are sometimes seen flying under it, and continually changing their ragged shape. During the time the cloud is thus forming, the heavens begin to darken apace, the whole mass sinks down, wind arises, and frequently shifts in squalls, flashes of lightning are seen to dart from one part of it to another, and often to illuminate the whole mass and the surrounding landscape. When the cloud has acquired a sufficient expansion, the lightning strikes the earth in two opposite points; its paths lying through the whole body of the cloud. Heavy rains, and sometimes hail-showers, accompany these dire phenomena, till, after numerous successive discharges, the cloud rarifies, and the storm ceases. The scene of a thunder storm is generally in the middle regions of the atmosphere; and it is not a frequent case that an electrical discharge is made into the earth. The lightning darts from one cloud into another, and when the clouds are high there is no danger to persons or objects on the surface of the earth. But when the cloud is low, and within the striking distance of the earth, when the flashes appear to strike perpendicularly, and when only a second or two elapses between seeing the flash, and hearing the report of the thunder, every object around may be considered as within the limits of danger: for then the lightning strikes into some part of the earth, and every object in the line of its course is liable to be injured. We may ascertain the distance of a thunder-cloud, by counting the number of seconds or pulsations that intervene between seeing the lightning, and hearing the first sound of the thunder, allowing about 1,142 feet or 380 yards for every second. Thus, if two seconds intervene, the distance is 760 yards; if three seconds, 1,140 yards; if four and a half seconds, 1,710 yards, or nearly a mile, &c. During a thunder storm, the lightning sometimes appears as balls of fire, moving with great velocity: this is the most dangerous species of lightning, and where they strike, corn-yards are set on fire, and sometimes flocks of sheep, herds of cattle, and human beings,, are instantly killed. Another form is that of zig-zag lightning, which most frequently accompanies thunder storms. It is likewise destructive, but not to the same extent as the ball lightning. The next species is the sheet lightning, which appears in the form of a lambent flame, or a sudden illumination without any determinate form. It is never known to do any injury.

As to the cause of thunder storms, it is now ascertained, beyond dispute, that lightning and electricity are identical. This had been, long ago, surmised, after the attention of philosophers had been directed to the snbject of electricity. It was observed that lightning, in its course, took the best conductors of electricity, such as bell-wires, and gilding; that it burned, exploded, and destroyed conducting substances, as electricity does; that it struck the most elevated objects, as trees and spires; that the crooked form of zig-zag lightning was similar to that of an electric spark; and that it affected the nervous system, and changed the polarity of the mariner's needle, as electricity was found to do. This was, at last, put to the test of experiment by Dr. Franklin, by elevating, during a thunder storm, a kite with a metallic point on the head of it, when he drew an electric spark from the cloud by means of a key, connected with a wet string, which was connected with the kite.

MAXIMS DURING A THUNDER STORM.

When in the open fields, avoid trees, but be near them—say a distance of thirty or forty feet—as high objects are more likely to be struck with lightning than those which are low. When walking in the open air, avoid ponds, rivers, streamlets, and every mass of water; for water, being a conductor of electricity, might determine the lightning to the place we occupy. Do not avoid rain, as is safer, in a thunder storm, to be completely drenched, than otherwise. When in a house, persons should avoid sitting near the fire place, as it brings us in connection with the highest part of the building, and which contains such conducting substances as the grate, the fender, and fire-irons. Bell-wires, mirrors, gildings, lustres, and other metallic substances, should also be avoided. The safest position is in the middle of a large room, at a distance from conducting substances, with our chair placed on a matress.

TRANSPLANTING.

All the different parts of this work come under one general requisite for success—which is to take the tree up and set it out again just as it previously stood, with as little violence to the different parts as practicable.

1. One of the most obvious points, is to take up the roots as nearly whole or uninjured as may be done. Instead of cutting off the roots close to the tree, the spade must be set far back from it; and if the tree be of such sort as has tough roots, it should be slowly drawn up by the strength of two or three men; but if the roots are tender, the tree must be lifted out, earth and all, and the earth removed by shaking. The roots of a young tree usually extend in a circle equal in breadth to its hight. But as about one-half of the roots must be cut off, even in a careful lifting of a good sized tree, the top must be lightened with the knife in a corresponding proportion. From apple trees, one-half of last year's shoots should be cut off, and and two-thirds or three-quarters from peach trees.

2. A second essential requisite, is to keep the roots moist while out of the ground. For this reason it is very useful to plunge them in a bed of soft mud, made on purpose, which coats over the roots and preserves the moisture for a long time on their surface, until they be again set in earth or packed in wet moss for sending long distances.

3. A third requisite is to replace the earth compactly among the roots, leaving no interstices. To do the work well, the earth must be fine, and gradually sifted in from the shovel, spreading out all the roots with the fingers as the work proceeds. Dashing in a few quarts of water before the hole is filled, settles the earth well against all the roots, the sounding earth soon absorbing the superabundant moisture, and leaving the tree firm. This close contact of soil, it will be observed, is assisted by the muddying of the roots, already described.

The subsequent success and vigorous growth of the tree, depend on three requisites. 1. First and most important, is a fertile soil. This may be secured for the tree while young, by digging large holes, and filling them (except in immediate contact with the roots) with very rich soil, or with short manure well mixed with soil. Young apple trees, as large as a riding stick, with holes seven feet in diameter thus filled, have borne a bushel of fruit each the fifth summer. By the time the roots have run between these holes, the rest of the ground may have been enriched and deepened by manuring and plowing. 2. A second requisite, scarcely less essential, and, indeed, often more so with peach and some other trees, is to keep the soil mellow and clean at all times of the season. Even a crop of potatoes or ruta bagas lessens the growth of the trees, although immeasurably less so than sown crops or grass. 3. A third requisite is mulching during dry seasons. This consists merely in covering the ground six inches thick with litter leaves, or similar substances, for several feet each way round the tree, during the hot and dry part of the year. It obviates watering, and assists to an almost incredible degree the growth of the tree.

HANDLING METALS.

In Silliman's American Journal of Science is an interesting article on the possibility of handling melted metals. We extract an account of the experiments of Boutigny:—

"I divided or cut with my hand a jet of melted metal of five or six centimetres, which escaped by the tap; then I immediately plunged the other hand in a pot filled with incandescent metal, which was truly frightful to look at. I involuntarily shuddered. Both hands came out of the ordeal victorious. And now, if any thing astonishes me, it is that such experiments are not quite common. I shall of course be asked, what precautions are necessary to preserve one's self from the disorganizing action of the incandescent matter? I answer, none—only to have no fear, to make the experiment with confidence, to pass the hand rapidly; the repulsive force which exists in incandescent bodies might be overcome, and thus the contact with the skin be affected, which would undoubtedly remain in a state easy to understand. To form a conception of the danger there would be in passing the hand too rapidly into the metal in fusion, it will suffice to recollect that the resistance is proportionate to the square of the velocity, and in so compact a fluid as liquid iron, this resistance increases certainly in a higher ratio. The experiment succeeds especially when the skin is humid; and the involuntary dread which one feels at facing these masses of fire almost always puts the body into that state of moisture so necessary to success; but, by taking some precautions, one becomes veritably invulnerable. The following is what has succeeded best with me:—I rub my hands with soap, so as to give them a polished surface; then at the moment of making the experiment, I dip my hand into a cold solution of sal ammoniac saturated with sulphurous acid, or simply into water containing some sal ammoniac, and, in default of that, into fresh water."

Franklin's Mode of Lending Money.—"I send you, herewith, a bill of ten louis d'ors. I do not pretend to give much, I only lend it to you. When you return to your country, you can not fail of getting into some business that will, in time, enable you to pay all your debts. In that case, when you meet another honest man in similar distress, you will pay me by leanding the money to him, enjoining him to discharge the debt by like operation when he shall be able, and meet with another opportunity. I hope it may pass through many hands before it meets with a knave to stop its progress. This is a trick of mine to do a great deal of good with a little money. I am not rich enough to afford much in good works, and am obliged to be cunning, and make the most of a little.

THE "CRAZY ANGEL."

We notice by the Southern papers, that Miss Dix is still persevering in her work of true philanthropy, in waking up the minds of the public in behalf of the insane. She is now at the capital of Alabama, beseeching the Legislature to erect a State Asylum for the unfortunate in that State. It will be recollected that she was in this State a few years since, on the same charitable errand. The seeds thus sown among us have since germinated. Steps are now taking for one within our borders.

Nine years ago we had the pleasure of spending an evening with her. She then said if her life was spared, she intended to beseech every State where there is no asylum for the insane, for the erection of one. Seven States since then, through her instrumentality and perseverance, have erected asylums.

While on this subject, we take occasion to relate an anecdote in relation to one in Rhode Island. As both of the parties are now dead to whom we allude, it is too good to be lost.

Nicholas Brown, of Providence, R. I., was a great friend to all charitable institutions. There was no Insane Hospital in that State. Miss Dix visited him for the purpose of getting him enlisted for the erection of one. After much persuasion she committed him to the project, with a promise to make a liberal subscription.

Mr. Brown loved to draw the coppers from Cyrus Butler's huge purse. He would give away a thousand at any time for a charitable purpose, provided a like amount could be obtained from his friend B., a millionaire, who was a noted miser. Mr. Brown headed the subscription with $30,000, and interlined the paper, stating that the institution was to take the name of the largest subscriber. He thought in that way he would entrap his friend Butler for a larger sum than he had put down. He succeeded.

Miss Dix repeatedly called on Mr. Butler but he kept constantly putting her off, without using his pen. She had learned his character and determined to importune the old bachelor until she obtained a noble sum. One day she called on him at his counting-room when several were waiting their turn to do business. As she went in, Mr. B. was somewhat out of humor. He was disputing an item of some ten cents in a carpenter's account. She gently tapped him on the shoulder and laid the subscription before him. He seized his pen and wrote, "C. Butler, $40,000." Handing her the paper he said "So much for Brown's introduction of the crazy angel to me!" Thirty thousand was afterwards subscribed by the citizens of Providence. Mr. Butler died the past year, leaving an estate of $4,000,000 to his niece, Mrs. Duncan. With all his immense wealth, he left no lasting monument to his memory but the Butler Insane Hospital, and that was done while in a pet about a ten cent charge by his carpenter. [Detroit Tribune.

SEEKING EMPLOYMENT IN THE CITY.

Among the mass of correspondence we receive, are occasional letters from young men in the country, seeking advice about coming to the city. We have uniformly replied, "Stay in the country, if you are earning an honest and respectable livlihood, unless you have a way open before you in the city, and energy and advantages to pursue it to profit and honor." There is no place so fatal as the city to a young man of moderate talent and ordinary friends and advantages. The competition for place is overwhelming, and even the stout-hearted aspirant is often trampled down, broken in spirit, and his whole life sacrificed to the mortification and despair of failure. The city attracts much of the best talent of the country to its trades and professions, and that only partially succeeds—the inferior talent is borne quickly to the earth. Better by far stay in the country and earn an independent livelihood, feeling independent and respected, than to crowd a way to a stinted and miserable existence in any city.

If we might say a word to young men who will come to the city in spite of warning, it would be a word of advice to strive, above all things, to live within their earnings, though they may be forced to a homely table fare, plain dress, and few boon companions. Thousands of young men are ruined solely by the false impression that to be respected they must ape all the fashions and follies of the day, whether their means and position justify or not. This impression forces them into dishonest pursuits and practices, not the least of which is running in debt. Every young man, in the city or country, should avoid debt as he would the Evil One. Debt is a slough of despond, a gulf of ruin, in which many a proud spirit is broken and sacrificed to unrelenting furies. [Sun.

CURIOUS FACT.

The Washington correspondent of the Charleston News says:—

The second part of Mr. Ewbank's Patent Office Report contains much valuable matter, procured by a laborious investigation. It appears that the consumption of Sugar in the world is estimated at nearly a million of tons annually. In 1844, Cuba alone furnished 200,000 tons.

From a record in the Post Office Department, it appears that the first stage between New York and Philadelphia commenced running in 1759, and occupied three days. Newspapers were carried by mail, free of charge, until 1758, when by reason of their great increase, they were charged with postage of 9d each year for 50 miles, and 18d. for 100 miles.

Professor Rodgers has commenced his Geological Lectures at the Smithsonian Institute. In the course of his remarks he states some very interesting facts relative to our great rivers. It appears that the Mississippi River drains an area of 300,000 square miles; and the total amount of water discharged per annum, in cubic feet, 8,092,118,940,000.

The amount of sedimentary matter in the Mississippi water is estimated at about one twelve-hundredth part, by measure, of the whole volume discharged per annum; and since the alluvial deposits in the delta are estimated to have a mean depth of 50 feet, and to have been wholly deposited by the Mississippi and its tributaries, the least possible time upon these hypotheses required for the deposition of the delta, would be 13,648 years. The water discharged in the same time would fill a sea 850 miles square and one mile deep.

Death of the Empress Dowager of China.—By a remarkable coincidence—sufficiently so, at least, to be worth recording—the news of the decease of the Queen Dowager of Great Britain arrived at Canton on the same day with an express from the Board of War, at Pekin, announcing that the Empress Dowager of China, also eminent for her virtues, departed this life (lit., went to roam with spirits) upon the 16th day of the 12th moon of the 29th year of Taou-kwang (the 18th of January.) Officers, civil and military, are, thereupon, enjoined to array themselves in white, and perform ceremonies proper for such occasions. They are also to affix a blue stamp to all public documents, and are not to permit drums to beat, or fifes to play in front of their Yamuns. The Pekin Gazettes bear witness to the devout respect with which the Empress Dowager was uniformly treated by His Imperial Majesty, which, however, was no more than proper gratitude on his part, for it was her preference of him over her own offspring which induced Kia-king to nominate Taou-kwang as his successor.

Self-made Men.—Columbus was a weaver. Franklin was a journeyman printer. Sixtus V. was employed in hearding swine. Ferguson and Burns were ploughmen. Æsop was a slave. Hogarth an engraver on pewter pots. Ben Jonson was a bricklayer. Porson was the son of a parish clerk. Akenside was the son of a butcher—so was Wolsey. Cervantes was a common soldier. Halley was the son of a soap boiler. Arkwright was a baker. Blackstone and Southey were sons of linen drapers. Crabbe was a fisherman's son. Keats the son of a livery stable keeper. Variety.

We have it from the best authority, that the mines of Mexico produced forty millions in gold and silver during the last year, the mines of South America about twenty millions, those of California about thirty, and the mines of Europe about fifty, making altogether one hundred and forty millions of gold and silver added to the specie currency of the world in one year, and probably next year the addition will be two hundred millions.

Dr. Harrison, of Edinburg, prefers dandelion coffee to that of Mocha, and many persons, all over the continent, a mixture of chicory and coffee to coffee alone. Dig up the roots of a dandelion, wash them well, but do not scrape them, dry them, cut them into the size of peas, and then roast them in an earthen pot, or coffee roaster of any kind. The great secret of good coffee is to have it fresh burnt and fresh ground.

The Michigan Farmer states that Elijah Buck, a successful cultivator, has met with uniform failure in raising grapes from cuttings in the usual way of placing them nearly perpendicular or obliquely in the soil, not one in ten thus treated ever showing signs of growth. A different mode was afterwards adopted, by placing the cutting horizontally just beneath the surface. Not one in fifty failed.

The debt of the city of Boston has nearly doubled within four years. It now considerably exceeds two millions of dollars. The tax necessary to be assessed this year will be $300,000, besides which it will be necessary to raise $300,000 by a loan for the continuation of the construction of the Jail, and for the completion of the Alms House on Deer Island.

The Journal of Health says, If a child is taken with croup, instantly apply cold water, if possible, suddenly and freely to the neck and chest, with a sponge. The breathing will almost instantly be relieved. So soon as possible, let the sufferer drink as much as it can; then wipe it dry, cover it up warm, and soon a quiet slumber will relieve the parent's anxiety.

It is estimated that 11,000,000 pounds of lard and fat pork will be used in a year in Cincinnati for making lard oil, nearly one-third being converted to stearin. The fat is extracted from the pork, after it is divested of the hams, by means of hot steam under about five atmospheres in large tanks. One establishment thus reduces 600 hogs per day.

On Sunday last, about 4½ o'clock A. M., when the Norwich train was three or four miles on the other side of Worcester, the front axletree, or wheel, of the second-class car broke. The car, in this situation, plowed 300 or 400 feet, and six or eight passengers had limbs broken—none killed.

A newly-arrived German, named John Retz, was seized by two other Germans, in the city of Baltimore, on Wednesday evening last, and robbed of a watch, wallet, and some other trifles. Retz had a large amount of money in his belt under his clothes, which the robbers luckily did not find.

Littell's Living Age.

PROSPECTUS.—This work is conducted in the spirit of Littell's Museum of Foreign Literature, (which was favorably received by the public for twenty years,) but as it is twice as large, and appears so often, we not only give spirit and freshness to it by many things which were excluded by a month's delay, but while thus extending our scope, and gathering a greater and more attractive variety, are able so to increase the solid and substantial part of our literary, historical and political harvest, as fully to satisfy the wants of the American reader.

The elaborate and stately Essays of the Edinburgh, Quarterly, and other Reviews; and Blackwood's noble criticisms on Poetry, his keen political Commentaries, highly wrought Tales, and vivid descriptions of rural and mountain Scenery; and the contribution to Literature, History, and Common Life, by the sagacious Spectator, the sparkling Examiner, the judicious Athenæum, the busy and industrious Literary Gazette, the sensible and comprehensive Britannia, the sober and respectable Christian Observer; these are intermixed with the Military and Naval reminiscences of the United Service, and with the best articles of the Dublin University, New Monthly, Fraser's, Tait's, Ainsworth's, Hood's, and Sporting Magazines, and of Chambers' admirable Journal. We do not consider it beneath our dignity to borrow wit and wisdom from Punch; and, when we think it good enough, make use of the thunder of The Times. We shall increase our variety by importations from the continent of Europe, and from the new growth of the British colonies.

The steamship has brought Europe, Asia, and Africa into our neighborhood; and will greatly multiply our connections, as merchants, travelers, and politicians, with all parts of the world; so that much more than ever it now becomes every intelligent American to be informed of the condition and changes of foreign countries. And this not only because of their nearer connection with ourselves, but because the nations seem to be hastening, through a rapid process of change, to some new state of things, which the merely political prophet cannot compute or foresee.

Geographical Discoveries, the progress of Colonization, (which is extending over the whole world,) and Voyages and Travels, will be favorite matter for our selections; and, in general, we shall systematically and very fully acquaint our readers with the great department of Foreign affairs, without entirely neglecting our own.

While we aspire to make the Living Age desirable to all who wish to keep themselves informed of the rapid progress of the movement—to Statesmen, Divines, Lawyers, and Physicians—to men of business and men of leisure—it is still a stronger object to make it attractive to their wives and children. We believe that we can thus do some good in our day and generation; and hope to make the work indispensable in every well-informed family. We say indispensable, because in this day of cheap literature it is not possible to guard against the influx of what is bad in taste and vicious in morals, in any other way than by furnishing a sufficient supply of a healthy character. The mental and moral appetite must be gratified.

We hope that by "winnowing the wheat from the chaff," by providing abundantly for the imagination, and by a large collection of Biography, Voyages and Travels, History, and more solid matter, we may produce a work which shall be popular, while at the same time it will aspire to raise the standard of public taste.

Terms.—The Living Age is published every Saturday; price 12½ cents a number, or six dollars a year in advance. Remittances for any period will be thankfully received and promptly attended to.

☞ To insure regularity in mailing the work, orders should be addressed to the office of publication.

Clubs, paying a year in advance, will be supplied as follows:

Four copies for - - - - - $20 00
Nine " " - - - - - 40 00
Twelve " " - - - - - 50 00

Complete sets, in 24 volumes, to the end of March, 1850, handsomely bound, packed in neat boxes, and delivered in all the principal cities free of expense of freight, are for sale at forty-eight dollars.

Any volume may be had separately at two dollars, bound, or a dollar and a half in numbers.

Any number may be had for 12½ cents; and it may be worth while for subscribers or purchasers to complete any broken volumes they may have, and thus greatly enhance their value.

Judge Story—Chancellor Kent—President Adams.

I have read the prospectus of "The Living Age" with great pleasure, and entirely approve the plan. If it can only obtain the public patronage long enough, and large enough, and securely enough to attain its true ends, it will contribute in an eminent degree to give a healthy tone, not only to our literature, but to public opinion. It will enable us to possess, in a moderate compass, a select library of the best productions of the age. It will do more; it will redeem our periodical literature from the reproach of being devoted to light and superficial reading, to transitory speculations, to sickly and ephemeral sentimentalities, and false and extravagant sketches of life and character. Joseph Story.

Cambridge, April 24, 1844.

I approve very much of the plan of your work, and if it be conducted with the intelligence, spirit, and taste that the prospectus indicates, (of which I have no reason to doubt,) it will be one of the most instructive and popular periodicals of the day. James Kent.

New York, May 7, 1844.

Of all the periodical journals devoted to literature and science which abound in Europe and in this country, this has appeared to me to be the most useful. It contains indeed the exposition only of the current literature of the English language, but this, by its immense extent and comprehension, includes a portraiture of the human mind in the utmost expansion of the present age.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Our paper of last week contained a brief account of the thirteenth annual meeting of the American and Foreign Bible Society. The deep interest generally felt in the new-translation question, which was extensively discussed at that meeting, induces us to abridge, from the N. Y. Recorder, a more complete report of what was said and done on the subject.

At an early stage in the proceedings, Rev. ISAAC WESCOTT, of Stillwater, rose and remarked, that last year the resolution passed in 1838, restricting the Society to the circulation of the common English version, had been rescinded, and he had now to propose its re-enactment in the following terms:—

Resolved, That this Society, in its issues of the English Scriptures, shall be restricted to the commonly-received version, without note or comment.

This opened the way for a discussion which continued through two days, and in which the leading members of the Baptist denomination took part.

The President, SPENCER H. CONE, was one of the first speakers upon the subject, and his aim was to show, that the principle upon which the Society was founded—"The Bible Translated"—required them to procure and publish the best translations within their reach.

A proposition was then made to vote on the resolution at 5 o'clock, giving about two hours for the discussion, but this proposition was rejected, and the following day at 12 o'clock was fixed as the time for closing the debate and taking the vote.

Several amendments were proposed to the above-named resolution, with a view to get the action of the Society on the question of circulating the Scriptures in the most faithful versions that can be procured. But none of the amendments seemed to meet with favor, and the discussion on the original resolution proceeded.

DR. DOWLING spoke at considerable length, endeavoring to justify himself from the charge of inconsistency in opposing the amended version.

MR. WYCKOFF, the Corresponding Secretary of the Society, followed. He cherished no unkind feelings towards any individual here or elsewhere. He stood in the presence of Almighty God, whom he adored as the God of purity and truth; and the nearer we approach to him, the more shall we love that truth, and endeavor to give it to the nations of the earth. I believe in my soul, that the English version is not a correct one, and it had been generally acknowledged to be so till Dr. Dowling [illegible] contrary. In pleading for the circulation of this Catholic version, they say that its errors can be corrected with very little scholarship. How can I vote to confine ourselves to an erroneous version? If there was but one error, it would be our duty to correct it. One passage says, "He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself." This is incorrect. By damnation, the people generally understand the eternal loss of the soul. Our brethren may tell us that damnation is an old English word, and it has been consecrated; its proper meaning is the same as condemnation, and we must not change it! Some would say, Brother Wyckoff's conduct deserves damnation, and thus try to bring the word back to its proper meaning. We have twenty thousand errors in this book. When the second edition of the English Bible was published, two hundred changes were made in it, and they were made without any authority. We have been told that we aim only to change baptize and say immerse, and that this will hurt the Baptist denomination, who will be charged with making a Baptist Bible. But I don't care what denomination it hurts. Let God's truth be honored; let his truth be sustained. I regard every truth that is concealed or perverted in that book as a prisoner in a dungeon. It is that same truth which God has given which I wish to be given to the nations of the earth. A plan has been proposed by which that truth shall be given to the world. Shall we close down the gates, and declare that there shall not be any such plan? Some plan must be adopted. I have in my pocket a letter from a member of a church in Baltimore, of which Dr. Fuller is pastor, in favor of a change. Dr. Fuller has very much changed his views on the subject, and now approves of a new version. Is it right that we should bind ourselves to an erroneous version, and prohibit Societies from circulating any other version? For the sake of God and his eternal Truth—for the sake of clear consciences when we appear before his throne—for the sake of immortal souls, do not bind yourselves to a version which every Pædobaptist believes to be erroneous.

Rev. Dr. HAGUE said he lifted his hand to God, and in the name of the great Head of the Church protested against doing that which his brother had called on them in the name of God to do. But this new version is not the main question for our consideration. As respects the version of Scripture now in common use, if it contains errors, what shall be said of the book written by command of a heathen king, called the Septuagint, from which John and Christ preached, and which the apostles quoted? If that work was good enough for Christ and his apostles, then the version of a Christian king, believed in by holy men, honored by the glorious dead, and defended at the stake, is good enough for me and for you. If we should change the word baptize into immerse, and win the suffrages of the world, we should have to do the same thing again in a few years. If you will now cross the Hudson river, and go a few miles from the shore, you will find the old Dutch minister using the Dutch word doopen, translated from baptizo. He says to the child which he holds in his arms, "I dip thee," and then falls to sprinkling its face with water. If baptize were crowded out and immerse prevailed, you would find that history would make known the difference between the meaning and the application of the word. The meaning is one thing and the application is another. The word board signifies a piece of wood longer and broader than is called a block. But the word board is applied to twenty things; to deliberative assemblies, &c. The word house, meaning a human habitation, is applied to a commercial firm, to Congress, to Parliament; but it does not mean a Parliament. Baptize means dip: so says Richardson, the chronological lexicographer. What has been done with baptize can be done with immerse. But all your debate, your time and money are lost, while they are expended upon this subject, which is not the main question. Why are these brethren here? The great [illegible] question. It is another question which has called this concourse together. It is, whether a metropolitan Board, acting under a Society composed of a few hundred individuals, shall commit 700,000 people—whether the metropolitan power shall stamp itself on millions of Christian men. Were we impressed with such sentiments as underlie the words of the last speaker, who calls on this Society to take action in this matter, all confidence would be lost. They are anti-republican, anti-baptistical. It was not so in the days of our fathers. It was not so when Messrs. Cone, Parkinson, and Sommers were appointed to consult with the English about a new version. For about a dozen men in New York, the most of them in secular life, to say, "We are the men to do this thing," is preposterous and absurd. The way to do it would be, when the churches, from the North to the South, from the Atlantic to the Western Lakes, shall come up and give you the authority to do these things. Then, do them. But if you act otherwise, and make the attempt on your own responsibility, you are unjust to men, and traitors against Christ. I speak as a Roger Williams man. These city Boards attempting to do what they have no right to do, unless authorized by the churches, are the germs of those bloody and oppressive hierarchies which drove the Puritans from England, and Roger Williams from Massachusetts. I love this brother [pointing to President Cone] as well now as I did when he baptized me. It is to my honor that I was baptized by him, and to his glory that he baptized me in the name of Christ, and not in his own name. The building up of hierarchies is a gradual work. When a Roman Emperor made his horse a consul, it was a strange thing, and is so regarded by us; but when an American Emperor shall make his horse a consul, it will not be regarded here as a strange thing at all, for our debasement and corruption must be gradual.

Rev. Mr. TURNBULL, of Hartford, Conn., said that he would take a few moments of the present lull to say a word or two in favor of harmony and peace. He should regret to hear the question discussed with any personal reference, and trusted that nothing would be said to disturb the unity of feeling which so happily distinguished the Baptist denomination. He wished to consider the question on its own merits, and to speak on it with no other than the most fraternal sentiments. Several attempts have been made to define the position of individuals. This was comparatively of slight importance. Such considerations should be kept in the background. The subject should be looked at in the broadest light of Christian truth. He did not agree with what had been said by many, that the question turned on the meaning of the Greek word for baptize. There was also a prudential view which must not be lost sight of. Admitting that the received version is not free from faults, is it not, on the whole, the best that we are likely to obtain? It has been argued that the word baptize is not an English word, because it has been transferred from the Greek. But this, he would take leave to submit, is a non sequitur. A very large portion of the English language consists of elements transferred from foreign tongues. We have terms in common use from the Norman, Greek, and especially from the Latin. But they are none the worse for that. They have become good words by adoption, even if they are not native, just as many of us have become good citizens by adoption, although we are foreigners by birth. As to the history of the word baptize, its use can be traced back to a more remote period than is often supposed. The old Italic version was in use at the time of St. Jerome. This was the basis of St. Jerome's version, which has since gained such wide celebrity—the approved version of the Catholic Church, under the title of the Vulgate. The word baptizo was transferred from the Greek into this Italic version in Latin. It had been translated by the words mergo, tiugo, immergo, but the Latin had become Græcized and these words lost their original force; the idea of immersion which they conveyed was softened down, and hence baptizo was substituted in their place. The patristic Latin modified the meaning of those terms, which originally meant immersion, just as Milton has modified the word itself in English. He has the expression, "A cold, shuddering dew dips me all o'er;" that is, in fact, sprinkles. Now baptizo was more definite than any of the correlative terms; it meant to immerse—nothing more and nothing less. At an early period, to be sure, what was called clinic baptism came into use—that is, the baptism of the sick, to whom the rite was administered in their beds; but here the subjects were wetted all over with water, showing that the idea of immersion was intended to be realized as far possible. The ancient baptisteries at Rome, at Pisa, and other Italian cities, show what was the universal mode. They are over four feet deep, and large enough to immerse a dozen persons. The word baptizo, it thus appears, from every source of evidence, signifies immersion. It was at first transferred into the Latin, then into the English, though not by King James. It is a good, sound, authentic, significant word; its meaning cannot be mistaken; it is entitled to its place in the English Bible; it should not be eliminated from that sacred record; it is not a stranger and foreigner, but a fellow-citizen with the saints and with the household of God. Nor is the change under contemplation easy to be introduced. Language cannot be made the subject of arbitrary legislation. If you expunge this word from the literal copy, it will still live in the heart and the memory. The measure proposed, therefore, is altogether superfluous. And it is as needless as it is superfluous. The common people do not demand it. The interests of the church do not demand it. The mass of the people now, when left to the free, unprejudiced study of the Bible, turn out Baptists, with no other translation than this, which is now [illegible] trust them than scholars.

He must confess that his reverence for the Bible had been greatly wounded by the language which had been used in regard to the imperfections of the present version. He did not like to hear it said that it contained 20,000 errors. Dr. Blaney had said the same thing of the Greek original from which the translation was made, but upon examination they proved of a very insignificant character. He hoped that these trivial imperfections, whether in Greek manuscripts or in the English version, would not be forced into a magnitude which did not belong to them.

Rev. Dr. IDE would give three reasons why he wanted the resolution to be passed. We did not need a revised version—we ought not to attempt to make one—and we could not accomplish it if we did try it. Much was said in reference to the imperfections of the authorized English version. Nothing which comes through human hands can be perfect; but after examination it will be found that, for the purpose for which it was designed, for the masses, for the fireside, for the highways and by-ways of ordinary life, a more appropriate, idiomatic, and expressive version could not be produced. It was superior to the version of Luther himself. We could not have a version of Scripture which, in all particulars, would be so well adapted to the masses—to the homes of our land. Some words are obsolete—antiquated; but the smallest scholar in our Sabbath-schools can detect the intended meaning of the writers. Baptize is not the correlative of immerse. Sir, immerse is not the word. First, Tertullian uses the word baptize. In Hermas it does not occur at all; with him circumlocution is invariably resorted to. But Tertullian has tingo, baptismus, mergito—never mergo or immergo. None of the Latin writers down to the sixth century use mergo or immergo. Tertullian settled down upon baptizo. Minutius, Felix, [illegible] The word came into the Anglo-Saxon by way of Augustine. In the reign of Alfred, baptize occurs as an English word. It is eight hundred years older than immerse. Immerse simply signifies to sink. It is not necessary to take the person or thing out again. If you sink it, you immerse it. Dip is the correlative of baptizo.

Deacon COLGATE was sorry to be obliged to speak. There were learned brethren here whom he desired to learn from. But the circumstances in which I have been placed seem to demand that I should address this meeting. I have been astonished, while sitting here, to hear the remarks which have been made. I was one of the earliest to bring this matter before the public. I felt it a duty incumbent on me to turn a deaf ear on the most learned members. I listened to all the debates of the first divines in the American Bible Society. They treated us well in all their debates. All the arguments that I have heard were the recommendations of expediency. All principle seems to have been uniformly discarded or made subservient to expediency, but nothing is said of our duty to our God. The Baptists are said to be inconsistent. They say, "See what the translation has done for Baptists." But my little experience tells me that we have been driven from every nation except England and America, where we can live in spite of the translation. I stand up for the common people. When they tell me that the translators altered "in water" and said "with water," I can see that it is an erroneous idea conveyed by a false translation. Much has been said about "this precious Bible." It is precious for its truths; but who thinks it precious for its errors? If our fathers took the errors of the Bible for the ground of their consolation, it was not a true one. We have been charged with bringing up this subject clandestinely. I brought it before the Society, and am willing to bear the blame and the censure. I do not believe in consecrating error or ecclesiastical fraud. I read that "if you add to or take from the Word, God will take your name from the Book of Life, or add to you all the plagues mentioned in that book." * * * To translate the word for the heathen and not for the English tongue is a manifest inconsistency. This may not suit the learned; but I tell you that multitudes of my poor ignorant Baptist brethren need to be informed. Do let me read our resolutions and see if we are such heretics as to merit the severe rebuke which they say they came here to administer. We came here to get advice; but they came here to rebuke. [Here Mr. Colgate read the resolutions of the Board on the subject of translating.] Mr. Colgate then signified that he would offer the stereotype plates of the revised edition to the Society, if they would accept of them.

Dr. DOWLING said it might be thought that if those plates were not offered to the Society, there would be an end of it; but the Board had a perfect right to print from them, and the restriction must be replaced.

Rev. R. JENNINGS, of Connecticut, said he was afraid before he came that there was a great deal of wrong on both sides, and he found it was true. He did not fall in with either party. They were both to blame—he did not know which was the most so. A man may get to heaven, if he looks sharp, with the present version, but for himself he must say that he had often been led by it into great errors. He hoped the discussion would be conducted with a better spirit, more kindliness, more prayer; but he thought the time had not come for a new translation, though he was not disposed to make an idol of this.

Rev. Mr. WESCOTT, of Stillwater, did not believe that the American and Foreign Bible Society was the body to make the translation. Their business was to circulate the Bible, and furnish the means of translating to our missionaries. He did not believe the American and Foreign Bible Society could give a version that would take the [illegible] would be a Baptist Bible. The great essential truths necessary to salvation are brought out in the old English version. I will not now touch upon the subject of a new version by the aid and consent of all the other Christian sects. When we asked for incorporation in 1845, we denied, through Judge Harris, whom we depended upon to plead our cause in the Senate of this State, as well as through others, and also by public documents, that we had any intention of making a new version of the Scriptures. I think the Society and the Bord are bound by these pledges.

A letter was read from a meeting in Baltimore, held on Monday, May 20th, and composed of Baptists, deprecating any change in the present version of the Scriptures. A communication from a meeting at Buffalo was read, protesting against the reception of the stereotype plates, and against the publication of a new revised edition of the Bible by the Society. The Boston remonstrance, equally numerously signed, was presented. The President announced that he had thirty such papers at home.

Rev. Mr. GRAFTON expressed his fullest confidence in the old-fashioned Bible, and his regret that the Society had made any movement respecting a new one.

Rev. Mr. WOOLSEY, of Connecticut, believed this Society was not the proper one to make a new version of the Scriptures. He hoped the various denominations would unite in making a revision.

Mr. ARMITAGE proposed the appointment of a committee of learned men to correspond with learned men throughout the world on all words involved in the question of revising the Scriptures—their report to be presented at the next annual meeting of the Society. No vote was taken on the subject.

Several other persons spoke briefly upon the general subject, until the hour arrived for taking the vote, when the question was put and the resolution adopted.

The following preamble and resolution on the record that previously adopted, viz.:—

"Whereas, by the Constitution of this Society, it is its object to aid in the wider circulation of the Sacred Scriptures in all lands;

"Resolved, That it is not the province or the duty of the American and Foreign Bible Society to attempt on their own part, or to procure from others, a revision of the commonly received version of the Sacred Scriptures."

The election of officers of the Society for the ensuing year gave occasion for a good deal of ill feeling. It was done by ballot, and Spencer H. Cone was unanimously chosen President. He peremptorily declined to fill the office, however, and stated that he had it in mind to resign every office he held in the benevolent associations of the denomination. Rev. Bartholomew Welch was chosen President. Nathan C. Platt was chosen Treasurer in place of Wm. Colgate, and Sewall S. Cutting was chosen Corresponding Secretary in place of Wm. H. Wyckoff. A resolution was passed expressing a high sense of Mr. Cone's services, and regretting his retirement. A similar resolution in relation to Mr. Colgate was proposed, but withdrawn at the request of his son, who thought the resolution a reflection upon his father, and that the Society had passed a vote of censure upon him by choosing another in his place.

A BLIND GIRL AND HER BIBLE.

Would you know the value of the Bible? Let me introduce you to a scene of deep and thrilling interest, as related by a minister, an eye-witness. A young woman, completely blind and deaf, was brought before a number of eminent surgeons, to see if any thing could be done for her.

Her sad condition had been produced by a violent pain in the head. The only method of communicating with her was by tapping her hand, which signified no—and by squeezing it, which signified yes. The surgeons concluded that her case was incurable; and in reply to her earnest inquiries, she received the unwelcome tap. She immediately burst into tears, and wept aloud in all the bitterness of anguish. "What," said she, "shall I never see the light of day, or hear a human voice? Must I remain shut up in darkness and silence as long as I live?"

And had she again been able to see, she might have been pointed to the promises of the Bible; if to hear, they might have been cited for her comfort. At length a friend who was present took up the Bible, and placed it to her breast. It was a touching and beautiful act. "Is this the Bible?" Her hand was squeezed in reply. She immediately clasped the Bible in her hands, and held it up to her bosom, and exclaimed, "This is the only comfort I have left; I shall never more be able to look upon its blessed pages, but I can think of the blessed promises I have learned from it"—and then began to repeat some of its promises: "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he will sustain thee." "Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee." "My grace is sufficient for thee," &c. She dried her tears, became submissive to the will of God, and was happy.

THE INQUIRY.

AS SUNG BY THE HUTCHINSONS.

Tell me, ye winged winds,
That round my pathway roar—
Do ye not know some spot,
Where mortals weep no more?
Some lone and pleasant dell,
Some valley in the West,
Where, free from toil and pain,
The weary soul may rest?
The loud wind softened to a whisper low,
And sighed for pity as it answered, "No!"

[illegible]
Whose billows round me play,
Know'st thou some favored spot,
Some island far away,
Where weary man may find
The bliss for which he sighs—
Where sorrow never lives,
And friendship never dies?
The loud waves, rolling in perpetual flow,
Stopped for a while, and murmuring, answered, "No!"

And thou, serenest moon,
Who with such holy face
Dost look upon the earth
Asleep in night's embrace,
Know'st thou no better land—
Hast thou not seen some spot,
Where miserable man
Might find a happier lot?
Behind a cloud the moon withdrew in woe,
And a sweet voice, but sad, responded, "No!"

Tell me, my secret soul,
Oh! tell me, Hope and Faith,
Is there no happier spot,
Where mortals may be blest,
Where grief may find a balm,
And weariness a rest?
Faith, Hope, and Love—best boons to mortals given—
Waved their bright wings, and whispered, "Yes, in heaven!"

RELIGIOUS TOLERATION IN HAYTI.

By a Correspondent of the Independent.

Taking into consideration the past history of this island, and the present universal prevalence and predominance of the Roman Catholic religion, I am sure your readers will not be less surprised than I was to learn, that there is here the most entire religious toleration. Protestants may preach in their chapels, in the streets, or from house to house, without the least hindrance from government, and with assurances of its sanction and protection. This has been variously tested on both parts of the island, that is, under both the Haytien and Spanish governments. It was most thoroughly tested sometime since at the Haytien capital. Rev. Mr. Judd and lady, Baptist missionaries from the United States, in riding through the city upon one of their great church festival days, unexpectedly came upon one of their immense religious processions, in which the other images and [illegible] and various [illegible] church, are borne through the principal streets. At the approach of the cross every Catholic reverently uncovers his head; and in case any are so profane as not to do this willingly, there are officers in attendance to compel them to do it. This procession extended through several streets, and Mr. Judd was completely blocked in. As on commencing his mission he had gone before the proper officer and received the sanction and protection of government, he determined, for the double purpose of testing those assurances of protection, and of showing his disapproval of their ceremonies, not to uncover his head.

The cross approached, the multitude uncovered their heads, and crossed themselves. He alone of the vast throng sat quietly upon his horse, with his hat upon his head. It so happened, that the principal officer was near him, who, seeing that he was a foreigner, and supposing he was ignorant of their customs, politely requested him (in French, the language universally spoken) to remove his hat. By this time many hundreds had gathered as near as possible to witness what was passing. Mr. J. had sufficient knowledge of the French to say: "My hat is well as it is." The officer supposed he did not understand what was wanted, and explained in various ways; but Mr. J. assured him that he understood him perfectly; and to convince him that it was so, took off his hat, and then deliberately placed it upon his head again.

The offense was deliberate! What should the officer do? He elevated his police-staff, and made an attempt forcibly to remove the hat. Mr. J. dropped his bridle, and with both hands held it upon his head. The officer, by this time, beginning to doubt whether he had a right thus to interfere with a foreigner, desisted from his efforts and passed on.

The movement was a bold one—in the presence of thousands—and the issue was looked for with the deepest interest. On carrying the matter up to the proper authority, the officer was very severely censured for his conduct in thus interfering with a foreigner, and dismissed with the remark: "His (Mr. J.'s) religion does not consist in forms; it is something better. He does not need to take his hat off."

A victory no less signal for Protestantism and religious toleration has still more recently occurred on the other part of the island, which is under Spanish rule. A Wesleyan missionary, from Port-au-Plat, on the north side of the island, went across to St. Domingo. While there, he preached several times in English, and at length announced that he would preach in Spanish, and did so. The next day he was arrested by order of the bishop, and brought before an ecclesiastical court. He appealed from this court directly to the Governor or President, who not only acquitted him, but strongly censured the bishop for his interference in the matter, and told him that although the Catholic was the principal religion in his dominions, Protestants were nevertheless as free to preach and publish their sentiments, if they were disposed so to do, as Catholics.

Since writing the above, I have been presented with a copy of the "Constitution de L'Empire D'Hayti," which is just issued. It is the Constitution of 1846, revised by the present government. I copy from it two articles in reference to the freedom of the press and religious toleration, which certainly are most remarkable for their liberality. Some heads longer crowned may certainly learn important lessons from this recent aspirant to a place among their number. The articles are as follows:—

ARTICLE XXI.

Section 1. Every one has a right to express his opinion on all matters, and to write or print his thoughts or views.

Section 2. No writing shall be subject to any legal censure previous to publication.

Section 3. The abuses of this right are defined and controlled by the law, without [illegible]

ARTICLE XXII.

Section 1. All forms of religious worship are equally free.

Section 2. Each one has a right to profess his religion, and exercise freely his own mode of worship, provided he does not trouble the public peace.

PIOUS FRAUDS OF "FATHER" MEEK.

To the editor of the Pennsylvania Telegraph:

A personal injury may be borne with patience, but when a flagrant wrong is inflicted, and wantonly inflicted, on an unassuming, quiet body of Christians, from mere sectarian zeal, it is not only unbecoming to bear an unjust imputation, but really an imperative duty to reprove the iniquity, that their influence and usefulness be not impaired, and thereby the cause of truth suffer damage. And it is with this view, alone, that I take up my pen to disabuse the public mind of a calumny, perpetrated in a "high place," on a long-suffering people.

When the Senate bill, for the relief of the Seventh-day Baptists, was before the House of Representatives, a few weeks since, and a motion was made to refer it to the Committee on Vice and Immorality, which was resisted by its friends, believing that it would be fatal in such prejudiced hands, "Father" Meek, the chairman of that committee, intimated that he was not opposed to some provision for that branch of the Redeemer's flock, provided the door was not opened too widely; and under that implied pledge, it was referred to the said committee; but no sooner had it gotten into the clutches of that "wolf in sheep's clothing," than he made not only an adverse report, but stepped beyond the record, to make it as injurious as possible to the oppressed petitioners.

However successfully the trick was consummated, or by whatever code of morals he can reconcile his jesuitical jugglery to Christian fair dealing, I pretend not to divine; but it is certainly descending beneath [illegible] judice the cause of the weak and down-trodden, who have been suffering for years, under an onerous, unequal, and iniquitous law; and withal to do it in the most sneaking and contemptible manner. Manly opposition we admire where there is just cause of dissension, but sneaking trickery is too much beneath any man, much more so to an honorable representative, and still more so to a professed Christian.

The writer does not design to attempt to reply, at present, to the puerile sophistry of the "Report," but feels it due to his brethren, who have hitherto enjoyed an enviable reputation throughout the Commonwealth, to refute the following scandal, gratuitously foisted upon them in that "Report." On page 4, the memorialists are charged with having "stigmatized" the Supreme Bench of this State as "religious zealots," than which there is nothing more disingenuous or more unfounded.

"Whether the learned jurists," says the Report, "who constitute the highest judicial tribunal of the Commonwealth, and who are stigmatized in pamphlets circulated through the House by the memorialists as 'religious zealots,' erred when, to the regret of the memorialists, they decided that the act of 1794 comes within the meaning of the foregoing constitutional provisions," &c.

The writer of such an application of language must be either a fool or a knave, and we have no reason to dignify him with the former epithet. The only language in any pamphlet, circulated by the memorialists, which could be contorted thus, is to be found on the fifth page of the "Appeal to the Friends of Equal Rights and Religious Freedom in the United States, from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference MDCCCXLVI., which is in the following words:—

"Religious zealots in our State Legislatures and on the Judicial Bench, have violated the Constitution of the Nation, established an article of their religious creed, and made it penal for others of different sentiments to follow out their own honest convictions of duty to God."

This language was written and published, as may be seen on the face of the document, two years before the decision was had in their case, in the "highest judicial tribunal of the Commonwealth," as the pious oppressor must have been aware when he wantonly perverted it, to cover his base perfidy with some specious gloss, and, at the same time, assassin-like, insidiously thrust the dagger into his bleeding victim. Were it nothing but the inconvenience the suffering Seventh-day Baptists have to endure from such malicious sources, we might endure the injury, and not trouble you and the public servants with our complaints in this matter; but in our present position we feel it due to our posterity to refute the calumny, and expose the base trick, designed to engender and perpetuate prejudices against our community.

A SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST.

IMPERFECT IN ORIGI

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, June 6, 1850.

REFLEX INFLUENCE OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Notwithstanding the earnestness of feeling with which our foreign mission was undertaken, and notwithstanding the general favor with which the enterprise is now regarded, there are some among us who still doubt whether the money which we are expending upon it might not be more profitably employed in our own country. We were, recently, looking over the report of the Secretaries of the Baptist Missionary Union, as submitted at the late meeting of that body in Buffalo, in which we found some instructive facts. It appears, that the whole number of churches under the care of the Union is 151, with 12,290 members. The number of additions to the churches, on profession of faith, more than 1,236. Now, let this be compared with the statistics of our own denomination. We have, in the United States, some sixty-five or seventy churches, containing, in all, from six to seven thousand members—about half as many as the Union numbers among [illegible] What has been the number of [illegible] past year, we are not able to say; but we shall be greatly surprised, if it should turn out that the number has been half as great as the number of additions to the churches of the Union. Now, there is no good reason to suppose that our own foreign mission will not be quite as successful, in proportion to the amount of money, labor, and other stores expended upon it, as the missions of the Baptist Union, or the missions of any other denomination. Nor is there any good reason to think, that our increase at home would be proportionally any greater in future than it has been hitherto. On the whole, we see no reason to suppose that our efforts are not just as profitably expended in China as they would be in our own land.

But, if we are not mistaken, we have accomplished more, vastly more, at home, since the foreign mission was first started, than we have ever done in the same space of time before. Our actual missionary work in the destitute parts of our country has not been diminished; our people have awoke to greater zeal in the cause of education; the DeRuyter Institute has been resuscitated; the schools at Alfred and Shiloh have been much enlarged and elevated in character; we are now seriously contemplating a College and a Theological Institution; and our churches have all been made to feel, that they have some great object to live for. The ultimate reflex influence of the mission it is impossible to calculate; but we trust that it will be such as to make every man and woman in our denomination bless God for the day in which we were led to undertake it.

It has sometimes struck us quite forcibly, that there was a providential necessity imposed upon us to strike off into a foreign [illegible] all other denominations. The arrangements of society being all made with reference to the first day of the week, the congregations of other ministers on that day are composed, in good part, of the impenitent. It is a day of leisure, and all classes flock together to hear the Word. It is evident that such ministers have great opportunities for usefulness, from which those of our order are, in a great measure, restrained. The greater number of our Sabbath congregations will be found to consist almost exclusively of church members. Many a minister among us mourns that he has so few opportunities to address the impenitent. If he would, on this account, get up special congregations on the first day of the week, such are the prejudices of community that he is immediately suspected of spreading a snare to draw the people into his own church. And even ministers of other persuasions are often found trying to hinder the people from hearing him. We are thus restrained from access to the community, to an extent that no other denomination experiences. Add to all this, the very laws of the land frown upon us, stigmatizing us with the patrons of vice and immorality. Against this state of things we have been battling a long time, without accomplishing any great results. To our mind, it indicates the duty of Seventh-day Baptists to go abroad, and proclaim the gospel. If men will not receive our testimony here, let us go where they will receive it. The effect will soon be manifest at home; and it is worthy of remark, that since we first began to agitate the foreign missionary enterprise in right good earnest, the providential openings for usefulness at home have multiplied greatly. People are now waking up to an examination of the Sabbath question to an extent never before witnessed. The subject comes up in such a variety of ways, that community can no longer be hushed to sleep over it; and we venture the prediction, that our foreign mission will not have been prosecuted ten years, according to the ability which God gives us, without shaking all Protestant Christendom in regard to the question that separates us from them.

In conclusion, we hope that those few of our brethren—(we rejoice that there are but a few)—who may have doubted the wisdom of our undertaking, will give their doubts to the winds. God's blessing is upon this work. He has smiled upon our efforts thus far, and just in proportion as our prayers and our contributions are consecrated to the object, will He continue to smile.

Sunday Mails or Sunday Expresses.—Three or four weeks ago it was announced, with no small flourish, that the morning mail between New York and Philadelphia was about to be suspended, and that only an afternoon mail would be sent. The result is beginning to be seen in the shape of Sunday Expresses. A special express was run from New York to Philadelphia, on Sunday, by a news-agent of the latter city, for the purpose of carrying the N. Y. Herald. It is proposed to establish a regular communication of this kind, for the conveyance of letters and papers on Sunday.

Since the above was written, we learn that several lines of omnibuses are to be run between Newark and Jersey City on Sundays, on account of the stoppage of the cars.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE—No. 1.

Glasgow, May 9th, 1850.

The preparatory steps in the combined effort for shutting, on Sundays, the Post Offices throughout this country, are still being zealously pursued, the day of decision having been deferred. Lord Ashley has postponed, till the 28th instant, the motion of which he has given notice in the House of Commons on the subject—avowedly with the design of affording farther opportunity [illegible] purpose, through regular organizations, receiving suggestions from paid functionaries. I have, however, no expectation that these efforts will be attended with success. Even if Government had given no indication of the part they are likely to take, I regard it as no breach of charity to believe, that a majority of the members of Parliament regard neither Sabbath nor Sunday as hallowed by the Lord.

Our much-respected Queen has given birth to another Prince; and, in compliment to the Duke of Wellington, he is to be named Arthur. The sounds of congratulation upon the happy event have not, however, died away, before the London correspondent of the Oxford Herald, a Tractarian newspaper, intimates a rumor, that Prince Albert, the Queen-Consort, has objected to the Prince of Wales' (heir to the throne) being taught the Church Catechism—which, it is added, the tutor of the boy takes much to heart. This would, indeed, if true, be Nonconformity in high quarters, and might tend to promote the spirit of inquiry as to the influence of church creeds in shutting out from its rightful place whatever of God's truth they do not include.

The High Church Party—as the Romanizers are here misnamed—are meeting with other discouragements. The appeal of Mr. Gorham to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, from the decision of the Court of Arches, (which rendered a profession of faith in the doctrine of Baptismal Regeneration necessary to his induction,) having proved unfavorable to the Bishop of Exeter, he brought the case before the Court of Queen's Bench, seeking a prohibition [illegible] to compel the Bishop to induct Mr. G. The Queen's Bench having refused, the pugnacious Bishop has now carried the case into the Court of Common Pleas, in the hope that they may be more compliant to his wishes. The Lord Chief Justice, after consulting with the other Judges of the Court, intimated an intention of farther considering not only the argument now addressed to them, but also the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench. And, at a subsequent sitting, his Lordship intimated that their decision would not be given this term. Mr. Gorham has, meanwhile, been taking the necessary steps, in the Court of Arches, to obtain his induction. It will not be agreeable to this Court to revoke its former decision; but the judgment of the highest Court in the land will probably leave little room for hesitation. A postponement here, also, seems designed to allow the Court of Common Pleas first to decide. The Bishop seeks to have the matter submitted to an Ecclesiastical Court, which has no present existence; and he must doubtless feel mortified, that his domination over the Word of God and consciences of men is checked by civil courts of review, a humiliation all the greater, that public attention is drawn the more forcibly to the case by the conflicting judgments which these courts have pronounced. It is stated, that the Bishops, generally, are consulting; and large numbers of the Episcopal clergy have repudiated a decision which makes so little of their dogma of Baptismal Regeneration. But it may be supposed, that both they and the Bishops will be taught, that the patronage of the State, in its present condition, is not to be extended to the Church, in the form of endowments and other favors, without an equivalent. It will not seem surprising, that the Bishops of the Scottish Episcopal Church—a Church which has all along retained a larger amount of the Romish leaven than even her English sister—have issued a declaration that they will not be bound by such decisions. But as the State does not recognize this sect as the Church in Scotland, it may be presumed that nointerference was intended with their manner or means of regeneration. Many and painful are the reflections which the whole circumstances would suggest, were we disposed to indulge. We at present abstain, and merely add, that, on the 6th instant, the Bishop of London laid upon the table of the House of Lords a Bill, the object of which is to limit the power of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in such cases as that of Mr. Gorham. No discussion has yet taken place upon it, but when it reaches the second reading, fixed for the 28th instant, we may expect to hear Brougham's voice indignantly raised against it.

The subject of Education is at present occupying much of public attention in this country—not without cause. Eight millions of persons in England and Wales, nearly a fourth part of the population, can, it is stated, neither read nor write. With the view of remedying this great evil, a Bill, the operation of which does not extend to Scotland, is now before the House of Commons. It proposes to legislate only for secular education being provided, without preventing religion being also taught. Time is to be allowed for instruction in the particular form of religion approved by the parents. How far this provision may be available, or how far the conflicting views of parents may mar its operation, is not quite obvious. It is proposed to appoint Inspectors of Schools, to report to the Committee of Privy Council on the state of education in each parish, specifying particulars as to the condition of the existing schools. Where a deficiency of school accommodation is reported, the inhabitants shall be required to appoint an Education Committee, who shall establish the schools requisite, a rate being levied to provide the [illegible]

I have said this Bill is not to be extended to Scotland. We are not, however, exempted from its provisions by any real or supposed superiority. A growing deficiency here, also, has long been complained of. Knox's desires of schools and colleges never were carried out; but even the comparative advancement in this respect, which Scotland once boasted, has passed away, and the rising generation are miserably behind that which preceded it. Complaints have been long made, and suggestions to meet the evil have been often offered. Religious divisions, however, prevent agreement as to the proper remedy. The Free Church, and others opposed to the Ecclesiastical Establishment, are disinclined to an extension of the existing parochial schools, as the teachers require to conform to the creed of that Establishment. Divisions also exist among those so dissenting as to whether the desiderated extension of schools should embrace religious instruction. On this point the religious community are not agreed; but the difficulties arising out of the dissensions which prevail are very great. It was lately stated here, that a system of education is conducted in Philadelphia, by general consent, with great success, without reference to religion. It has here been questioned, also, whether the moral and religious state of Scotland, such as in past days it was, had been derived from the training of the school. Perhaps it was more owing to the domestic instruction than any other, that the old Scottish character was superior to that of many lands. But the school may be rendered either auxiliary or hostile to parental instruction in the things of God; and no enlightened Christian will [illegible] esteem the influence of the teacher unworthy of his consideration. The Old and New Testaments were two of the principal school-books in former times; and impressions may have been derived from the Word of God itself, when the teacher did little to deepen it. At present, however, there is less use made of Scripture as a text-book in schools, and many object to religious instruction being communicated by teachers; and in these circumstances Lord Melgund has more recently introduced into Parliament a Bill for extending and amending the parish schools, which is very closely allied to that previously introduced for England. The fate of either it may not be easy to foretell; but they will to a certainty occasion much discussion.

JAMES A. BEGG.

PROGRESS IN PENNSYLVANIA.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

Notwithstanding the Sabbath-keepers of my native State, Pennsylvania, have failed thus far in obtaining specific relief—exemption from the operation of the onerous and invidious law of 1794, which wrests from them a sixth part of their precious time, in addition to the seventh that they voluntarily and conscientiously devote unto the Lord, in hallowing his holy day, agreeably to his requirement; or, rather, notwithstanding they were cheated again, by the most despicable trick, out of a hearing before the House of Representatives, after their Bill had passed the Senate, at the recent session of the Legislature of that Commonwealth,—yet some progress has been made in the cause of equal rights and religious liberty—some bright tints are now discernible, tipping the edges of the dark cloud which has been hanging over them so long—at least, enough to give encouragement to hope, that deliverance is near at hand; and we believe that it was the conviction of this fact, that induced the wily Chairman of the Committee on Vice and Immorality, to resort to the contemptible trick he did—the pious fraud—to choke off the question, lest, from indications which made him quake, the cause of religious equality would have prevailed had a direct vote been had in that Body at that time.

However much the "old fox" may have plumed himself on that disreputable triumph, or however the loud hosannas of the followers of Constantine may have flushed his vanity for the moment, yet his glory was but short-lived; for he met with a decided defeat, a few days afterward, on calling up his Bill to prevent the sale of Ardent Spirits on Sunday. Pending that question, Dr. Burden offered the following amendment: "That no spirituous liquors shall be sold on the Sabbath day, the seventh day of the week, commonly called Saturday;" and as the Sabbath-keepers were choked off from a hearing by Meek's "Report," in their case, the talented mover of this amendment took advantage of the opportunity to make a strong appeal to the House in their behalf, and contended, very ably and conclusively, that the seventh day is the only true Sabbath of the Bible.

Meek resisted the amendment with all his power, and exerted himself to the utmost to rally the forces of the devotees, to save the Sun-ceremony-worship-day from being desecrated by having another day alike honored in the prohibition of that iniquitous traffic on it. The amendment, however, was adopted in committee of the whole—some earnest of the feeling of the House to extend relief to our people; and it is at the same time an equally significant rebuke to the "pious" oppressor.

What was the final disposition of the Bill and its amendment, I have not learned; but on the day of the adjournment of the Legislature, a Senator informed me by letter, that they accomplished something for us in an indirect way. Heretofore, half of all the fines, (in each case four dollars,) was paid to the informer; and as this was a tempting [illegible] People, and as many vile persons, who had no regard for the sacredness of the first day of the week, availed themselves of it to raise money to pay for their Sunday revels at the groggery, a proposition was made, and promptly carried through both Houses, though strenuously resisted by "Father" Meek, to have the whole of all the fines accruing from indictments under the Sunday law paid into the State Treasury!

Now, as the inducement to speculation is destroyed—the spoils gone, and with them "Othello's occupation"—no longer any revenue to be derived by the rowdy patriots for their iniquitous work of informing, our People may be less annoyed hereafter: still, that does not release them, in my opinion, from protesting against the ban, under which they lie as freemen, and from testifying against the perversion of the Lord's holy, sanctified day. And we trust that they will not cease to bear witness to the truth of their Master—the King of Kings, and the Lord of Lords—at all times and under all circumstances, until all Powers and Principalities shall abandon the "commandments of men," and restore the right to all persons to walk in the statutes of the Lord their God, without let or hinderance.

A disciple's mission—all disciples' mission—is to bear testimony to the truth of his Master's Word, and honor his laws, whatever trials, stripes or tribulations it may subject him to. Like Paul, he must glory in them, and esteem it a privilege to be thus distinguished. True soldiers of the Cross must always be on the alert to guard their banner, and ever prove faithful unto death, in the most trying emergencies, and under the most disheartening discomfitures; and the more so, the darker the hour, or the greater the danger. It was this indomitable assurance of our countrymen, while in Mexico, that crowned the victory of Buena Vista, where our army was three times defeated during the one battle, yet became the victors of the field, by not knowing that they had been beaten, [illegible] not to stay beaten. So, in an infinitely better cause, must our People still contend valiantly, and be not dismayed, although defeated once, twice, or thrice. Perseverance will gain a Buena Vista victory for them. They must not be content short of a full concession to their equal rights and immunities; they must not prove treacherous to their cause, nor sell their birth-right for a mess of potage—to gain a little quiet. Peace may be purchased at too dear a rate, when it sacrifices any just principle or duty. Bravery may accomplish much—moral bravery, I mean, for I commend no other; while truckling subservience only rivets manacles the tighter. We must face all obstacles, all dangers, with a bold front, and never fail to protest against all injustice and oppression, from whatsoever source it may come, or under whatever guise it may appear.

And in this connection I must remark, that our People were not true to themselves in not protesting against the scandal in Meek's "Report," charging them with having "stigmatized" the Supreme Court, and in not having a disclaimer entered on the Journal of the House of Representatives. The "Report" is on record, and thus becomes part of history. The same record ought to transmit the refutation of the vile libel. I have paid my respects to him in another place, on that point, yet it was due to themselves to have done it as a body. They have lost a great advantage by their delinquency in this matter; at least, they cannot fail to suffer damage from the prejudices it may engender against them; while confronting the reviler on the spot, and confounding him, would tell well for them in another effort hereafter. Boldness, arising from conscious integrity, is always admired, and never fails to gain confidence and win popular favor; while pusillanimity excites distrust and creates contempt. So, while engaged in this crusade against injustice and oppression, we must maintain an undaunted front, without compromising any principle to gain a partial advantage, and we shall eventually succeed.

May 30, 1850. W. M. F.

Fearful Scene in a Church.—A Dublin correspondent of the London News relates, under date of May 6th :—

"Yesterday morning a shocking occurrence took place in a Roman Catholic chapel here, a murderous assault having been made by a supposed lunatic upon two clergymen while engaged in the celebration of divine service. While the Rev. Messrs. J. Coigan and Edward O'Rourke were officiating at mass at two separate altars in the Carmelite church, Francis McMahon rushed into the sanctuary with his hat on, and drawing a very formidable and ponderous bludgeon from beneath his coat, first assailed the priest at the principal altar, and then rushed at the other clergyman and inflicted two desperate wounds on his head, leaving him to all appearance dead at the foot of the altar. The utmost consternation prevailed amongst the congregation, which consisted of nearly a thousand persons. McMahon is respectably connected, is deaf and dumb, but having been educated at the Caremont Institution he can write well.

OHIO STATE PEACE SOCIETY.

The friends of peace in Ohio held a Convention at Columbus on the 18th of May, at which they completed the organization of a State Peace Society, elected officers, appointed twelve delegates to the Frankfort Peace Convention, and adopted a series of resolutions setting forth their views. The following preamble to the Constitution gives the reasons for organizing a Society :—

Whereas, the resort to war, as a means of settling international difficulties, is fraught with unmingled and unmitigated evils, creating an immense and useless sacrifice of blood and treasure, involving the worst corruption of morals, stimulating and feeding the most savage and brutal passions, and sundering the bonds of human brotherhood; and whereas, war, as an arbiter of right, is blind to justice, and perfectly capricious in its award; and whereas, we believe it practicable, in the present enlightened age of the world, to revolutionize public sentiment in regard to war, and supersede it entirely by the substitution of pacific and equitable abitration; therefore, for the attainment of this great end, we hereby form ourselves into a State Peace Society.

The objects of the Society, and its mode of operations, are thus set forth in the second article of the Constitution :—

"The objects of the Society shall be to abolish the custom of international war, and supersede its necessity by substituting international arbitration, or by any other peaceable means. For the promotion of these objects, we propose to act upon the public mind, setting forth the facts in regard to the evils of war, its unrighteousness of principle, its injustice as an arbiter of right, and its terrible havoc upon human well-being in every possible form. We propose, also, to cultivate the spirit of universal brotherhood, to promote intercommunion of nations, and by all practicable means to bind together the interests and hearts of the civilized nations of the earth."

AMERICAN PEACE SOCIETY.

The Twenty-second Anniversary of this Society was held in Boston, May 21. From an abstract of the Report, read by Rev. Mr. Beckwith, the Corresponding Secretary, it appears that the Society's operations have been, during the year, more extensive and encouraging than usual. The friends of peace have from the first sought to supersede the custom of war by peaceful substitutes, such as individuals employ for the settlement of their disputes. This idea of substitutes for war, as a simple, feasible, and effective measure, has at length been brought pretty fully before the world by the three General Peace Congresses already held,—the first at London in 1843, the next at Brussels in 1848, and the third at Paris last year. After noticing these Congresses, the Report speaks of the Congress which is to be held the ensuing August at Frankfort in Germany, and gives an account of the special efforts made to secure delegates to this Congress from our own country. Some have already gone, many others are appointed, and it is expected that America will be fully represented at Frankfort. The R[illegible] fers to the chief events of the year in Europe, bearing on this cause, and then states that a very large number of petitions from all parts of our country had been presented to our Congress, requesting its efforts to secure peaceful substitutes of some sort for the sword, and that only one vote was wanting in the House of Representatives to obtain a special committee on the subject. Five agents have been in the Society's service, including one at its office, and its Corresponding Secretary. Publications have been on a much larger scale than usual. Of Jay's Review of the Mexican War, 17,000, and of Livermore's Prize Review, 7,000; in all 24,000 of these bound volumes, beside periodicals, tracts, and other volumes—an amount equal to about 7,000,000 of tract pages. Receipts, $6,204 31, an increase over the preceding year of more than 50 per cent; expenses, $6,194 54; leaving in the treasury a balance of $9 77.

American Education Society.—The thirty-fourth Anniversary of this Society was held in Boston, May 21. The annual report represents the general interests of the Society as advancing. The available funds for the year have been $32,754 40, and the disbursements $30,181 53. The whole number of young men aided during the year is 436. In the classical course, 207; in the theological course, 229. Number aided at the West, 92. Fifty-nine have finished their studies, during the year, and entered the ministry. An encouraging advance has been made in this department. The new applicants have been 114, eleven more than last year.

Society to Promote Western Education.—The Ladies Society for the promotion of Education at the West, held a meeting in Boston, recently, and was addressed by Rev. James H. Means of Dorchester, Rev. Mr. Thompson of New York, and others. This Society was formed in Boston by the Congregationalists, on 4th of February, 1846. It has sent out more than 60 female teachers. More than 100 conversions have been reported in the schools. Applications have arrived from Oregon for three accomplished teachers of music, the modern languages, &c. Iowa has sent for eleven teachers, and Illinois has sent for as many good teachers as the Society can spare.

Sandwich Island Princes.—The Sandwich Island Princes, Alexander Liholiho liho and Lot Kamehadeha, recently arrived in New York in company with Dr. Judd. It is said that the British Government not only assumed the expenses of Dr. Judd and the Princes, during their stay in England, but also paid their fare back to this country. After stopping a short time in New York, they went on to Washington, whence they intend making a trip to Michigan and Niagara, previous to their departure for their Island Kingdom of the Pacific in July.

Illustrated Domestic Bible.—We have received from Samuel Hueston, of 139 Nassau-st., N. Y., a specimen number of the Illustrated Domestic Bible, by the Rev. Ingram Cobbin, M. A., which it is proposed to issue in 25 numbers at 25 cents each. The distinguishing features of the work are thus set forth in the prospectus :—

1. Seven hundred Wood Engravings.
2. Many thousand Marginal References.
3. Three Finely Executed Steel Maps.
4. Numerous Improved Readings.
5. A Corrected Chronological Order.
6. The Poetical Books in the Metrical Form.
7. An Exposition of each chapter, containing the essence of the best Commentators, with much original matter by the Editor.
8. Reflections, drawn from the subjects of the chapter, and giving, in a condensed form, its spiritual import.
9. Questions at the end of each chapter for family examination.
10. Dates affixed to the Chapters for each Morning and Evening's Reading, comprising the whole Bible in a year.

An examination of the specimen number has impressed us very favorably with Mr. Hueston's undertaking. The notes seem to be accurate and intelligible; the reading is in many cases improved; the maps and engravings are well executed, and well adapted to teach the geography and illustrate the manners and customs of the East. We can very heartily commend this work to those wanting an elegant copy of the Bible, with helps to critical exposition and devotional meditation.

Oregon City College.—The Commercial Advertiser learns from the Oregon Spectator, that a meeting was held in Oregon City on the 2d of February, at which it was resolved to establish a new seminary of learning, under the name of the Oregon City College, with a view of attaching thereto, in due time, a theological department. The first term of the institution was to commence under the superintendence of Rev. Ezra Fisher, at the Baptist meeting-house, on the 18th of February. The establishment of such an institution was contemplated in Mr. Fisher's original instructions as a missionary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, and he has steadily aimed at its accomplishment.

Religious Affairs in Hayti.—A letter from Hayti, dated May 18, speaks of an extraordinary excitement on that Island in relation to religious questions, and says that persons professing any other faith than that of the Romish Church are very bitterly hated. The building of a Church by the English Wesleyan Society, had created a furious jealousy against them. The Church is now half finished, and a sudden stop has been put to the work. The contractor applied to the Government, and as the Constitution permits, protects, and authorizes all religions, they expect shortly to receive orders to continue their labors.

A Sunday Accident.—On Sunday, May 26th, a serious accident occurred at the Roman Catholic Academy of Visitation at Georgetown, District of Columbia. The wooden pillars supporting the frame porch gave way, while a number of teachers and scholars were upon it. Sister Felix had two limbs broken, and a young lady received a dangerous wound on her head. Rev. Dr. Ryders and several nuns and misses were also somewhat injured, but none, it is thought, seriously, except sister Felix.

Monument to Mrs. Osgood.—A plan has been devised for raising the funds necessary to erect a monument in Mount Auburn to the memory of the late Mrs. Osgood. A splendid volume, consisting of contributions of her personal and literary friends, and embellished by exquisitely engraved likenesses of herself and her children, is to be issued, and the entire profits of it devoted to the erection of the monument.

Carrying the War into the Enemy's Country.—It is stated that the Ladies' Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church are about to erect a new church in that center of iniquity and degradation in New York, commonly known as the Five Points. The Conference, at their late session, appointed Rev. L. McK. Pease as a missionary to this station.

The Sultan growing Liberal.—A fact unprecedented in the annals of Islamism, is said to have just taken place at Constantinople. The Sultan has decorated eight Greek Archbishops, as a testimony of his satisfaction at their zeal in the discharge of their duties.

Travel on the Hudson River.—Competition runs high on the Hudson just now. A friend who came down the other evening, tells us that one boat offered to bring him for nothing, but that he wisely concluded to take the Isaac Newton, and pay fifty cents for his passage. When people can ride 150 miles on such a floating palace as the Isaac Newton or the Oregon for fifty cents, there is no apology on the score of expense for not taking an occasional trip.

☞ A new Jewish Synagogue has been recently opened in New Orleans, with all the imposing, poetic ceremony with which that people accompany the act of consecration.

☞ The death of Rev. John N. Maffit, the celebrated Methodist preacher, is announced as having occurred at Mobile, May 25th.

☞ The Free School State Convention at Syracuse has been postponed to Wenesday, July 10, at 10 o'clock A. M.

General Intelligence.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. SECOND-DAY, May 27.

The Senate resolved to inquire into the validity of the various mail contracts for ocean steam service.

The bill to establish a Mint in New York came up, but after considerable talk it was laid on the table again.

The Compromise Bill was taken up, and Mr. Mason of Virginia made a Southern speech thereon. Then followed a long talk between Mr. Clay and several Southern Senators in relation to running the Missouri Compromise line to California.

House of Representatives.

The Hornor Investigation (after costing far more than Hornor's entire salary) was laid on the table by the decisive vote of 96 to 68.

Mr. Crowell of Ohio tried to get in a bill to abolish the slave-trade in the District of Columbia, but could only obtain 100 votes to 63 for a suspension of the rules—not the required two-thirds.

Mr. Thomas of Tenn. made a pro-slavery, anti-California speech on the California bill, and Mr. Bennett of N. Y. replied in an anti-slavery speech in favor of California and freedom in the territories.

In Senate. THIRD-DAY, May 28.

Mr. Bradbury's resolution in relation to removals from office by the President, gave occasion for various short political speeches, but no action was had upon it.

The consideration of the Compromise Bill was resumed, and Messrs. Underwood, Berrien, Dayton, King, Chase, Clay, Davis, Hale, and Dodge, spoke upon it.

House of Representatives.

The House passed a bill making appropriations for public buildings in Minnesota and Oregon, and discussed a bill to appoint a Surveyor General for Oregon and grant lands to actual settlers in that Territory.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, May 29.

After some unimportant business, which occupied a considerable time, the Senate took up the Mint bill, and adopted an amendment providing for a Mint and Assaying Office in San Francisco. An amendment to strike out of the first section the provision for a Mint in New York, was negatived by 12 majority—Yeas 20, Nays 32. An amendment was adopted, providing that the act shall not go into effect, as relates to the Mint in this city, till our Legislature shall have passed a bill exempting the Mint property from taxation. The bill was finally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

House of Representatives.

The House passed the bill for the construction of roads in Minnesota, and the bill authorizing the President to treat with the Indians of Oregon for certain lands in that Territory.

The bill to create the office of Surveyor General of the Public Lands in Oregon, and to make donations of land to settlers, was taken up in Committee of the Whole. The amendment pending was to confine donations of land to free whites. Mr. Giddings of Ohio earnestly opposed it, and spoke of the intelligence and patriotism of many blacks. Mr. Fitch of Indiana said, whether the amendment was adopted or not, it would make no difference, as the people of Oregon have excluded negroes, because they amalgamate with, and lead Indians to commit mischief. Mr. Sackett of New York contended that the Legislature of that Territory have no power to exclude any color of people, and if Congress see fit to make a grant of lands to white or black persons, they have the right of grant for their own benefit. Mr. Conrad of La. opposed the amendment, and said that Mr. Giddings endeavored to show the superiority of the African over the Caucasian race, and had offered an apology to the Committee for considering the whites equal to the blacks. Mr. Giddings—I merely say, that the white man is as good as the black, if he behaves himself as well. Mr. Conrad thought that Mr. Giddings was in some degree connected with the negro race, and was of the opinion that it would benefit both races to diffuse the blacks over the country on the Pacific. Mr. McMullen of Va. replied to Mr. Giddings, and said it was true that Virginia blood was of noble character, whether in the veins of the white or the black man. [Laughter.] If Mr. Giddings goes to Virginia, he will be invited to associate with that race of which he is the peculiar friend. Several others made remarks, when the amendment to insert free whites was agreed to by 67 to 51. Without coming to any conclusion on the bill, the Committee rose.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, May 30.

The reading of the journal was dispensed with. Mr. Butler announced the death of Mr. Elmore, Senator from South Carolina, giving a brief sketch of his life and public services, and passing a glowing tribute upon his moral and intellectual worth. In conclusion, he offered the usual resolutions of respect and condolence. Mr. Hunter seconded the resolutions in a few eloquent remarks in honor of the deceased. Messrs. Yulee, Webster, and Jeff. Davis, also delivered tributes to the memory of the deceased. The resolutions were adopted, and the Senate adjourned to attend the funeral to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

House of Representatives.

A dozen members of the House met at 8 o'clock, with Mr. Boyd in the Chair. After the reading of the journal, Mr. Jones moved that the House adjourn until to-morrow at 11 o'clock. Mr. Booth asked the reason for the motion. Mr. Jones said that Mr. Elmore, Senator from S. C., died last night, and to-morrow it will be necessary to make arrangements for the funeral. Adjourned.

In Senate. SIXTH-DAY, May 31.

The funeral of Mr. Elmore was attended, in the Senate Chamber, by the members of the Senate and House of Representatives, the Diplomatic Corps, the President and his Cabinet, the family and friends of the deceased, and a few others, among whom were the young Sandwich Islanders, Princes Rimoriho and Kamahamaha, dressed in superb court suits, and accompanied by Rev. Dr. Judd, and James Jackson James, Special Commissioner and Plenipotentiary from the Hawaiian Government.

After the ceremony at the burial ground had been concluded, the Senate resumed business. An attempt was made to get a vote for adjourning over to Second-day, and thence to Fifth-day, under the pretence of giving opportunity to put the Chamber in its summer dress. This proving unsuccessful, it was moved to postpone the consideration of the compromise bill until Fifth-day next. But this also failed, and a motion to lay that bill on the table was carried; after which the bill to establish a Mint in New York, and a Mint and Assaying Office in San Francisco, was read a third time and passed. The Senate then adjourned over to Second-day.

House of Representatives.

Nothing was done by the House but to hear a eulogy on Mr. Elmore, offer resolutions of condolence, attend the funeral, and adjourn over to Second-day.

THE CUBAN AFFAIR.—The expedition of Gen. Lopez, for the overthrow of the existing Government of Cuba, is generally considered a failure. As we stated last week, the Company under the special command of the General, landed at Cardenas, took possession of the town after some pretty sharp fighting, and were afterwards driven off with the loss of several men. The small amount of treasure which they brought away with them to this country, has been demanded by our government, and will be delivered up to the Spanish authorities. It is said that persons connected with the expedition will be punished with the utmost rigor of the law. Miguel T. Tolon, editor of Le Verdad, N. Y., has been arrested and held to bail on a charge of beginning or setting on foot in the United States a military expedition or enterprise against the dominions of the Queen of Spain. The Charleston Courier of May 30, says to have been informed by Capt. Kean, of the brig Argus, five days from Havana, that there was great excitement at that place when he left, in consequence of a report that an expedition had landed on the south side of the Island to the number of several thousand, and had taken possession of Cienfugos and Trinidad.

CHARITIES IN AMHERST, N. H.—Our readers recollect a notice, some time ago, of a large bequest by a Mr. Smith of Northampton, to that town and seven others adjoining, for various charitable purposes. The Amherst Express contains the report of the Trustees of these charities, which shows the whole amount of the funds at the present time to be $444,318 62. They comprise two funds, the Miscellaneous and Contingent Funds. The former was originally $200,000, now increased to $232,776 80. This is to be suffered to accumulate till it reaches $400,000, and then to be divided as follows: $30,000 to accumulate for 60 years, and then to be applied to the founding of an Agricultural School in Northampton; $10,000 to the American Colonization Society; $360,000 for the use and benefit of indigent boys, girls, young women and widows, in the eight specified towns. The interest of the Contingent Fund (which fund now amounts to $211,541 82) is to be applied to defray the expense of managing the bequests, and to keep good the fund for the benefit of indigent young people and widows.

STEAMBOAT DISASTER.—A dispatch to the N. Y. Tribune, dated May 29, at 10 o'clock P. M., says:—Another terrible steamboat accident took place this evening. The steamer St. Louis collapsed two flues, three miles below the city, at quarantine. A frightful scene ensued—the shrieks of the wounded and dying were heart-rending.

From all information which could be gathered in the confusion, it appears that twenty-five lives were lost, and forty persons wounded. About half the number of persons scalded will certainly die. The sufferers were mostly deck passengers. Nine bodies have been recovered and buried. A number were either blown or jumped overboard, some of whose bodies will probably never be recovered. The cause of the lamentable catastrophe is not known. The boat and machinery were all new, and the officers careful and experienced men.

LIQUID GOLD.—On Tuesday, May 28, says the Philadelphia Bulletin, there was melted down and cast into ingots for rolling, in the melter and refiner's department of the Mint, about seven hundred thousand dollars worth of gold; and on the same day, of gold preparatory for assay, there was melted nearly one hundred thousand dollars more. The whole weight was about 3,600 pounds, and if rolled into a sheet as thick as a half-eagle, would yield 545 square feet. In these three dimensions of value, weight and superfices, the day's work makes a very respectable brag. If we present it in solid measurement, however, the story is spoiled. Imagine it all fluid at once, and yet it could easily be contained in a royal foot-bath of three cubic feet.

PEACE CONGRESS AT FRANKFORT.—For the accommodation of the Delegates, the American Peace Congress Committee have made arrangements for a first-class ship of 600 tons, to sail from Boston about the first of July for London, where she will remain forty days, and then return. Fare both ways will not exceed $150; and if the number should be one hundred, $125. The Committee are expecting a very large delegation from all parts of the country. With this arrangement, the whole expense to Frankfort and back, will not exceed $200. Persons who are going are requested to send their names to the Treasurer, E. W. Jackson, Boston, with $20 of passage money, which will be returned if the ship does not go.

American Peace Congress Committee.

Boston, May 24, 1850.

A letter from the city of Mexico, dated May 14, speaking of cholera, says that in Queretaro from the 28th ult. to the 3d inst. there were over 300 deaths. It made its appearance in Guanajuato early in March last; private letters of the 18th April stated it was on the decline, though there were 30 deaths daily; and those of the 9th inst. stated it was still decreasing there, but was raging again with great malignity in Silao, a town seven leagues distant from the latter city.

The Toronto (Canada) Guardian mentions a melancholy case of poisoning, in the town ship of Walpole, resulting in the deaths of a family of five persons—Joseph Allen, his wife, a young man eighteen years old, a boy twelve, and a girl five years old. They were poisoned by eating a soup in which wild parsnips were an ingredient. The whole five were interred at one time.

SUMMARY.

To forward the project of founding a Baptist University at Rochester, a temporary paper, called the Annunciator, has been started. The first number states that upwards of 200 individuals have subscribed, in sums from $25 to $10,000, towards purchasing a site, erecting buildings, &c. It also conjectures that $65,000 will be subscribed in Monroe county, and that the sum will be increased to $200,000 in other parts of the State. Gov. Marcy is President of the Board of Trustees.

The Concord Statesman says that at Bartlett, N. H., the Rev. Mr. Tenny, a Universalist clergyman, formerly of Fryeburg, Me., was endeavoring to ford the Saco river,—the bridge having been carried off,—when the water, being high, lifted the wagon off the fore wheels, there being no pin in the bolt, which precipitated the whole family into the river!—his wife and three little children, one of them a boy three years old, were drowned.

The number of deaths by cholera, at Havana, on the 9th May, was so great that the negroes at the city cemetery employed to bury the dead, took fright and ran off, and nothing could induce them to return. The "chain gang" at the prison, numbering about two hundred and fifty, were then brought out, and an offer of pardon made to any sixteen of them who would supply their places—only three accepted!

A dispatch dated at Utica, N. Y., May 31, says that a boat loaded with railroad iron took on board a quantity of powder at Frankfort, near Utica, and two of the hands went amidships, it is supposed with the intention of stealing some of the powder. One of them had a lighted pipe, from which it is thought the powder ignited, producing a terrible explosion, making a complete wreck of the boat, and severely if not fatally injuring one or two men.

An order has been granted by Justice Wright, of the Supreme Court, directing bill-holders of the exploded Canal Bank of Albany to present the same for payment within two years, or be precluded from the benefit of the fund set aside for that purpose; the Receiver to sell at auction such of the assets of the Bank as he may deem it advisable for the interest of the creditors to dispose of, giving at least thirty days' notice of the sale.

The Managers of the Washington National Monument Society have adopted the following resolution:—Resolved, That the people of the United States, either individually or by associations, be and they are hereby respectfully requested to take up collections throughout the Union on the approaching Anniversary of American Independence, in aid of the great Washington National Monument now being erected in the City of Washington.

On the 24th of May, the mortal remains of James K. Polk, late President of the United States, were removed from their temporary resting place in the cemetery, with appropriate and impressive ceremonies and public solemnity and respect, and deposited in the private vault prepared for them, in the beautiul lawn, in front of the family residence.

The bark Helen, of Thomaston, Me., Capt. Barnard Ulmer, sailed from New York for Malaga on the 2d of March last, with a full cargo of staves; arrived and discharged at Malaga, and sailed for Palermo, where she took in a full cargo for New York, and arrived on the 28th of May, making the entire voyage in the remarkably short space of 87 days—the shortest time on record of a similar voyage by a sailing vessel.

Advices have been received at the Navy Department confirming the report of the yellow fever having broken out on board the frigate Brandywine on her passage from Rio to Montevideo. The Department has advices of the death of Acting Master Thomas L. Dance, Passed Midshipman Raiford W. Ives, Mr. Usher, Commodore's Clerk, and one seaman.

The Hagerstown (Md.) Pledge states that on Saturday night last, some fiend in human shape entered the Episcopal burying ground in that place, dug up the body of the child of Mr. Brining, and carried it to the house where the mother lived, stood it on the roof of the back oven, where it was discovered on Sunday afternoon, and re-interred. The child at the time of its death was about two years old, and had been buried about three months.

In Superior Court, New York, a decision has just been made, that the owner of a dog is not responsible for injury done by it unless he knew it had been accustomed to bite mankind. This is an important decision, and, if good in law, should be remembered. According to this, a man has no redress for injuries received from biting dogs, unless the dogs have acquired a bad character before they bite.

A meeting for the pecuniary relief of Father Mathew, was held at New Orleans, the 16th ult. It was stated that Father Mathew had not $20 in the world, and was in debt to the amount of $6,000. Several animated speeches were made, and a resolution was adopted by acclamation, recommending to the Councils of the three municipalities to appropriate sums for his relief.

A dispatch dated Pottsville, Pa., Tuesday, May 23, says that a dreadful fire-damp explosion took place that morning at the mines of Bainbridge and Byerson, on Mill Creek, near Port Carbon, as the operatives were going in to their work. The fire-damp exploded, which dreadfully burned thirteen of the operatives.

It is stated that the total loss by the fire at Corning will be about $300,000, the most of which is covered by insurance. $15,000 of timber owned by non-residents was not insured. There were seventy-four buildings burned, but most of them were cheap structures. The Corning Bank saved all its books and papers.

The Academy at Freyburg, Maine, was destroyed by fire on Sunday, the 28th ult. The building was set on fire by some rascal. A district school house near the Academy was recently destroyed by an incendiary fire.

Some scoundrel recently entered the office of the Northern New-Yorker at Gouveneur, and made pi of almost everything capable of being converted into that article.

A good idea of the way they do things in Texas may be gathered from the following paragraph: "The rancho of Kit Carson and Boggs, between Taos and the Moro, was thrown into consternation, recently, by eight Indians entering it and running off quite a number of their stock. Carson, Boggs, and two others, soon started in pursuit and overtook the party of Indians, attacked them, killed five of the party, recovered the mules, and fifty additional head."

The Independent says that the Swedish Prophet, Jansen, was shot in the court-house at Cambridge, Ill., on the 13th May, by Root, whose wife had been abducted and secreted, as is supposed, by the followers and under the direction of Jansen. The pistol-ball entered his chest just above the heart, severing the main artery. Jansen uttered a single groan and expired. Root avowed the act, and was immediately indicted by the grand jury for murder, to be tried next term.

Speaking of Indian depredations in Texas, the Corpus Christi Star says that the Indians still continue to annoy the citizens of Laredo and its vicinity. Nearly all the stock has been killed or driven away, the ranchos abandoned, and the country generally broken up on account of the daring atrocities committed in that section.

A telegraphic dispatch from Washington says that the Land Reform Bill, it is understood, will come up next after the Slavery question is at rest, and Mr. Webster will advocate the bill of the Committee. It has been ascertained, almost beyond a doubt, that the bill will prevail in both Houses.

There were two breaks in the Erie Canal last week—one at Geddes, where a breach which had been repaired gave way on letting in the water—the other in the vicinity of Rochester, where a great embankment gave way, and was washed down for forty or fifty rods in extent and fifty or sixty feet in depth.

The firemen of Detroit have set a good example to their brother firemen elsewhere. They have recently bought a lot in the center of the city for $5,000, and are about to hire $10,000 more, to put up a large building, the income of which, after it is paid for, is to be expended in charity among disabled firemen and their families; and, also, to procure a reading-room and library for the firemen.

Last January a slave belonging to a widow lady in Platte Co., Mo., bought a quart of whisky at a store, got drunk, fell from his horse, and froze to death. The widow lady sued the firm, and at the March term of the Platte Court obtained a verdict for $850, the value of her negro.

Eclectic Magazine for the Year 1850.

THE Eclectic Magazine of Foreign Literature, Science, and Art, aims to present to its readers a complete survey of the whole field of British Periodical Literature, comprising the selections of all the articles of the most able and celebrated Reveiws, Magazines, and Journals, which have any interest or value to American readers. It not only contains the articles which are desirable in those periodicals reprinted in this country, but in the far greater variety of able and popular Reveiws, Magazines, &c., which form so splendid an element of the literature of the day, and which are inaccessible to the mass of American readers, except by some such medium as the Eclectic Magazine. By omitting what is merely local in interest or feeble in character, the ample size of the Eclectic Magazine enables the editor to embody all that is really desirable in the whole range of journalism. As only the best articles of each periodical are selected, it is evident that the contents of the Eclectic Magazine must be superior to those of any one, however great or celebrated; and, taken together, must constitute a more desirable and able body of periodical literature than can be found elsewhere in the same compass.

Each number is embellished with a suberb steel engraving, from the well-known burin of Mr. Sartain, of subjects of elevated character and general interest, including portraits of distinguished living authors and celebrities, making twelve rich and elegant prints in a year.

TERMS.

The Eclectic Magazine is issued on the first of every month, in numbers of 144 large 8vo. pages each, on fine paper, making three volumes a year, with title-pages and indexes. Price $5 per year, if paid strictly in advance—otherwise invariably $6.

FREE SCHOOL STATE CONVENTION.

To the People of New York:

The question whether the State of New York shall, or shall not, have FREE SCHOOLS, is to be decided at the polls in November next. It is a question of great moment. Its decision involves vast results. It will affect, to an extent not fully appreciated, the Physical, Intellectual, Social, and Moral Interests of the State. In a word, the Empire State is to be dishonored, or to be elevated, by that vote.

This question must be discussed. Organization is indispensable. We therefore join in the Call for a STATE CONVENTION of the friends of Free Schools, to be held at Syracuse, on WEDNESDAY, THE TWELFTH DAY OF JUNE NEXT, at 10 o'clock A. M. We invite the opponents of Free Schools to present their views of the question in debate.

Invitations will be extended to quite a number of the most able and distinguished friends of Universal Education, in this and other States.

We respectfully ask of every editor of a newspaper in this State, at least one early insertion of this Call, and such notice as he shall deem fitting.

THE FREE SCHOOL CAMPAIGN.

The question is now again fairly before the people, whether the eleven thousand five hundred schools of the State shall be free to all, or whether the children of poverty or destitution, the offspring of parents of straitened means, shall virtually be excluded; whether the property of the State, on a fair and equal valuation, shall contribute to the education of its future citizens, or whether each individual shall be left to his own means and resources for the accomplishment of this great object.

We are fully aware of the difficulties and embarrassments which surround the discussion of this question, in the form in which it is actually presented for our consideration; but we think we see our way clearly, and the indications of public sentiment which reach us from all quarters, satisfy us that a large majority of the voters of the State will strip the issue of all its disguises, and aim directly and most effectually at the principle involved, regardless of all minor and adventitious considerations, with which it may be temporarily connected.

The number of children estimated, by the Superintendent of Common Schools, from official returns procured for this express purpose, as having been annually excluded from the public schools, in consequence of the inability of their parents and guardians to meet the rate-bill imposed under the former law, for their instruction, was FIFTY THOUSAND. This estimate, we have ample reason to believe, was far below the reality. Full returns were received from about half the counties only; and the real extent of the destitution thus inflicted, must remain a matter of inference. The naked fact, however, affords a most conclusive answer to the allegation, so frequently heard, that our schools were virtually free before the passage of the Act of 1849. They were not free, in any sense of the term. If parents were able to meet the expense of tuition, they were, of course, at liberty to send; and in this sense every private and select school in the land is a free school. But what was the result when, either from misfortune, idleness, intemperance, or vice—neither of which was chargeable to the innocent and hapless children—they were unable to meet the rate-bill imposed by the Trustees? It was optional with the Trustees to exempt them from such payment or not; and in at least FIFTY THOUSAND instances, this exemption was, in point of fact, REFUSED! and the Collector ordered to levy on the only bed, the only cow, the only means perhaps of subsistence, of the hapless family, to satisfy his warrant. Follow this class of cases a little farther. Will these children, or any of them, again be permitted to venture within the precincts of the alledged free schools? or will they not rather inevitably be consigned to the dominion of ignorance?

It is cheerfully conceded, that in the great majority of the school districts of the State, exemptions were liberally made by the Trustees; but in all they had the power of refusing such exemptions; and those who stood in need of their interposition could never be certain that it would be granted. How many children were kept out of the schools in consequence of this uncertainty, it is impossible to estimate. It is bitter mockery to call such a state of things a system of Free Schools.

How has it been with the operation of the new law—imperfect and defective as it is conceded to be—in this respect? In every locality where the schools have been opened, even for the scanty term of four months, they have been literally flooded with the glad footsteps of the children of the State—who, the moment the doors were freely opened for their reception, came thronging in, to an extent hitherto unprecedented. The experience of nearly every school district in the State will bear us out in the assertion, that at no previous period of their history have the schools been more numerously or regularly attended, than during the past winter. Indeed, we shall be greatly disappointed if the annual reports for the year ending on the last day of December, 1850, while they will show a sad falling off in the average number of months taught, do not show an increase of more than one hundred thousand children to the number heretofore taught in the common schools.

Are not these facts, and the conclusions to which they give rise, worthy of consideration by every thoughtful mind? Are we prepared to abandon a system which is fraught with so many substantial blessings, for no other reason than because it is not yet perfect?

FRENCH COLONY IN COSTA RICA.—A company has been formed in France for colonizing a large tract of country in the Republic of Costa Rica, Central America. The land which has already been purchased lies on the Golio Dolce, the best harbor on the Pacific coast. It is admirably adapted for all naval and commercial purposes, and will doubtless become, in the possession of the French company, which possesses abundant means, a point of great importance. It is the intention of the company to open a communication immediately with the Boco del Toro, the opposite point on the Atlantic side. This place is but a little to the south of the point where the Panama railroad will terminate. The country is healthy, and the soil of the greatest fertility. Major Poussin, late Minister to this country from the French Republic, is one of the Directors of this company. Doubtless his experience as a civil engineer has led to his selection.

EXPLORATIONS IN NEW ZEALAND.

The New Zealander of the 26th of Dec. last has the following interesting account of an exploration in the southern part of the Island:—

The Lieutenant-Governor had undertaken a journey southward with a view of finding a route to Port Cooper, from which he was induced to return by a melancholy and fatal accident to one of his party. After leaving the Wairau, having traversed the Kaparatehau district, His Excellency ascended the great snowy mountains which form the principal peak of the Kaikoras, and attains an elevation of at least 9,000 feet. The ascent was laborious and dangerous, "the sides of the mountain, particularly toward the summit, being broken into almost perpendicular precipices of several hundred feet in hight, divided from each other by narrow projecting ledges of rock, while the difficulty of ascent was still further increased by the great depth of snow which lay on the ground, and the loose nature of the soil, which gave way beneath the tread, rendering the footing of the travelers very precarious. After thirteen hours of toil, they had nearly reached the top, but it was then so late that they were obliged to return to a spot where they might find shelter for the night. In the descent they had to cross a nearly perpendicular face of the hill, down which hung a frozen bed of snow, and Wiremu Hoeta, a native attendant, lost his footing and fell down a precipice, pitching from one projecting rock to another to the bottom of the abyss, a depth of about 1,600 feet, where his dead body could be seen in a sort of vortex, but where it was impossible to get at it. The Governor himself narrowly escaped, having also lost his footing, and was only saved by thrusting his iron-shod staff into the snow until he could regain his feet."

On the east side of the mountain, below the surface, was found a fine valley of timber, affording great encouragement to any future attempt to reach the summit. "At an elevation above the sea were found remains of trees, (many of them charred,) some of them belonged to trees originally five feet in diameter, rendering proof of the former existence of extensive forests before the upheaval of those mountains." No vegetation now exists on this spot. A considerable area, about 200 yards in length, and several yards in breadth, was sunk to a depth of between three and four feet.

Some of the hills, 200 feet in elevation, rent vertically, and large portions dislodged, and even in some of the main ridges connected with the range of snowy mountains, chasms were noted, which showed the violence of the agencies that had been in operation.

PROLONGED VITALITY OF ROOTS AND SEEDS.

"Though seed lie buried long in dust,
It sha'n't deceive our hope."

The following is mostly a collection of facts, gathered from different sources, showing the remarkable power that seeds of most plants, and even some roots, have of preserving their vitality for an almost unlimited time, when placed in circumstances that neither favor germination, nor occasion decay. It was stated in a former number, that the condition requisite for the germination of seeds, are warmth, moisture, and the presence of oxygen; and it follows, of course, that when these conditions are removed, there seems to be no limit to the period during which they may retain the power of performing their vital operations, whenever these conditions are again restored. And even if the oxygen be not entirely excluded, the same effect may result, provided the temperature be low and uniform. Some of the seeds that had been kept in the seed-vessels of plants preserved in the herbarium of Tournefort, a French botanist, were found to retain their fertility after the lapse of nearly a century.

Instances are of no unfrequent occurrence, in which ground that has been newly broken up, spontaneously produces plants different from any others in the neighborhood. In some of the New England States, when the beech, maple, and hemlock timber are cut off, and after the ground has been burnt over, there springs up, spontaneously, a heavy growth of pigeon-cherry. The probable reason of this is, that many years previous, a different kind of timber has grown upon the place, and the seeds have lain deep in the earth, and not sufficiently exposed to air and caloric to produce generation till the last growth of timber was cleared off.

To the westward of Stirling, there is a large peat-bog, a great part of which has been flooded away, by raising water from the river Teith, and discharging it into the Forth—the object of the process being to lay bare the under-soil of clay which is then cultivated. The clergyman of the parish was on one occasion standing by, while the workmen were forming a ditch in this clay, in a part which had been covered with fourteen feet of peat earth. Observing some seeds in the clay which was thrown out of this ditch, he took them up and sowed them; they germinated, and produced a species of Chrysanthemum. A very long period of years must have elapsed while these seeds were getting their covering of clay; and of the time necessary to produce fourteen feet of peat-earth above this, it is scarcely possible to form an idea.

About thirty years ago, some well-diggers, while sinking a well, forty miles from the sea, in the State of Maine, struck, at the depth of twenty feet, a layer of sand. This strongly excited curiosity and interest, from the circumstance that no similar sand was to be found anywhere in the neighborhood, nor nearer than the sea-beach. As it was drawn up from the well, it was placed in a pile by itself; the workmen feeling an unwillingness to mix it with the stones and gravel that were also drawn up. But when the work was about to be finished, and the pile of stones and gravel to be removed, it was found necessary also to remove the sand heap. It was, therefore, scattered about the spot on which it had been placed, and was, for a time, almost forgotten. In a year or two, however, it was perceived that a great number of little trees had sprung up all over the ground where the sand had been strewn. These trees in their turn became objects of great interest, and care was taken that they should not be injured. At length it was ascertained that they were beach-plum trees, and they actually bore the beach-plum, which had never before been seen, except immediately upon the sea-shore. These trees must, therefore, have sprung up from the seeds, which had existed in the stratum of the sea-sand pierced by the well-diggers; and until this was dispersed in such a manner as to expose them to the air, they remained inactive. By what convulsion of the elements had they been thrown there, and how long had they quietly slept beneath the surface of the earth?

In the year 1715, during the rebellion in Scotland, a camp was formed in the King's Park at Stirling. Wherever the ground was broken, broom sprang up, although it had never been known to grow there. The plant was subsequently destroyed; but in 1745 a similar growth appeared, after the ground had again been broken up for a like purpose. Some time afterward the whole park was ploughed up, and broom became generally spread over it. The same thing happened in a field in that neighborhood, from the whole surface of which about nine inches of soil had been removed.

The following remarkable instance, related by Dr. Lindley, shows a lapse of at least 1600 or 1700 years. "I have now before me," he says, "the plants of raspberries, which have been raised in the gardens of the Horticultural Society, from seeds taken from the stomach of a man, whose skeleton was found thirty feet below the surface of the earth, at the bottom of a barrow, which was opened at Dorchester. He had been buried with some coins of the Emperor Adrian."

Lord Lindsay, in his travels, writes that, while wandering amid the pyramids of Egypt, he stumbled on a mummy, proved by its hieroglyphics to be at least 2000 years old. In examining the mummy after it was unwrapped, he found in one of its closed hands a tuberous root. He was interested in the question how long vegetable life could last; and he therefore took that root from the mummy's hand, planted it in a sunny soil, allowed the rains and the dews of heaven to descend upon it, and in the course of a few weeks, to his astonishment and joy, the root sent up a thrifty plant, from which, in due time, there burst forth a beautiful Dahlia.

"PITY HIS FAMILY."

A man falls into embarrassments, which ultimately overwhelm him in bankruptcy, or drive him into roguery and crime. He was yesterday respected, influential, and supposed to be affluent, and his family were treated and treated themselves accordingly; but to-day he is disgraced and steered clear of—without resources or prospects—very likely in prison and exposed to ignominious punishment. "Vile wretch!" say the million; "it is good enough for him, but we pity his poor family."

Certainly, we must pity them—pity all who suffer—still more all who sin and suffer. They need pity, and there is no danger that we shall pity them to much. But the impression conveyed of the innocence of the fallen man's family, and their unmerited exposure to want and ignominy, is often very far from the truth.

In fact, half the men who are loathed as dragging down their families to shame and destitution, are really themselves dragged down by those families—driven to bankruptcy, shame and crime, by the thoughtless and basely selfish extravagance of wife and children. Let a man be in the way of receiving considerable money, and having property in his hands, and his family can rarely be made to comprehend and realize, that there is any limit to his abilities to give and spend. Fine dresses and ornaments for wife and daughters—spending-money and broadcloth for hopeful sons—costly parties every now and then, and richer furniture and more of it at all times—these are a few of the blind drains on "the governor's" means, which are perpetually in action. "Oh, what's a hundred dollars to a man doing such a business?" is the indignant question in case of any demur or remonstrance on his part. Not one of them could bear to disgrace him by earning a dollar; they could not go out shabbily dressed, for fear his credit would suffer. They can't see how a man who can get discounts in bank need ever be short of money or stingy in using it. All his talk of difficulties or hard times they regard as customary fables, intended to scrimp their drafts on his purse or enhance their sense of his generosity. When it is so easy to fill up a check, why will he be hoggish? Let him give fifty dollars to any philanthropic object, or invest five hundred, however safely, in any attempt to meliorate the sufferings of the poor, and they now see clearly that he has hoards of gold, and can just as well give them all dresses and jewels as not. Thus the man of means or of business is too often regarded by his family as a sponge to be squeezed, a goose to be plucked, an orange to be sucked, a spring to be drank from when thirsty without at all diminishing its flow. The stuff is there in profusion—the only trouble is to make him give it up.

In vain he remonstrates—implores—puts down his foot. He cannot be eternally contending with those he loves best—he wants quiet at home in order to mature his plans and perfect his operations. If he resists importunity, the pumps are set going, and what man can stand the April showers of feminine sorrow? He gives way at last, and throws down the money demanded, hoping that some great news by the next steamship, some turn of luck in his business, will make it up to him. Perhaps it does, and he floats on; perhaps it don't, and this last feather has broken the elephant's back. The end, however near or distant, is morally certain. Treated always as a mine to be opened at will, he finally grows desperate and rushes into reckless speculation or blasting crime, and is overwhelmed with ruin. "Selfish villain!" say the ignorant crowd; "how could he run such a career? How we pity his family!" No doubt of it! But if you knew more perhaps you would pity him.

ACTION OF LIME ON ANIMAL AND VEGETABLE SUBSTANCES.—It is generally believed, that lime possesses a powerful tendency to corrode and destroy animal bodies, and that when placed in contact with it, they soon decompose and disappear. With this view it has been added to graves to promote a rapid decay. Dr. John Davy has made a series of experiments upon the action of lime on animal and vegetable substances, the results of which show, that it not only does not promote their decomposition, but that it exercises a decided preventive and antiseptic power, and that putrefaction, when once commenced, is speedily arrested by this agent.

FOOD RAISED ON AN ACRE.

The amount of human food that can be produced upon an acre is worthy of great consideration. One hundred bushels of Indian corn per acre is not an uncommon crop. One peck per week will not only sustain life, but give a man strength to labor, if the stomach is properly toned to that amount of food. This, then, would feed one man four hundred weeks, or almost eight years!

Four hundred bushels of northern potatoes can also be raised upon an acre. This would give a bushel a week for the same length of time; and the actual weight of an acre of sweet potatoes is 21,344 pounds, which is not considered an extraordinary crop. This would feed a man six pounds a day for 3,557 days, or nine and two-thirds years!

To vary the diet, we will occasionally give rice. This has been grown at the rate of ninety-three bushels to the acre over an entire field. This, at 45 lbs. to the bushel, would be 4,185 lbs.; or, at 28 lbs. to the bushel, when hulled, 2,604 lbs., which, at two pounds a day, would feed a man 1,302 days, or more than three and a half years!

Upon reflection, it is not very wonderful that so many non-producers are able to find food, when we see how many mouths one laborer can fill. [American Agriculturalist.

PROFITS OF POULTRY RAISING.

At the Poultry Convention recently held in Boston, Col. Minot Thayer, of Braintree, said he had been much engaged in fowl raising for fifty years. His farm consisted of about 200 acres, and was acknowledged to be a good one; yet with an outlay of $25, in connection with its fowl department, he had derived more profit than from all the rest of his farm. It was his opinion, that good policy required the keeping of but few fowls; he usually had not more than 100; with two acres of land and a running brook, that number would be very productive. His practice was to have two or three houses in which to shelter them in winter; these houses were made of stone on three sides. It was necessary, he said, to give the hens meat or fish in the winter, when they would lay eggs as freely as in the summer.

Mr. Giles, of Providence, said he agreed with Col. T., that a few fowls would be more profitable than a large number, unless proportionably great pains were taken in their management—200 or 300 might be kept on two or three acres of land. He believed that the raising of fowls, in connection with a tract of four or six acres of land, having a stream of water running through it, might be made to yield more profit than any farm in Massachusetts or Rhode Island, of 200 acres. His practice was to keep them warm, and not allow them to go out in the coldest days in winter. Their houses should be cleaned as often as once a week, and a little slacked lime strewed in them. In summer they should roost out upon the trees. If the raising of eggs is the object with the farmer, he was of the opinion that the Dorking and the white Shanghae are the most profitable fowls. [Am. A SINGULAR AFFAIR.

The principal circumstances of the story which follows were first communicated to the Philadelphia Inquirer. The matter has lately been attracting considerable attention in Brooklyn. Some thirteen years ago, a Scotchman named John Cameron, on Long Island, suddenly died, as was supposed of apoplexy, leaving a boy eight years old, and a widow, who appears to have had some intimacy with a person named Palmer, who afterwards left for England. The boy was present when his father died. The mother had gone out of the village that day, on a visit, and the boy prepared the evening meal for his father, who partook of it, and then expired. Palmer and the neighbors were called in, and the next day the dody was buried, no inquest having been held, not even the doctor examining the body.

Soon after this, the relatives of the deceased in Scotland received an anonymous letter, stating that there had been a case of poisoning, but nothing more was thought or done, in the matter.

The boy, who became a lithographer, and has for some years been employed by Mr. Currier, in Nassau-st., N. Y., recently proposed to have the body of his father removed to a place of sepulture, more in accordance with his wishes. For this purpose he made arrangements for a grave-stone, and for preserving the remains. A sexton was employed, and the body was discovered in the grave, where it had been placed by himself thirteen years ago. On opening the coffin, the hands, which had been fastened upon the breast originally, were found under the head, the fingers clenched in the hair, indicating that the man had been buried alive. This, however, was not all. The body retained all the freshness of life, was only a little discolored, and could not be lifted from the grave on account of its weight. The flesh on the surface yielded to the touch, the body was recognized by many persons of the village, and the slight change became the subject of general comment. A full examination will soon be made, when it is possible that the circumstances will be explained.

MAKING MAPLE SUGAR.—It is surprising how very general the practice is of boiling the sap in large cast-iron kettles. Sheet-iron is much cheaper, needs far less fuel, does not crust nor burn round the top, and is decidedly favorable to clean sugar. A simple mode of making sheet-iron pans is described in the Ohio Cultivator—the pans being four or five feet by two and a half, nine inches deep, the bottom and ends one strip of good sheet iron, and the sides one and a half inch plank. The edges of the iron are punched with holes an inch apart, in a zig-zag line, a strip of slippery elm bark placed between the iron and plank when nailed on, and the whole then placed on a brick "arch," which entirely keeps the fire from the plank sides. WHO'LL TURN THE GRINDSTONE?

Franklin says: "When I was a little boy, I remember one cold winter's morning I was accosted by a smiling man with an axe on his shoulder. 'My pretty boy,' said he, 'has your father got a grindstone?' 'Yes, sir,' said I. 'You are a fine little fellow,' said he, 'will you let me grind an axe on it?' Pleased with his compliment of fine little fellow, 'O, yes sir,' I answered, 'it is down in the shop.' 'And will you, my man, get me a little hot water?' said he, patting me on the head. How could I refuse? I ran and soon brought a kettle full. 'How old are you, and what's your name?' continued he, without waiting for a reply; 'I am sure you are one of the finest lads that I have ever seen; will you just turn a few minutes for me!' Tickled with the flattery, like a fool I went to work, and bitterly did I rue the day. It was a new axe, and I toiled till I was almost tired to death. The school bell rang, and I could not get away; my hands were blistered, and it was not half ground. At length, however, the axe was sharpened, and the man turned to me with 'now, you little rascal, you've played the truant, scud to school, you'll get it.' Alas, thought I, it was hard enough to turn a grindstone this cold day—but now to be called a little rascal was too much. It sunk deep in my mind, and often have I thought of it since. When I see a merchant over polite to his customers—begging them to take a little brandy, and throwing his goods on the counter—thinks I, that man has an axe to grind. When I see a man flattering the people, making great professions of attachment to liberty, who is in private like a tyrant—methinks, look out, good people, that fellow would set you turning grindstones. When I see a man hoisted into office by party spirit, without a single qualification to render him either respectable or useful—alas, methinks, deluded people, you are doomed for a season to turn the grindstone for a booby.

THE NEW COINS.—We are indebted, says the N. Y. Tribune, to W. E. Du Bois, Esq., of the U. S. Mint, Philadelphia, for specimens of the new coins provided for by Mr. Dickinson's bill, which has lately been referred to the Finance Committee of the Senate. The three-cent piece, which is three-fourths silver and one-fourth copper, is little smaller in circumference than a half-dime, and about two-thirds the thickness. It could hardly be mistaken for one in the pocket. On the face is a Phrygian cap, surrounded by rays, with the word "Liberty" upon it, and "1850" underneath; on the reverse the number "III" circled by a sprig of foliage, outside of which are the words "UNITED STATES OF AMERICA." The new cent is about the size of a dime, with a large hole in the center, ostensibly to give it greater circumference, though this feature will be very convenient, by distinguishing it, in the pocket, from all small silver pieces. On one side it has merely "Cent," and "1850;" on the other "U. S. A." and "ONE-TENTH SILVER." The edges of both coins are not milled. Their design and execution strike us as admirable in every respect. The cent is of a light reddish-gray color, and not more than one eighth the weight of a copper cent. If the bill should pass, which there seems no reason to doubt, this coin will be the greatest improvement which has ever been introduced into our currency. The three-cent piece is intended to be paid at the Mint, in exchange for the small Spanish money now in circulation, at its current value.

NEW SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY.—The Paris correspondent of the London Times says: "The scientific world has been in a state of commotion during the whole week, in consequence of the publication of the discovery of the long-sought-for secret of the fusion and crystalization of carbon. The Sorbonne has been crowded for the last few days to behold the result of this discovery, in the shape of a tolerably-sized diamond of great luster, which M. Desprezt, the happy discoverer, submits to the examination of every chemist or savant who chooses to visit him. He declares that as long ago as last Autumn he had succeeded in producing the diamond, but in such minute particles as to be visible only through the microscope, and, fearful of raising irony and suspicion, he had kept the secret until, by dint of repeated experiments and great labor, he had completed the one he now offers to public view. Four solar lens of immense power, aided by the tremendous galvanic pile of the Sorbonne, have been the means of producing the result now before us. M. Desprezt holds himself ready to display the experiment whenever it may be required. The diamond produced is of the quality known in the East as the black diamond, one single specimen of which was sold by Prince Rostoff to the late Duke of York, for the enormous sum of $12,000!"

NO MORE CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.—Tao-Kouang, Emperor of China, has heard of the discovery of gold in California, and is determined that his subjects shall not be tempted there. The last India mail brought a copy of a new paper just issued at Pekin, which contains an ordinance of the Emperor, forbidding any of his subjects to emigrate either to California or the State of Costa Rica. Why he has included the latter, it does not appear. Large numbers of Celestials have already made their appearance in the land of promise, and prove to be among the most frugal and industrious of the population.

SINGULAR CUSTOM OF THE RUSSIANS.—A Berlin paper states, that there is in Russia a place called Annerdale, where a most singular custom exists. Every ten years the awful scenes of the crucifixion are enacted by the villagers. Some are dressed to represent soldiers and Jews, some as Pharisees, and many men, women and children, stand around as the crowd of spectators, while on the three crosses are nailed figures in wax, and at the feet kneel women who represent the Marys. The whole scene is gone through with in all its details, and lasts all day. This very singular performance, which has been kept up since the middle ages, is announced to take place again in the month of June of this year, and strangers are invited to witness it.

"Man doubles the evils of his fate by pondering over them; a scratch becomes a wound, a slight an injury, a jest an insult, a small peril a great danger, and a slight sickness often ends in death, by brooding apprehensions."

Littell's Living Age.

PROSPECTUS.—This work is conducted in the spirit of Littell's Museum of Foreign Literature, (which was favorably received by the public for twenty years,) but as it is twice as large, and appears so often, we not only give spirit and freshness to it by many things which were excluded by a month's delay, but while thus extending our scope, and gathering a greater and more attractive variety, are able so to increase the solid and substantial part of our literary, historical, and political harvest, as fully to satisfy the wants of the American reader.

The elaborate and stately Essays of the Edinburgh, Quarterly, and other Reviews; and Blackwood's noble criticisms on Poetry, his keen political Commentaries, highly wrought Tales, and vivid descriptions of rural and mountain Scenery; and the contribution to Literature, History, and Common Life, by the sagacious Spectator, the sparkling Examiner, the judicious Athenæum, the busy and industrious Literary Gazette, the sensible and comprehensive Britannia, the sober and respectable Christian Observer; these are intermixed with the Military and Naval reminiscences of the United Service, and with the best articles of the Dublin University, New Monthly, Fraser's, Tait's, Ainsworth's, Hood's, and Sporting Magazines, and of Chambers' admirable Journal. We do not consider it beneath our dignity to borrow wit and wisdom from Punch; and, when we think it good enough, make use of the thunder of The Times. We shall increase our variety by importations from the continent of Europe, and from the new growth of the British colonies.

The steamship has brought Europe, Asia, and Africa into our neighborhood; and will greatly multiply our connections, as merchants, travelers, and politicians, with all parts of the world; so that much more than ever it now becomes every intelligent American to be informed of the condition and changes of foreign countries. And this not only because of their nearer connection with ourselves, but because the nations seem to be hastening, through a rapid process of change, to some new state of things, which the merely political prophet cannot compute or foresee.

Geographical Discoveries, the progress of Colonization, (which is extending over the whole world,) and Voyages and Travels, will be favorite matter for our selections; and, in general, we shall systematically and very fully acquaint our readers with the great department of Foreign affairs, without entirely neglecting our own.

While we aspire to make the Living Age desirable to all who wish to keep themselves informed of the rapid progress of the movement—to Statesmen, Divines, Lawyers, and Physicians—to men of business and men of leisure—it is still a stronger object to make it attractive to their wives and children. We believe that we can thus do some good in our day and generation; and hope to make the work indispensable in every well-informed family. We say indispensable, because in this day of cheap literature it is not possible to guard against the influx of what is bad in taste and vicious in morals, in any other way than by furnishing a sufficient supply of a healthy character. The mental and moral appetite must be gratified.

We hope that by "winnowing the wheat from the chaff," by providing abundantly for the imagination, and by a large collection of Biography, Voyages and Travels, History, and more solid matter, we may produce a work which shall be popular, while at the same time it will aspire to raise the standard of public taste.

TERMS.—The Living Age is published every Saturday; price 12½ cents a number, or six dollars a year in advance. Remittances for any period will be thankfully received and promptly attended to.

☞ To insure regularity in mailing the work, orders should be addressed to the office of publication.

CLUBS, paying a year in advance, will be supplied as follows:

Four copies for	$20 00
Nine " "	40 00
Twelve " "	50 00

Complete sets, in 24 volumes, to the end of March, 1850, handsomely bound, packed in neat boxes, and delivered in all the principal cities free of expense of freight, are for sale at forty-eight dollars.

Any volume may be had separately at two dollars, bound, or a dollar and a half in numbers.

Any number may be had for 12½ cents; and it may be worth while for subscribers or purchasers to complete any broken volumes they may have, and thus greatly enhance their value.

Judge Story—Chancellor Kent—President Adams.

I have read the prospectus of "The Living Age" with great pleasure, and entirely approve the plan. If it can only obtain the public patronage long enough and large enough, and securely enough to attain its true ends, it will contribute in an eminent degree to give a healthy tone, not only to our literature, but to public opinion. It will enable us to possess, in a moderate compass, a select library of the best productions of the age. It will do more; it will redeem our periodical literature from the reproach of being devoted to light and superficial reading, to transitory speculations, to sickly and ephemeral sentimentalities, and false and extravagant sketches of life and character. JOSEPH STORY.

CAMBRIDGE, April 24, 1844.

I approve very much of the plan of your work, and if it be conducted with the intelligence, spirit, and taste that the prospectus indicates, (of which I have no reason to doubt,) it will be one of the most instructive and popular periodicals of the day. JAMES KENT.

NEW YORK, May 7, 1844.

Of all the periodical journals devoted to literature and science which abound in Europe and in this country, this has appeared to me to be the most useful. It contains indeed the exposition only of the current literature of the English language, but this, by its immense extent and comprehension, includes a portraiture of the human mind in the utmost expansion of the present age.

LETTER FROM A MISSIONARY TO HIS FRIEND.

The following letter from Bro. Nathan Wardner, of Shanghai, China, to a friend in this country, was placed in our hands with permission to use as we might see fit. It gives so good an idea of the manner in which the claims of the Sabbath are treated by a large class of professing Christians, that we think best to print it.

DEAR BROTHER,—Your letters have come to hand, in which I find the following statements:—1st. "I do think I am under no obligation to observe any of the Jewish laws or customs." 2d. "I want Christ's laws and no others." 3d. "The more I study the subject [of the Sabbath] the firmer I grow in my belief; I think I am honest in my investigations, and pray God to enlighten me." 4th. "If God has directed in the way you have gone, I say amen; but I do think your time would be better spent in prayer, and in cultivating the spirit of Christ, than in spending your time on that subject." Besides these, there were other expressions indicating that your feelings were very much chafed towards the Sabbatarians, as you are pleased to style them. Perhaps I may have given you just occasion for feeling disturbed towards me, as I am aware that I possess a very sinful heart, which is constantly prompting me to do wrong, to my own grief as well as to the grief of others. If such has been the case, I am ignorant of the fact, knowing well that nothing was farther from my intention. My intention has been to do by you just as I wish you and every body else to do by me. If my faith and practice do not correspond with the divine rule, no man could do me a greater kindness than to point out my error. I never was, nor ever expect to be, so wise on any subject but that I may be wiser; and I pray God that I may never allow prejudice so to affect me, that I shall be unwilling to receive light from any quarter, and on any subject of practical importance. No; the judgment of the great day is just before us, when every thought, word, and action, will be scanned and tried by—not popular opinion, not church history, not highly probable deductions; but by the simple word of revelation.

I cannot forbear to take some notice of your statements, quoted above. If by "Jewish laws" you mean such as were given to the Jews, then I understand you to discard the whole Bible, except a few of the epistles; for, with these exceptions, it was all written by Jews, and given directly to Jews, as representatives to the world. If by "customs" you mean examples, and I see not how it can mean any thing else, then I must understand you to say, that you are under no obligation to imitate our Savior and His holy apostles; for they were all Jews, and by imitating their example you follow Jewish laws and customs. But, in contradiction of that statement, you immediately say, "I want Christ's laws, and no others." To this position I can respond most heartily. We perfectly agree. He has given us an example of perfect obedience to a perfect law, thereby endorsing it as his; and by imitating his example we cannot fail to do the will of God, both in spirit and letter. But in every particular in which we deviate from his example, we violate both the spirit and the letter. Now, I put it to you, if our Savior was not a seventh-day man, and His apostles likewise? If you can prove that they were not, then I pledge myself that I will no longer be. If you believe me to be in error, I see not how you can fulfill the law of love without laboring to show me my error. If I am deliberately violating any precept of God, my condition is a most fearful one; if ignorantly, I suffer loss; and in either case my influence all goes to people hell with souls. If you, knowing these things, remain indifferent, and make no effort to correct the error, will not the blood of those souls be required at your hands? If you grow firmer in your belief the more you investigate this subject, then it must be, (if you are a consistent Christian,) because you find more Scripture authority on that side than on the other. Why, then, not let me share in the light you have obtained, or at least present me as much as one good Bible reason for your practice? You are well aware, that I occupy a station of fearful responsibility; there is no telling the mischief one error may do. If you are candid, and desire to be enlightened, as you say, why be so sensitive at every suggestion that may lead to such a result? Though the suggestion may come from a humble quarter, that is no reason why it is unworthy of notice. God, in his wisdom, has always seen fit to select the weak things of the world as means to bring about his purposes, that his power be the more apparent.

You say that you think my time could be more profitably spent in prayer, and in cultivating the spirit of Christ, than in dwelling on such a subject. As to the first part of this suggestion, I think it well worthy of consideration, and hope to profit by it. But so far is this from militating against the latter part, that I regard it as directly the reverse. How can one who has the spirit of Christ look with indifference upon the profanation of his sacred institutions? In proportion as a man loves Christ he will love his laws, and be grieved to see them trampled under foot. His zeal to investigate and vindicate them, also, will be in a corresponding ratio. I would not give a penny for that man's religion who feels no concern whether or not God's laws are honored. I believe that every real Christian will be prompted to vindicate truth in proportion as it is disregarded, not excepting those particular truths which are the most profaned. There is no need of advocating truths which no one wishes to violate. You may call it "idolatry," or what you please, it is just that thing which distinguished our Savior, and by means of which he drew upon himself the hatred of the world. I am willing to share the same fate by endeavoring to imitate his example. "The servant is not above his master." I think the advocates of the first day would do well to cast the beam out of their own eyes before they charge the seventh-day people with "making a god of the Sabbath" or with "making it their hobby." I can testify from experience, that they have labored five times as hard to influence me against the seventh day and in favor of the first day, as the seventh-day people ever did on the other side. Nor have they shunned to resort even to bribery, in the absence of a "thus saith the Lord." The seventh-day people have been criminally negligent on this subject, and I rejoice to see them beginning to awake. It is time for them to look about themselves, since their opponents, even in the land of boasted religious freedom, are resorting to the civil power to wrench from them, by fines and imprisonments, the dearest rights God ever bequeathed to man.

Again, you say, that you are not prejudiced in regard to this question. That is more than ever I could say. Besides, I can hardly conceive how a person whose worldly interest, early education, and attachments, domestic and church relations, together with popular opinion, are all on one side, can avoid being prejudiced towards the other side. An observer of the first day once, in conversation with me on this very point, expressed himself by saying, "We can hardly see two cocks fight without being prejudiced in favor of one or the other; and how much greater is the danger in regard to questions which involve our religious interests." Were a person led to embrace a sentiment opposed to his former belief, which had been endeared to him, he would then see the strength of his former prejudices in a light which he never viewed them before. Were it not for prejudice, the differences which separate denominations would soon give way, and there would be but one fold. Thank the Lord, I think this time is fast approaching. Then the Sabbath will again be observed, for the prophets have thus declared. The power to change times and laws has only been given into the hands of the beast for a set time.

As to persons deserting the Sabbath, to which you so exultingly refer, I can say, that I should naturally expect those who love the world more than they love God to do so, for they have every worldly inducement. If there were no "thus saith the Lord" in the way, I should do so myself. But the fact that some leave the Sabbath of the fourth commandment is no more proof that it is not binding upon Christians, than Deacon Frisbey's turning to be a Methodist proves that immersion is not baptism.

In conclusion, allow me to propose two or three questions:—1st. Did the apostles write by the dictation of the Holy Spirit when they called the seventh day the Sabbath twenty and thirty years after Christ's resurrection? Did they thus speak truth or falsehood? 2d. Are you afraid to use Bible language in the same way and with the same application as the Holy Ghost has done? 3d. Can a theory be scriptural which will prompt men to pervert the language of Scripture, in order to maintain it? The Bible no where says that the first day is the Sabbath, or a worship day; but always says that the seventh day is the Sabbath, wherever the institution is referred to.

Now, dear brother, if you can impart any information on this, or any other subject, in a friendly, Christian manner, you may rest assured, it will be most gratefully received. If you wish no more suggestions from me, your request can be granted. What I have hitherto done in this matter, has been done from a sense of duty; and I do not regret it. I desire to be a learner while I live; and no knowledge can be more useful or acceptable than a knowledge of my duty.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS OF A TOURIST—No. 2.

LONDON, March 14, 1850.

On Tuesday, the 5th, I arrived in this city of wickedness and all sorts of crooked ways. On Friday, I saw Mr. Black, pastor of the Mill-Yard Church, who greeted me very cordially. I went home with him, took tea, and attended divine worship in the Mill-Yard Meeting-House. I was received with kindness by the whole family. Mr. Black is a pleasant man, learned, and exceedingly devoted to the interests of the Sabbath. He is an antiquary withal, and has a large library of old books, which he keeps carefully locked up in a small house adjoining the church. The church is a plain, old-fashioned building, and stands upon a narrow, secluded lane, in an uninviting suburb of the city. Mr. Black's office, as Assistant Keeper of the Public Records, is within a few minutes' walk of my lodgings, and I some times accompany him home, and spend an evening very pleasantly.

The weather here has been for the most part unpleasant since my arrival. For several days I scarcely saw the sun, and now it is out only about every third day; the rest of the time it is hid by a kind of nondescript fog, composed mainly, I suppose, of coal smoke, rendered damp perhaps by a little sea vapor, and cold by a north wind. They tell me this is the weather for weeks together at this season.

I live in a neighborhood of famous names. A little below me is St. Paul's, farther on is Bow Church, and a little farther still is the famous Ludgate Pump. On the other side, within a short distance, is Temple Bar, where the King does obeisance to the Lord Mayor on ceremonial days; and the Inns of Court, where the sergeants and counsellors-at-law have had their chambers from time immemorial. At the end of the Strand is Charing Cross, and farther still is Westminster Abbey.

In company with Mr. Black, I took a walk the other day on the old Roman Road and saw the London Stone from which the Romans measured all their distances throughout England, the church where John Milton is said to have been christened, the house in which Sir Isaac Newton lived, and a portion of the old Roman Wall of the city.

Last evening, I went to see the Public Supper of the boys of Christ's Hospital School, which occurs every Sunday evening during Lent. There were about one thousand of them at the table, and they all joined in the service preceding supper, singing a psalm, &c. They are dressed in uniform—a long blue frock coat, girded with a leather strap. Their fare was bread and butter and beer. The Lord Mayor was there, with others of the city dignitaries.

I have been very much amused, and some times disgusted, with the ways and manners of the people here. There is so much of form, so much old rotten timber in the structure of society, that to one unused to its various phases, it seems ridiculous. Standing on the steps of the Rolls House, a few days since, one of the counsellors came out in his gray wig and gown, looking very much like a girl with her hair done up in papers all over her head and powdered. I was so amused, that I probably offended him with my involuntary grin. Then I am disgusted with the facile servility shown by the lower orders—the long-practicedd exterity with which the beggar, the crossing-sweeper, or the cab-man touches his hat as he proposes to victimize you. The more destructive servility with which the whole nation hugs to its heart and idolizes a system which, like some beautiful monster, is tearing its vitals—the gorgeousness of the civil establishments—the sentry boxes, and the red-coated automata standing at the doors of the palaces and institutions—it is this pomp, this show and glitter, that makes the English nation endure the Promethean life they hold.

W. J. S.

M. GUIZOT ON RELIGIOUS EDUCATION IN FRANCE.

The annual meeting of the French Bible Society was held on Wednesday, the 13th of April, in the Church of the Redemption, Rue Cauchat. M. Guizot, Vice-President of the Society, delivered the following speech:

GENTLEMEN,—If you were a political or a commercial society, if your efforts were devoted to questions of social organization or of material interests, you would now only have to place in common your sorrows and your uneasiness; you would only hear mention made in the report, which is about to be submitted to you, of the suspension or of the ill success of your labors, of the sufferings of the present and of the perils of the future. Nothing of the kind will, however, be found here. Your labors have neither been suspended nor fruitless; the hurricane which has overthrown around you so much grandeur and paralyzed so much strength, has scarcely touched you. Your activity and your prosperity—for I may make use of that word to express the benefits which you have labored to scatter around—have remained nearly the same. You have pursued and accepted your accustomed work as though the heavens had been serene and the country tranquil. Whence do you derive this privilege? Is your work so trifling and so obscure, that the most violent and the most universal storms cannot affect it? or were you yourselves so skillful that you have known how to foresee and turn aside the blows under which so many experienced men have fallen? No; the permanent security and efficacy of your labors, in the midst of social convulsions, are due to higher and to purer causes; your work is in perfect harmony with the paramount interests and with the most pressing wants of our society and of our day. What are these interests—what are these wants? Listen to what is every where said: Every where are heard the words of faith, charity, and hope. It is faith, charity, and hope, which are wanting to society, and which it needs. Those are the wishes, the appeals, which arise from all parts. Every where the satisfaction of these wants is sought for. To obtain a little faith, charity, and hope, the most varied sources are had recourse to, but with little success. The aspirations towards faith are most frequently only the passionate anxieties of doubt, and doubt is again fallen into. Practical charity is general, active, and efficacious. Never was more assistance given, or more individual misfortunes relieved; and yet the relations which should be established between those who relieve and those who are relieved, only slightly exist. Practical charity ill attains its moral end; neither one nor the other is mutually confident and tranquil. Never did more hopes, or hopes more ardent, break out, but they are scarcely any thing else than the flights of the imagination in delirium, or the transports of material appetites. Our Society seeks every where, a solid faith, an efficacious charity, a hope which calms and fortifies. But it does not find them; and that because it seeks them where they are not to be found. Men demand from themselves their belief and their virtues; they have the pretension to derive them from themselves, and themselves alone. But that cannot be. Men cannot be, in the great questions of their destiny, the inventors, the authors of faith, charity, and of their hopes. These wants are not satisfied at purely human sources. We must derive them from superhuman sources. These are the sources which you open to men by distributing to them the holy books. Therefrom they may derive faith, charity, and hope. Faith, for therein God shows himself constantly present, and acting in the world and in man; therein the necessary starting point of faith. Archimedes demanded, but found not, a fulcrum on which to move the world. Man cannot, by himself alone, find a base on which to fix it. He must receive it from God. Charity, the love of God for men, is manifested in the Gospel, and that alone is a sufficient source of the love of men for men. Except therein, all charity is weak, and soon exhausted. Hope! there is none which pacifies and satisfies the heart of men, if it does not extend beyond and rise above this earth. Eternal hopes can alone purify and ennoble the terrestrial hopes. Confined to the earth, our hopes transform themselves into avidity and selfishness. Christianity alone, then, can pacify and satisfy the need of faith, charity, and hope, which so powerfully agitate man and society. If any one doubt this, let him look at what the adversaries of Christianity do—let him listen to what they say. At the same time that they attack it with fury, they pass themselves off for its heirs and successors, and pretend that they walk in the path it has opened. Falsehood and profanation! What is most anti-Christian is the spirit of revolt and the spirit of license. When Christianity appeared in the world, there was a fine opportunity of propagating the spirit of insurrection. Than at that epoch, when was there ever more despotism, moral degradation of the upper classes, and oppression of man by man? And yet you will not find a single trace of insurrection in the history of the foundation of Christianity, nor the spirit of insurrection in its words. This immense revolution was accomplished by moral action alone—by the moral and interior reformation of men. That is, because Christianity is essentially submissive—submissive to God, submissive to established order. It has the spirit of liberty, and even of conscientious resistance; but no spirit of rebellion. It is also essentially severe; license is as hateful to it as revolt. It is madness to attempt to extend liberty and democracy by means of the relaxation of religious belief and of morals. Sincere belief and severe morals are indispensable to democracy and democratic liberty. The relaxation of opinions and of morals in a democratic society leads inevitably—first to anarchy, then to despotism. See how the United States were founded. Do you think it was by the relaxation of morals? No; the founders of the American Republic were rigid for themselves and for others, and it was the spirit of rigidity which formed their strength, and preserved them from the disorders and errors inherent in democracy. Be assured that, with the spirit of revolt, nothing will ever be founded; as Christianity has the secret of faith, charity, and hope, it is it, also, which has the true secrets of order and social regeneration in democratic societies more than in any other. Let the spirit of revolt and license not flatter itself, then, in being able to usurp the Christian work—there is absolute incompatibility between them. At the same time that Christianity can alone satisfy the want of faith, charity, and hope, in our democratic society, it alone can give it the spirit of order, resignation, and severe morality, without which it cannot subsist—at least with a regime of liberty. Have, then, full confidence in your undertaking—it is essentially good, it responds to the greatest and most pressing interests and instincts of our time. Pursue it with ardor. Make Christians—it is Christians that our Society requires. I say Christians—that is our name, that is what we ought to propagate. The Bible Society has scrupulously confined itself to its task; it is to Protestants alone that it has distributed holy books; but its sentiments, its wishes, and its hopes, are not confined to the narrow circle to which its action is limited; it ardently desires to make Christians every where; it calls by that name all who take the sacred writings as the basis of their faith, of their hope, and of their charity. Whether they be in the bosom of the Catholic Church, or in the different branches of the Protestant Church, it sees in them Christians and brethren. Union in the party of political order is recommended, and rightly so; that union is, in fact, the only means of safety, but it is not less necessary to the party of moral order. The question is now between Christianity and impiety, which affects to advocate the interests of humanity. All Christian forces should unite against the common enemy—they can do it. A new fact has introduced itself—liberty of conscience in the Christian Church; let that liberty be accepted and respected by all Christians—it will secure their union and the triumph of the common faith. But beware of a factitious and forced union; be Christians to the fullest extent of the word. Love one another, that is charity; support one another, that is tolerance; respect one another, that is the right of liberty; assist one another, that is your well understood interest. On these conditions, and on these alone, there is safety for society. We are in the path of that safety. Christians, be all together under the standard of the Cross—Hoc signo vinces.

CHRIST BY THE WELL OF SYCHAR.

BY REV. G. W. BETHUNE, D. D.

"My meat is to do the will of him that sent me."

Upon the well by Sychar's gate,
At burning noon the Savior sat,
Athirst and hungry from the way
His feet had trod since early day.
The twelve had gone in search of food,
And left him in his solitude.

They come—and spread before him there
With faithful haste the pilgrim fare,
And gently bid him, "Master, eat!"
But God hath sent him better meat,
And there is on his holy brow
No weariness nor faintness now.

For while they sought the market place,
His words had won a soul to grace,
And when he set that sinner free
From bonds of guilt and infamy,
His heart grew strong with joy divine,
More than the strength of bread and wine.

So, Christian, when thy strength grows faint,
Amid the toils that throng the saint,
Ask God that thou may'st peace impart
Unto some other human heart;
And thou thy Master's joy shall share,
E'en while his cross thy shoulders bear.

MADAME ROLAND'S TRIAL AND EXECUTION.

The following account of the trial and execution of Madame Roland is from the New York Evangelist, and written by Rev. John S. C. Abbott:—

The hour for her trial arrived. She was prepared to meet it. Conscious that any attempt at defense would be entirely unavailing, she submitted without resistance or expostulation to her fate. She was led before her inexorable judges, and accused of being the wife of M. Roland and the friend of his friends. She smiled proudly, as she admitted the truth of both of these charges. The serenity of her eye was untroubled, and the composure of her disciplined spirit unmoved, save by the exaltation of enthusiasm, as she noted the progress of the trial which was bearing her rapidly and resistlessly to the scaffold. She heard the sentence condemning her to immediate death, with apparently as joyous a spirit as if it were her passport to a glorious immortality. With a light and elastic step she rose to leave the court-room, and slightly bowing to her judges, said, with a bitter and ironical smile, "I thank you for considering me worthy to share the fate of the good and great men you have already murdered." With the agility of a child, light-hearted and happy, she tripped down the stone steps which led to her dungeon in the Conciergerie. As she passed along the corridor, her fellow-prisoners, haggard with confinement and despair, came from their cells to meet her. She smiled upon them, and drawing her right hand across her throat, gave them the insignificant sign that her deliverance was at hand. Her friends, who had no tears to shed for their own fate, wept bitterly, over hers.

The morning of the 9th of November, 1793, dawned gloomily over Paris. It was the darkest hour of that night of terror, which enveloped the metropolis so long in its gloomy shades. The carts of the condemned, that morning, were burdened with an unusual number of victims, as they rolled heavily along to the scaffold. Madame Roland was placed in the last cart, by the side of a weak and infirm old man, whose trembling nerves entirely failed him in this severe hour of trial. She was dressed in a white robe, which she wore, she said, as an emblem of her innocence. Her black and glossy hair fell in rich profusion to her waist. A keen November blast swept the streets, under the influence of which, and the excitement of the scene, her animated countenance glowed with all the ruddy bloom of youth. She stood firmly in the cart, looking with a serene eye upon the crowds which lined the streets, and ever addressing words of encouragement and support to the feeble old man at her side. She bent over the weeping sufferer, with filial tenderness, and by her pleasantry succeeded even in winning a smile from his pale and trembling lips. The execrations of the mob, who believed that she was a traitor to the Republic, filled the air, and they shouted franticly, "To the guillotine! to the guillotine!" "I am going," she replied, "to the guillotine; a few moments and I shall be there. They who send me thither, will ere long follow me. I go innocent. They will come stained with blood. You who now applaud our execution, will then, with equal zeal, applaud theirs."

They arrived at the guillotine. The axe fell rapidly upon her associates, and head after head dropped into the basket. The executioner approached the cart where Madame Roland and her fainting companion stood. With an animated countenance, and a cheerful smile, she was all engrossed in endeavoring to infuse fortitude into his soul. The executioner grasped her by the arm. "Stay," said she, slightly resisting his grasp, "I have only one favor to ask, and that is not for myself. I beseech you grant it me." Then turning to the old man, she said, "Do you precede me to the scaffold. To see my blood flow would make you suffer the bitterness of death twice over. I must spare you the pain of witnessing my punishment." The executioner gave a surly refusal, stating that his orders were to take her first. "Surely," she replied, with one of her most winning smiles, and with that grace which was almost resistless, "you cannot refuse the last request of a woman." The hard-hearted executor of the law yielded, and the poor old man, more dead than alive, was placed beneath the fatal axe.

Madame Roland, without the slightest change of color, or the tremor of a nerve, looked on; and then, unaided, with a firm and elastic step, almost of joyousness, ascended the scaffold. By the side of the guillotine there stood a colossal statue of liberty. Bowing before this statue, she exclaimed, "O Liberty! Liberty! how many crimes are committed in thy name!" She then surrendered herself to the executioner. Her slender and fairy form was bound to the plank. The plank fell. The glittering steel glided through the groove, and the head of Madame Roland was severed from her body.

REVIVAL IN AMHERST COLLEGE.

Speaking of Amherst College, a correspondent of the Puritan Recorder says that the displays of divine grace during the term just closing have been far greater than in the years 1848–9; and this may justly be regarded as the ninth marked and powerful revival of religion since 1823, when the first occurred under the presidency of Mr. Moore.

At the beginning of the term there were a few who felt an unusual spirit of prayer, and very strong desires to see a work of the Lord. And they labored and prayed, for weeks without much encouragement, though some were awakened, and one or two hopefully converted. But next came the heavy judgments of God. The Fast Day for Literary Institutions, in February, is always a solemn day; but this year it was more solemn than ever before. A beloved instructor, (Prof. Peabody,) who had just joined us, and given rich promise of great usefulness, was providentially cut down, and lay dead in our midst on that day. An unusual number of the members of the College, also, about that time, received accounts of the death or the conversion of friends at home. In two instances, those who died were recently members of the College, and were among the few who were hopefully converted during the special attention of the last two years.

The death of a venerable Trustee and benefactor of the Institution, (Gov. Armstrong,) was among the announcements that came upon us with a startling effect. Indeed, we do not recollect ever before forming a part of a community on which there were concentrated and reiterated such powful appeals to repentance. And in looking round, it seemed for a time as if they were all likely to fail of a converting effect, and as if no revival would follow. Then it was, however, when we had been taught the powerlessness even of such means to convert the soul, that we were made to see how easily, by a mere breath of divine efficiency, it might be done. The work silently, though not very rapidly, advanced, till there were very few who did not acknowledge its influence, though many resisted it.

Of the present members of College, amounting to one hundred and seventy-nine, one hundred and six are professors of religion. Of the others, as many as thirty indulge hopes of having been converted during this revival; besides a few converted with the families who worship in the College chapel. Absolutely, this number is not very large; but relatively, it is, we believe, fully equal to any revival we have ever enjoyed. How many of them will endure to the end, God only knows; and on His help hang our hopes of the perseverance of any.

HEARING APPARATUS.

As faith comes by hearing, says the Puritan Recorder, and as there are in most congregations more or less individuals afflicted with partial deafness, an invention now in use in England is worth extending:—

"The construction is so simple, that any tolerably expert country workman can fit it up. A funnel-shaped sheet of gutta percha must be inserted in the book-board in front of the Bible. This acts as a receiver-general; from it the voice passes down a piece of inch tubing fixed inside the pulpit, and thence through smaller tubes attached as lesser gas-pipes are to the main, each terminating in an ear-piece. These may be directed to any seat, and as gutta percha is a most admirable conductor of sound, the voice is distinctly audible at the far end, without any extra effort of the speaker to make himself heard. In New Bond-street Chapel, London, and at several other places, the 'apparatus' has been most successfully tested, and persons who have not been able to hear a sermon for years, can now listen with comfort and advantage to the celestial message. Let Christian sympathy develope its heavenly origin in combined and liberal contributions for the benefit of those who cannot hear. Let it become 'ears to the deaf,' by raising a fund to introduce into every pulpit this new channel of vocal communication; and who can tell how many hearts may be touched by the Spirit of Life through 'the Word of God,' thus transmitted to their ears."

CHANGES AT CAIRO.

I found myself in a marble bath, in an elegant room, boiling out the dust of the desert, and, at the same time, ruminating on the wnderful changes so quickly brought about at "El Musr," tne city of victory, the stronghold of Islam, where, a few years ago, the Giaour dare not appear in the streets mounted on anything more pretentious than a slow-going donkey. Now we come in with four horses at full gallop, making more clatter than a caliph of old, scattering the true believers to the right and left, unmindful of their muttered curse, and careless even if we damaged their faithful toes. Not long ago, for a Christian to be kicked or cuffed, or spit upon, might be considered rather a polite attention from the favored of Allah, which the unhappy dog was obliged to acknowledge by a pleasant and gratified look. Now, one sees the unbelieving "Kelb" mounted on an Arab horse, the holy turban on his brow, the "antaghan" at his side, and, horror of horrors! an unveiled she-dog, his wife, riding at his side! And for these heathenish hounds, whelps of Sheitan, the holy Mufti, the learned Moolah, the expounders of the sacred word of Allah and of the Prophet's law, must give way or be rode over, even though every bristle in their venerable beards curl in scorn and hate.

[Power's Journal.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, June 13, 1850.

"WESTERN STEAMBOATS AND SABBATH-BREAKING."

One of our exchanges copies from the New York Observer—(a paper too orthodox to exchange with us)—a letter of the Rev. Dr. Humphrey, in which no very flattering picture is given of the respect paid in the Western States to what is falsely called the Sabbath.

"I cannot learn, after the most diligent inquiry, that there is a single Sabbath-keeping boat for long travel on the Mississippi or any of its tributaries. They do not load and unload freight here [Louisville] as on other days, nor, I believe, at Cincinnati or Pittsburg. How it is in St. Louis and New Orleans, I am not informed. But the boats come and depart, and continue their regular trips, without any regard to holy time; and to do this, they must take in and discharge freight at all the principal landings between the larger cities and ports; and though they have a good many wharf-boats, as they are called, where freight is deposited when the steamers come alongside, and the work is done with less bustle and noise than if it had to be brought from the shore—at hundreds of places along the rivers it must seriously interrupt the quiet of God's holy day, by collecting multitudes for curiosity and amusement, who might otherwise be in church or at home, 'resting according to the commandment.' It may safely be estimated, that there are as many passengers as officers and crews, on the seven hundred boats, traveling in violation of the Sabbath, and at least twice as many more along the vast extent of this inland navigation, are lured down to the landings by the whistle and the letting off of steam. I am afraid it will appear, at the judgment of the great day, that in one way and another, more than one hundred and twenty thousand people are induced to break the Sabbath by the arrival, departure, and running of steamboats, in the valley of the Mississippi alone."

The writer continues to comment in the following strain:—

"Just look at it. What do you say, in the first place, of entirely cutting off twenty-eight thousand persons, attached to these boats, from all religious privileges, and keeping the greater part of them at work in defiance of the fourth commandment? What do you say, in the second place, of inviting or receiving thirty thousand passengers on board, to fall under the same condemnation of breaking the Sabbath? What do you say, in the third place, of encouraging freighters throughout these twelve or fifteen thousand miles of inland trade, and enticing young men and others by tens of thousands to trample on the Sabbath, for profit or amusement? Is it right—is it safe? Let every Christian reader answer. It is distressing to think of it. All these thousands upon thousands have immortal souls, each of which outweighs in value all the wealth of a hundred Mississippi valleys; and, instead of preparing, in the use of the means which God has appointed, to launch upon that vast ocean

'They must sail so soon,' are provoking him to plunge them hopelessly beneath its waves.

"And where is the necessity of making such an infinite sacrifice? Can't the steamboats afford to lie by on the Sabbath? What do the owners gain by appropriating to themselves the day in which God has said, 'Thou shalt do no work?' If they lose ten per cent. annually, upon an average, is it not time to pause, and inquire whether a part of this loss is not owing to their habitual desecration of the Sabbath—in other words, whether, instead of making money, they do not lose by it? Is it not quite time to try the experiment of obeying the fourth commandment, and to see if God will not prosper them more than he now does, in the violation of it?"

We do not know what the Observer has said, but we say, "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone." We say this in no spirit of sympathy with those who so boldly trample upon what Dr. H. claims to be "the holy of the Lord." On the contrary, we have little doubt that the most of them are those who "have no fear of God before their eyes;" and the same spirit which makes them disregard the first day of the week, would lead them to profane the true rest, were its claims set before them. But with the love of the Sabbath planted deep in our hearts, we must say, that such men as President Humphrey, Dr. Edwards, and others of like faith, are doing more to perpetuate the sin of Sabbath-breaking than all the sinners who navigate our rivers or manage our railroads. Whether they mean to do so, it is no part of our business to inquire. "Charity thinketh no evil," the Good Book says; and we shall endeavor to think as well of Dr. H. as may be consistent with a faithful exposure of his errors. Nevertheless, it does seem strange to us, that men of such clearness of intellect on all other subjects, should manifest such infatuation in regard to a subject so plainly set forth in Scripture as the law of the Sabbath is. It is as plain as language can make it, that "the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord." It is of this day, and no other, that God has said, "In it thou shalt not do any work." Yet, in spite of language so unequivocal, Dr. H. persists in holding up the first day as "the day in which God has said, 'Thou shalt do no work.'" Were it not for a little book lying before us, entitled "Essays upon the origin, perpetuity, change, and proper observance of the Sabbath," we should suppose that Dr. H. had fallen into a mistake as to the real import of the fourth commandment. We should suppose, that he considered the commandment to enjoin simply the observance of one day in seven, or the seventh after six of labor. But the little book alluded to shows that "wherever the weekly Sabbath is mentioned in the Old Testament, the seventh day of the week is intended." It also shows, from the very language of the institution, that "the seventh day was set apart, rather than the sixth, the first, or any other, because that God himself rested on that day, or ceased from the work of creation." It is thus clear enough, that Dr. H. well understands what is the thing enjoined in the fourth commandment. He understands that it is the observance of the "seventh day," or, as the Hebrew original gives it, day the seventh. On what possible ground, then, can he charge those who work on Sunday with breaking the Sabbath? Is the reader curious to know how he convicts the Sunday laborer of Sabbath-breaking? Let him turn to the very next page, but one, of the little work from which we have quoted, and he will find the following:—

"The seventh day is the Sabbath. It was so at that time, and for many ages after. But it is not said, that it always shall be."

We affix no marks of exclamation to this sentence, though strongly tempted to do so. For indeed it is most marvelous, how men ordinarily in their senses can descend to such quibbling. "The word of the Lord endureth forever." If He once said, "The seventh day is the Sabbath," he says so still. But hear the Rev. Doctor a little farther:—

"The fourth commandment is so expressed as to admit of a change in the day, without at all affecting the sacred institution itself; and this phraseology, we doubt not, was adopted by the divine Law-Giver, with special reference to such a change." "According to the first clause of the commandment, it is the Sabbath day which we are to remember; and so at the close, it was the Sabbath which was hallowed and blessed, and not the seventh day. The Sabbath, then, the holy rest itself, is one thing; the day on which we are to rest, is quite another."

Upon this quibble—(for it is but a quibble)—we remark, that if "the holy rest is one thing, and the day on which we are required to rest quite another," then, in order that such a distinction may have any weight in the argument, it must be supposed that God blessed the rest abstractly, and not the day. And this, indeed, is what Dr. H. declares. Says he, "It was the Sabbath which was hallowed and blessed, and not the seventh day." But is this according to fact? What says Moses? He says expressly, (Gen. 2: 3,) that "God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it." Let the reader carefully observe, then, that it was the day upon which God put His blessing; not the rest abstractly. Besides, even the phraseology of the fourth commandment, which Dr. H. endeavors to gloss over to suit his purpose, is pointedly against him; for, instead of its being, "The Lord blessed the Sabbath, and hallowed it," it is, "The Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it." Or—substituting for the term Sabbath its true meaning—"The Lord blessed the rest day, and hallowed it." And in the first clause of the commandment, it is not, "Remember the rest, to keep it holy," but, "Remember the rest day, to keep it holy." How came Doctor H. to leave out that little word day, in stating his argument? Alas! how far a zeal to uphold a popular creed will blind the mind! And how weak, how exceedingly weak, even strong men sometimes make themselves!

Verily, Doctor H., it is not the man who performs labor on the first day of the week, or who travels on that day, that is guilty of Sabbath-breaking; but it is the one who works on the seventh day—the one who travels on the last day of the week—who sets at nought "the holy of the Lord." And you yourself, we fear, are guilty of this very sin. In the spirit of love, we beg you to review this subject again. Remember how the Pharisees were denounced for making void the fifth commandment by their tradition. Is it any the less a sin to do so with the fourth?

THE CENTRAL ASSOCIATION.

The Seventh-day Baptist Central Association held its anniversary at Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., on the fourth, fifth, and sixth days of last week. The delegation from the churches was not as large as on some previous occasions, yet it was sufficiently large to make an interesting session. Among the ministers of the Association present, we remember Wm. B. Maxson from Brookfield, James R. Irish from DeRuyter, Russell G. Burdick from Lincklaen, Varnum Hull from Scott, Christopher Chester from Verona, and Alexander Campbell, Wm. Green, and Joel Green, of Jefferson County. Thomas E. Babcock was present as a delegate from the Western Association, and Geo. B. Utter from the Eastern Association.

James R. Irish preached the Introductory Discourse, from Phil. 2: 5—"Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus."

At the conclusion of the discourse, the Association was organized with the following officers, viz: JAMES R. IRISH, of DeRuyter, Moderator; CHARLES POTTER, of Adams, and ETHAN STILLMAN, of Brookfield, Secretaries.

Communications were received and read from nearly all of the churches belonging to the Association; also one from the church in Pinckney, Jefferson County, requesting to be admitted into the Association—a request which was granted. The statistics given by the letters show that the past year has been one of comparative barrenness in the churches. But few additions by profession were reported, while there have been, we should think, an unusually large number of dismissions by letter and removals by death. This state of things ought to awaken anxiety and lead to solemn inquiry on the part of all who desire the welfare of the churches and the salvation of sinners. Some, we know, do feel anxious on the subject, and are inquiring the cause of the acknowledged evil with an earnest desire for its removal. May their number be increased. It was gratifying to learn, from conversation with the delegates, that there are in several places indications which encourage the hope that a better time is at hand. To the De Ruyter Church a few additions have recently been made upon profession, and others are expected. In a settlement connected with the Adams Church, also, it is said that there is an increase of religious interest, and a number have lately put on Christ.

The Missionary Operations within the bounds of the Association have not been carried on during the past year with that vigor which the interests of the cause have demanded and the appointments at the last meeting promised. Some labor has been performed, however, in Chenango, Lewis, Oswego, and Jefferson counties, with as much encouragement as could reasonably have been expected. For the coming year, it was resolved to employ Eld. Elias Burdick half of the time in missionary labor. It was also agreed to hold a semi-annual meeting of the Association, for missionary purposes, at Lincklaen, Chenango County, N. Y., on the third day of the week before the second Sabbath in January, 1851, at which Eld. Varnum Hull is appointed to preach the opening discourse; Eld. Samuel B. Crandall, alternate.

Several questions of general interest to the churches and the denomination were introduced and discussed by the Association.

The subject of Foreign Missions was not brought before the Association in a form to elicit much remark; but it was presented in the discourse preached on Sabbath morning previous to taking a collection for the benefit of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society.

Our Publication Interests came before the Association in connection with a report from the Committee on Publications, which recommended an effort to increase the circulation of the Sabbath Recorder, and the other publications which the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society proposes issuing, and also urged upon the attention and sympathy of the churches the efforts of the American Sabbath Tract Society. Several brethren spoke upon the subject; and we think the impression was deep and general, that the Press is one of the most powerful, as well as economical, agencies for diffusing light in relation to our denominatonal views, and that it ought to be used to a much larger extent than it has ever yet been.

The subject of Education occupied quite a prominent place in the deliberations of the Association. It was presented in a report and resolutions prepared by the Committee on Education, and discussed at considerable length by several of the brethren. We give below the report of the Committee, and will give next week the Address of the Trustees of DeRuyster Institute, to which the report alludes—remarking only, that the discussion took a wide range, and included an enforcement of the duties of parents in the education of their children, as well as of the churches in the education of their members, and of the denomination in relation to providing an institution for the more thorough discipline of its membership and ministry.

The Association appointed Jas. R. Irish as delegate to the Western Association at its approaching session, and Alexander Campbell delegate to the Eastern Association in May next. Eli S. Bailey was appointed Corresponding Secretary for the ensuing year, and Ephraim Maxson, Treasurer.

The next meeting of the Association is to be held at De Ruyter, Madison Co., N. Y., on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in May, 1851; Wm. B. Maxson to preach the introductory discourse, and Russell G. Burdick alternate.

THE REPORT ON EDUCATION.

The Committee on Education respectfully report: That they are impressed with the importance of the subject committed to their consideration, and have endeavored to bestow upon it all the thought which the occasion would allow. They are of the opinion, that the education of the rising generation is among the most important enterprises within the range of human responsibility, and regard it as a settled principle, that facilities should be within the reach of every young person for a thorough and enlightened education, which shall develop their powers, and fit them to enjoy and bless the world.

With this view, they look with interest to a judicious application of the principle of free schools, in the broadest sense of the term, and hope that the action of our State in relation to its present law, will not be such as to defeat its object, whatever may be the means used to strip it of its manifest defects. In this department, the members of the Association have an interest in common with all other citizens.

While it is the duty of citizens, as such, to labor for the universal diffusion of education, it becomes us, as Christians and as Seventh-day Baptists, to see that all the youth of our own societies are abundantly supplied with the best facilities for pursuing science without embarrassment. There are now within the bounds of the Association, Academies in operation, owned wholly or in part by the denomination, to which our youth may resort for instruction, the interests of which should be carefully fostered by all well-wishers to our cause, and means should be furnished to make them still more efficient in perfecting their work. The youth of our societies should be urged, by all laudable motives, to aim at high attainments in science, and aided with funds to facilitate their efforts in all cases where they are needed. We should all feel that we have a common interest in this matter, and promptly make sacrifices worthy of the object.

Your Committee hail with unfeigned satisfaction the fact, that the subject of endowing and erecting a College has been brought before the Denomination, and though we are not satisfied that the time has come to make appropriations for this work, yet we hope that the enterprise will be cherished, and as soon as the plan is matured, and we ascertain that we are able to endow a College of the highest order, purely denominational, we trust that you will not be slow to join with the sister Associations in consummating at once an object so desirable.

Your Committee are also of the opinion, that a correspondence should be opened with the sister Associations, in view of establishing, as soon as practicable, at some convenient place, a Theological Class, where our candidates for the ministry may be fitted for their sacred work.

In conclusion, we would submit for your consideration the following resolutions:—

1st. Resolved, That the youth of the denomination are, in an important sense, the property of the denomination.

2d. Resolved, That the interests of the denomination, and duty to the cause of God, demand, that all our youth be thoroughly educated.

3d. Resolved, That if our youth should be educated, it is our duty, as stewards of God's bounty, to carry forward this enterprise.

4th. Resolved, That we cordially approve of the plan proposed by the Trustees of De Ruyter Institute, in their Address to the Eastern Association, and recommend that the churches take suitable means to supply necessary funds.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE—No. 2.

GLASGOW, May 17th, 1850.

Having adverted to the efforts made in getting up petitions urging Parliament to interfere for the shutting of the Post Offices on Sunday, I would add, that while this has been chiefly the work of the Free Church, it has not been confined to them. The proceedings in the Presbyteries and Synods of the Established Church of Scotland have also exhibited considerable zeal in the maintenance of this human institution, which supplants that which is divine. So, also, in the United Presbyterian Synod, (with nearly 500 clerical members,) on the 14th instant, it was stated, by the Convener of a Committee appointed to promote such measures, that they had sent a circular letter "to every minister and elder in connection with the church in reference to this matter. The result was," he added, "that the circular had occasioned a very considerable agitation against the measure." And in consequence of Lord Ashley's intimation of an intended motion on the subject, in the House of Commons, this Committee "have issued another circular, which was also circulated through the length and breadth of the church." It is to these efforts we are to ascribe the number of petitions presented, rather than to an extending conviction of the duty of Sunday sanctification, on the part of the people themselves. In the House of Commons, Sir G. Grey has obtained leave to bring in a Bill to repeal an exception in an old Act as to Sunday Fairs. The Bill, he said, "was rendered necessary in consequence of the disorders that occurred in the north of England, during the hiring, in harvest-time, on Sunday;" implying, as it does, that on the part both of those hiring and of those hired, there is little felt of any divine prohibition. This week, at two of our Police Offices, a number of persons, small dealers, have had trifling fines inflicted for keeping open shop in the suburbs of Glasgow on Sunday last.

It is stated, that Dr. Townsend, Canon of Durham, has had an interview, at Rome, with the Pope, with the view of making the poor man a half convert to Christianity, in order thereby to fit him for converting Protestants into half Papists. Among other changes, the Doctor urged the abolition of the celibacy of the clergy; and, it is said, the Pope not only admitted the propriety of such a change, but even intimated that he had at first actually contemplated making it, but that the circumstances and the persons who now influence him, prevent his attempting it. Yet this is the infallible Church!

The electric telegraph announces that last night, in Committee, the House of Commons sanctioned Mr. Stuart Wortley's Bill for legalizing a man's marriage with a deceased wife's sister—a measure which has been keenly opposed by several of the religious denominations in this country, especially in Scotland. A motion that the Bill be committed that day six months, (which is Parliamentary phrase for wholly rejecting it,) was negatived by a majority of two only. It was then proposed, that the provisions of the Bill should not be retrospective. This amendment was rejected by a majority of 44. It was finally proposed, that the operation of the Bill should not extend to Scotland. This also was rejected by a majority of 7. The Committee sit for its farther consideration on the 16th of June. The success of the promoters, thus far, will occasion great dissatisfaction among the churches whose creed denounces such marriages as incestuous, even although it were perfectly evident that they are not repugnant to the Word of God. Not having given the subject the full attention which would warrant the expression of a decided opinion, I may yet say, that the principal arguments which have been adduced against such marriages seem entirely nugatory. They are wholly inferential—and the inference seems opposed to fair deduction. It is laid down, not only that a man and his wife are one, and that her sister is to the man in the same relation as his own sister, but it is assumed, that the relationship to the wife's sister continues precisely the same even after the wife's death. Marriage, then, with a sister, is incest, and condemned both by the law of God and man. But is there not a fallacy here? As a wife is bound to her husband so long as he liveth, so also is a husband bound to his wife so long as she liveth. But if a husband be dead, or a wife be dead, the survivor is loosed from the obligation of the law. Now, as the relationship of the wife's sister was only through the wife, is not the sister freed when the husband himself is freed? The death of the wife has not only dissolved the tie of marriage, which prohibited the husband from marrying another, but surely it has also dissolved the relationship which subsisted only through the wife deceased. These survivors are no longer brother and sister. Incest is surely not to be regarded as a sin if committed by Gentiles only. In the Scriptures it is the law of Moses which specially prohibits incest in the first instance. Yet that very law, while it expressly forbids a man's marrying his wife's sister during the wife's "lifetime," not only permitted a man's marrying his deceased brother's widow (equally incest if done in his lifetime) if he have died childless, but makes it imperative, under the penalty of a stigma in Israel. A reason is indeed annexed, having reference to the deceased's name and heritage; but is it to be supposed, that God would ordain the commission of incest for the purpose of securing individual temporal advantages? Surely not. Yet the arguments usually advanced in h recent discussions of the question seem necessarily to imply this.

Captain Haines, of the British Naval Department at Aden, at the Straits of Babel Mandel, has just transmitted to the Secretary of Lloyd's, in London, a letter from Dr. Vaughan, who has charge of the Naval Hospital at Aden, stating that two more ships under temperance rules have entered the port with their crews severely suffering from scurvy. During the past twelve months, he has had occasion to treat more cases amongst the crews of English ships visiting that port, than during any of the five preceding years during which he has had the conducting of the station. "Several ships have almost been disabled by it, from both officers and men suffering. The worst cases seem invariably to be in such vessels as do not allow a ration of spirits." He therefore earnestly counsels that a daily allowance of spirits be made.

Mr. Walker, Superintendent of Telegraphs to the South-Eastern Railway Co., has lately published an account of the management of the Electric Telegraph on that line, 180 miles in length. As a specimen of their ordinary working, he gives the length of eleven messages in one week, and the time taken in their transmission. Of these, the longest consisted of 447 words, written off at the rate of $17\frac{1}{2}$ words per minute. Of the eleven, the most expeditiously delivered was one of 101 words, at the rate of $20\frac{1}{5}$ words per minute. The slowest consisted of 166 words, at the rate of $8\frac{1}{4}$ words per minute. Their charges are based upon a rate of one penny a mile for 20 words; five shillings being the minimum charge.

The Sabbath Recorder for the 2d instant contains a paragraph relative to the amount expended on the British Museum and Library. It is an extract from a Report recently presented to Parliament by Commissioners appointed to inquire into the constitution and government of the Museum, in all its departments. The Report has long been anxiously looked for by literary men—chiefly on account of the interest attached to the Library. At present its efficiency is greatly impaired by the want of a proper Catalogue of the Books; and much dissatisfaction has been expressed by those most interested, as to the manner in which this lack is to be supplied; and the Commission was demanded with special reference to this. The Library, which in 1819 had 110,000 vols., now contains 450,000; and would extend, if placed in a row as on a shelf, 12 miles. 200,000 vols. have been added during the last 10 years; and from 10 to 15,000 a year is the rate of present additions. The latest printed Catalogue bears the date of 1819, and the collection was then embraced in 7 vols. 8vo; all additions made to the Catalogue since that period are in manuscript, which being conjoined with the printed portion, has swelled it out into 67 folio volumes. There are special Catalogues in addition; and there seems, besides, to be large arrears of uncatalogued works, some at least of which were published six or seven years ago. One of the great questions to be solved is, as to what sort of Catalogue is fitted to be most serviceable. Mr. Panizzi, keeper of the Printed Books, and a few others, regard a MS. Catalogue as best—and contend that it should contain the full title of every book, and that there should be numerous cross references, by which it may be found. Mr. P. has been engaged 10 years compiling such a Catalogue; and although it was at first stipulated that it should be finished in the year 1844, in type, he has yet only reached in the alphabetical arrangement to "Gairdiner," and cannot have the whole completed for a number of years. It will probably extend to upwards of 500 MS. vols.; and as very heavy arrears will necessarily have accumulated before that time, a supplement would require to be added.

Even when completed, such a Catalogue would of course be confined to the Library exclusively, and would be cumbrous to use, even there. This, therefore, does not meet the necessities of the case. However valuable such a Catalogue might be, and this is not disputed, it is contended that not only should there be one more compendius for the use of students, and that immediately, having only abbreviated titles, containing the author's name, subject, size and date; but it is also required, that it be printed, and sold at such a price as would bring it within the means of provincial public libraries and institutions, and even of private individuals. 30 or 40, or at most 45 or 50, 8vo. vols. of 600 pages each, it may be affirmed, would contain the present collection, while annual supplements could be thereafter added of all new purchases—to be periodically engrossed in a new General Catalogue. A copy kept in each of even the large towns of the kingdom, would be regarded as a great privilege to studious persons, as enabling them easily to ascertain what treasures are contained in this great national collection. The Athenæum proposes that besides the Catalogue of the books actually in the library, there should be prepared a list containing the titles (so far as they can possibly be found) of all others ever published in the English language, to be supplied to the library as opportunity offers. This, the writer says, "would be the contribution of the British nation to a Universal Catalogue," and other nations should be invited to co-operate in completing it, each contributing their respective portions. Mr. Cooley proposes, as the best and most expeditious means of forming the Catalogue, that the titles should be set up by the compositor from the books, in the Library Room; that they should then be stereotyped in slips. These could afterwards be cut and assorted for printing both a finding Catalogue, and classed Catalogues. The plan is approved by the Athenæum.

ENGLISH CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The fifty-first annual meeting of this society was held at Exeter Hall on Tuesday, the 30th of April. The Earl of Chichester, presided.

The gross income of the year, including legacies, &c., amounts to £104,273 6s. 10d., the expenditure to £83,710 9s. 2d. The legacies (£7,624 18s. 3d.) being carried to the capital fund, the available income of the society to meet this expenditure has been £84,529 3s. 11d.; leaving a surplus income over expenditure of £818 14s. 9d.

During the year two missionaries of the society have been removed by death—Mr. Haastrup, in West Africa, after ten years service, and Mr. Kraup of North India, after eleven years. Thirteen additional clergymen have been sent out; three more have been ordained in the missions. The number of clergymen engaged in the mission is, English clergymen 87; natives of the continent in English orders, 42; do in Lutheran orders, 5; native clergymen, 13; total, 147. European laymen catechists, secretaries, printers, &c. 27; attendants on Christian worship in the society's missions throughout the world, estimated at 107,000; communicants, 13,551; children under Christian education, estimated at 40,000.

The sum announced as having been received last year on account of the jubilee fund was £53,127. During the present year there had been an addition of £3,694, making a total of £56,822 2s. 7d. The second out of four objects for which the jubilee fund was available was a home for missionaries' children. Temporary provision has been made for the reception of fifty children in an eligible part of Islington.

THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

The Southern Convention assembled at Nashville on the 3d of June. On the 11th, being the eighth day of the session, an Address to the People of the South was introduced, which had not been acted upon at the last dates. It has been agreed to hold another Convention at Nashville, commencing on the sixth Monday after the adjournment of Congress. The following abstract of a series of resolutions unanimously adopted, will give an idea of the spirit of the Convention:—

The first resolution asserts that the territories belong to the people of the several States, and that all have an equal right to migrate thither with their property.

The second, that Congress has no right to exclude from the territories property lawfully belonging to the States of the Union—that it is unconstitutional.

The third, that it is the duty of Congress to provide for the territories civil, instead of military governments, and that all laws of foreign powers to whom the territories once belonged, against the rights of persons or property, as secured or recognized in the courts of the United States, are void.

The fourth relates to powers granted by the States to the general government, and that what the States hold as property the government is bound to defend as such.

The fifth is against the government making any distinction of property in the territories, but to recognize the rights of the citizens of the several States.

The sixth states that the slaveholding States will not submit to the enactment by Congress of any law imposing onerous conditions upon their removing with their property to the territories.

The seventh states that the warfare against the right of the citizens of the slaveholding States to enter the territories with their property, is a war upon the constitution.

The eighth declares that if Congress would legislate upon these constitutional principles, it would remove the embarassments under which the country is now laboring.

The ninth relates to Texas, and says that if this principle was recognized, it would deprive the question between Texas and the United States of its sectional character.

The tenth, that the recognition of the principle of the resolutions would infuse the principle of conciliation into the discussion of the great question, and be a guaranty of an early and satisfactory termination.

The eleventh recommends that if the majority in Congress refuse to recognize the constitutional rights we assert, then let the territories be treated as property, and divided between the sections of the Union, and we are ready to acquiesce in adopting the line of 36 30, extending to the Pacific Ocean.

The twelfth expresses the opinion that the controversy should be ended either by a recognition of the constitutional rights of the South, or an equitable partition of the territories; that it is a humiliating spectacle to see the States quarreling over the events of a war in which the American arms were crowned with glory. They add, that the termination of this controversy by the disruption of the confederacy would be a climax to the shame which attaches to the difficulty, and which it is the duty of Congress to avoid.

The thirteenth hopes Congress will not adjourn until it has arranged the controversy; and, as the question is before Congress, the convention are not disposed to discuss the method of doing so.

General Intelligence.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK.

In Senate. THIRD-DAY, June 4.

The Senate was occupied with Mr. Bradbury's resolution of inquiry respecting removals by the President, in the course of which Mr. Webster spoke against the resolution. He argued that the Executive, as an independent branch of the Government, ought to exercise the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution, without the interference of the legislative authority. The Senate has, he maintained, no right to call upon the President for the reasons which have induced him to discharge the duties conferred upon him in this or in that manner, any more than the President has to call upon the Senate for its reasons. Moreover, Gen. Taylor had been guilty of no proscription, and there was less reason to complain of improper removals under his administration than under any before it.

House of Representatives.

Mr. Schneck, of Ohio, asked leave to offer the following:—

"Ordered, That inasmuch as the Committee of Ways and Means has not yet reported the annual appropriation bill for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the next fiscal year, beginning on the 30th of June, but have neglected and failed to report the same for more than four months beyond the time fixed by the positive rules, they be instructed and directed to report the said bill, and such other appropriation bills as have not been brought in this session, without farther delay."

Objection being made, the House refused to suspend the rules. Vote 51 to 60.

In Senate. FOURTH-DAY, June 5.

Mr. Yulee moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the President's Message, sent in a day or two since, relative to the recent Cuba expedition, for the purpose of having it referred. If a debate should arise upon the motion, he would not press it. He had examined the correspondence transmitted with the Message, and believed the course of the Executive had been, in many particulars, very violative of the rights of citizens, and usurpative of power not conceded by the Constitution or laws.

Mr. Webster asked how the Senator from Florida could expect the motion to pass without debate, after the remarks which he made, so strongly denunciatory of the President's course, which he (Mr. W.) and others were prepared to defend and vindicate. The intimation of the Senator, that there might not be any farther debate, reminded him of a clergyman in New England, who knew little of the affairs of the world, and who, being engaged in a lawsuit, and having listened to the argument of his own eminent counsel on his own side of the case, and before the opposite party had been heard, exclaimed: "There is no need of further argument; let the jury go right out and bring in their verdict." [Great laughter.]

Mr. Bradbury endeavored to get up his resolution in relation to removals from office. Mr. Clay hoped it would not be taken up. Did any body suppose, if the resolution should be passed, that it would receive any other answer than that the President's views of the Constitution did not authorize the Senate to make any such inquiry of him? Why, then, waste the time of the Senate upon a matter which would amount to nothing, effect nothing, when a question of so much importance to the union and harmony of the States was pending? After further debate, the motion to take up the resolution was laid upon the table. The Senate then resumed the consideration of the Omnibus bill. The question being then taken on Mr. Chase's proposition, (which provides that nothing in Mr. Davis' amendment shall be construed so as to authorize the introduction of slavery into the Territories,) it was rejected by yeas 25, and nays 30. The question was then taken on Jefferson Davis' amendment, (which proposes to permit the Territorial Legislatures to pass such laws as may be necessary for the protection of property of every kind, which may have been, or may hereafter be, introduced in said territories, conformably to the Constitution and laws of the United States,) which was rejected—yeas 24, nays 31. Mr. Seward moved to amend the thirty-eighth section, by adding the provisions of the Wilmot Proviso, which was rejected, by yeas 23, nays 33. Mr. Berrien moved to amend the tenth section, so as to strike out from the clause restricting the Territorial Legislature from passing any law in respect to African slavery, and substituting therefor the words, "in respect to the establishing or prohibiting," which was adopted—yeas 30, nays 24. Mr. Hale moved to amend the section, as amended, by inserting after the word "prohibiting," the word "allowing." His object was to prevent the Legislatures from assuming that slavery already exists in the Territories, and legislating upon that assumption. Mr. Foote and Mr. Butler opposed the amendment, as going over ground already covered by the words "establishing," or "prohibiting." The amendment was rejected—yeas 21, nays 36. Mr. Chase moved to strike out the words, "prohibiting African"—upon which the yeas and nays were refused, and the amendment was rejected without a count. Mr. Douglass moved to strike out the entire restriction in relation to slavery, which was rejected—yeas 21, nays 33.

House of Representatives.

The House went into Committee on the California question, when various opinions were advanced without any vote being taken, or any decisive result.

In Senate. FIFTH-DAY, June 6.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the Omnibus bill. The question pending when the Senate adjourned yesterday was upon an amendment by Mr. Walker, to abolish Peonage, which Mr. Dayton had moved to amend, by restricting its operation to Peonage growing out of future contracts. Mr. Seward demanded the yeas and nays on the latter amendment, and said he should vote for abolishing Peon servitude; it was time, as had been said by Mr. Clay; the Senate had been six months endeavoring to admit California, and he had been all the days of these long months trying to arrest and prevent African slavery; having failed in that, he deemed it not beneath their consideration to arrest and prevent the slavery of the Indian race, the curse inflicted upon that race by Spain. It was said that the Senate did not know enough to act upon the question, but they knew enough to subvert the free Constitution of New Mexico and give it another; they ought then to know enough to give it a Constitution to abolish slavery; they certainly knew that Peon servitude was slavery; it was slavery either voluntary or involuntary; slavery created either by law or by contract; if by law, the law was vicious, void, and ought to be abolished; if by contract, the contract was void, for he held these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, and have certain inalienable rights, and among these rights is liberty. A desultory debate ensued upon the amendment, it being objected that Peonage is a municipal regulation, altogether a contract, of which the Senate knew nothing—which they could not meddle with to advantage, and which ought to be left entirely to the Legislatures of the Territories. The question being taken on Mr. Dayton's amendment, it was rejected—yeas 23, nays 26. The question recurring on Mr. Walker's amendment, Mr. Dickinson said that he should vote against it, because it was calculated to embarrass the bill, and the subject was one that should be left to the discretion and intelligence of the Legislatures of the Territories. The amendment was then rejected—yeas 20, nays 32.

House of Representatives.

In the House, Mr. Robinson attempted unsuccessfully to fix the hour of meeting at 11 A. M. instead of noon, and Mr. Otis got through a resolution proposing to allow foreign vessels to unload at our ports. After this the stream of talk on the California question was continued through the day by Messrs. Tuck, Dimmick, Bowie, and Dickey, so much to the satisfaction of the representatives of the people, that at about 4 in the afternoon they took a recess till evening, in order to prepare themselves for a second course of the same.

In Senate. SIXTH-DAY, June 7.

The Omnibus bill was taken up. Mr. Clemens moved to amend it so as to make it recognize the claim of Texas to New Mexico east of the Rio Grande, and so as to set apart all of that territory north of latitude 34° for the use of the Indians. On this motion an interesting debate sprung up. Mr. Clay sustained the Compromise against the amendment. Messrs. Rusk and Jeff. Davis defended the validity of the Texan claim, and Mr. Webster argued that that claim could be decided by the Supreme Court, the United States and Texas being the parties to a suit for the purpose; however, he was not in favor of that way of settling political questions; he preferred to dispose of them by compromise. The amendment was finally lost, only 17 ultra Southerners voting in its favor, to 37 from all other sections and of all parties who voted against it.

House of Representatives.

The House had a general discussion of the California question, without any decisive result.

In Senate. SEVENTH-DAY, June 8.

Mr. Benton's resolutions, instructing the Committee on Finance to inquire into the expediency of refunding to California the moneys collected from her citizens as duties on imports, was passed.

After the consideration of the morning business, the Senate took up the Omnibus bill. Mr. Davis of Miss. here addressed the Senate in opposition to the entire proposition for settling the boundary of Texas, by any of the modes proposed. Where did the United States get the power to purchase the territory, and where did Texas derive the authority to sell? He contended that the thing was wrong, and the result of the pending propositions, if agreed to, would only be to rob the South of a large portion of territory, unquestionably belonging to, and suited for, slave territory. These remarks drew out a repetition of former discussions upon the necessity and propriety of compromising the questions in agitation, in the course of which Mr. Foote triumphantly announced the defeat, death, burial, and extermination of Free-Soilism, and predicted the speedy settlement of all the controverted questions of the day, and the overthrow and destruction of demagogues by thousands. Mr. Hale of N. H. responded in a tone of pungent irony, expressing his sincere thanks to Mr. Foote, for having come out fairly and squarely and declared that he would not go for this measure, if he supposed it would add a foot of free soil. Mr. Dawson of Ga. went into a castigation of Mr. Hale, intimating that he had mounted the free soil hobby for interested purposes, and reading from a letter, published several years ago, by Rev. Mr. Storer, in a paper called the Star, for the purpose of showing that Mr. Hale, at that time, took decided ground against abolitionism. The letter states that Mr. Hale, at the close of an address by Mr. Storer, arose and denounced abolitionism in no measured terms, as well as declared the blacks to be beasts in human form, unfit to live free. He also read an editorial from the Dover (N. H.) Gazette, which, he intimated, was then under the control of Mr. Hale, in which, also, the abolitionists are handled with much severity, and an abolition lecturer, named Thompson, is threatened with a law found inside of pine, and outside of goose, or, in other terms, a coat of tar and feathers. Mr. Dawson thought the position taken by Mr. Hale at that time honorable, creditable, and worthy of the good heart which he knew he possessed. He only alluded to this history now for the purpose of suggesting to the Senator, that having once held such views, and changed his own sentiments, he should have more consideration and charity for those who then thought with him, and whose views had not changed. Mr. Hale admitted the general accuracy of the statement made by the Rev. Mr. Storer, and that within fifteen years his sentiments had changed, and proceeded to defend himself with considerable force against the aspersions upon his course. After which the Senate adjourned.

House of Representatives.

The House had under consideration the interminable California question, but as their efforts as yet have only resulted in words, words, and a large part of these referring to personal matters, we pass them over. They are to commence voting on the 11th, when we shall probably have some thing of a more decisive character.

IN SENATE. SECOND-DAY, June 10.

The prominent feature of this day was a speech from Col. Benton in favor of postponing the farther consideration of the Compromise Bill until the 4th of March next. He was followed by Mr. Hale in reply to personal remarks of Mr. Dawson of Ga.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Evans of Maryland, made an ineffectual attempt to rescind the resolution for the termination of the debate on the California question. Afterward the California Bill was discussed in Committee of the whole by Messrs. Meade, Bowden, Gentry, and others.

IN SENATE THIRD-DAY, June 11.

Mr. Cass made a speech on the Compromise Bill in reply to Mr. Benton. He was answered by Mr. Dayton, who gave way for a motion to adjourn.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Howard of Texas, and McDowell of Va., made Southern speeches on the California question, occupying the attention of the House till 10 o'clock, the time fixed for commencing to vote. Then occurred a scene of confusion designed by the Southern members to prevent a vote being taken. Adjourned without any vote.

[The manner in which the voting on California opens, indicates that a long and angry controversy is to be expected. The spirit of disunion is said to be rapidly growing in Congress.]

EUROPEAN NEWS.

By the arrival of the steamer America at Boston, and the Atlantic at this port, we have European intelligence up to the 29th of May. Affairs in that part of the world are far from being in a calm and settled state. England has had a serious misunderstanding with several of the powers upon the Greek question. The French Ambassador has been withdrawn, which excited some alarm and produced a sensible effect upon the money market, but they soon rallied and the belief was general that the movement on the part of France was a mere ruse of Ministers to enable them to carry the new electoral law. Russia has declared that the manner of protection required for English subjects in foreign countries, carries with it such inconvenience, that Russia and Austria will not henceforth grant the liberty of residence to English subjects, except on condition of their renouncing the protection of their Government. France is in a high state of excitement in consequence of the introduction by Ministers of a new Electoral bill to restrict the right of suffrage, the effect of which will be, if passed, to deprive some millions of Frenchmen of the right of voting at the elections. The discussions upon the bill produced the greatest excitement—the Hall was densely crowded, and an enormous number of petitions from all parts of France against the bill were sent in. Gen. Cavaignac has made a powerful speech against the bill, as contrary to the letter and spirit of the Constitution, which requires as its first principle the right of universal suffrage, and the bill was not to regulate, but to destroy that right; it was also inexpedient, ill-timed and dangerous, and would excite a fearful opposition. Victor Hugo delivered a glowing panegyric upon universal suffrage. M. De Montalembert gave the legitimate argument in favor of the bill, and Emanuel Arago replied to him. In a preliminary vote, the Ministers had a majority—471 to 239. It is generally believed that the Cabinet are waiting for an opportunity for suspending the law, and placing the country under the yoke of the army; that they desire a disturbance as a pretext for declaring martial law. It is said the two branches of the Bourbons are reconciled. Henry V. is to mount the throne of France, extending to the Rhine. Austria is to give up as much of Lombardy as she can conveniently guard, to form a kingdom for one of the Orleans family. The Pope is accused of attempting to break from Rome, and again wishing to place himself under the protection of Austria, but is too closely watched by the French. Unless the Pope yields to liberal institutions, there is reason to apprehend that the Papal Government is near its end. There was an attempt to kill the King of Prussia, made at Potsdam, by a Sergeant of Artillery, who fired a pistol at him, and inflicted a wound in the arm. At the latest dates the symptoms were rather unfavorable, fever and inflamation having set in. There is a better prospect of a Federal Union of Germany, the preliminaries having been agreed upon, Enfert, the King of Prussia, to be at the head. Austria, having failed in her opposition, began to bluster, and would do more but for the discovery that her treasury was exhausted. Kossuth's children have been allowed to go to him. From China, the chief news is, that one Emperor is dead, and that another has succeeded him. The Foreign Consuls at Shanghai received from the authorities there, on the 20th of March, an official notice that his majesty the Emperor had departed upon the great journey, and had mounted upward on a dragon, to be a guest on high. Her M. S. Crew sloop Reynard has succeeded in capturing and destroying 30 more pirates.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.—The steamship Canada arrived at Halifax on the 11th, with news from Europe to June 1st—three days later. Lord John Russell has obtained leave to bring in his bill, which was rejected by the Lords at the last session, to enable Baron Rothschild to take his seat for the City of London. The Russian Ambassador has been recalled from the Court of St. James. The decision in the Gorham case has been postponed till the 10th of June. A shocking murder took place in Culloville, Armagh county, Ireland, recently. The victim was Robert Mauleover, the agent of the Rev. Mr. Hamilton, who was attacked by some of the tenants, who beat his head to pieces with stones. Emigration from Ireland is perceptibly falling off. The crops, generally, are looking extremely well.

FROM HAVANA.—The apprehended difficulty between Capt. Randolph, of the Albany frigate, and the Spanish ship which took a body of prisoners from Contoy Island, has passed away. The Spaniards were about to deliver them, but the arrival of Capt. Tatnall in the Saranac resulted in their being carried to Havana, where they are now in prison. [Tribune.

The State Department at Washington has received information of the murder, on March 12, between Durango and Mazatlan, of Dr. Richard Thompson, supposed to belong in the State of New York. The information comes from Mr. Parrott, U. S. Consul at Mazatlan.

RIOT AT PANAMA.—A fatal riot took place at Panama on the 18th ult., between the native inhabitants and a body of American citizens, in which two of the Americans and as many natives were killed, while several on both sides were wounded more or less severely. At the last advices the trouble was over and all was quiet. There can be no doubt our countrymen were the aggressors. Whether from delay on the part of the authorities to execute the law by the arrest of a robber and the restitution of his booty, or from a vagrant desire to enforce their rights with their own hands, they seized the culprit, examined him, and were proceeding to recover the lost money, when the natives beset them under the idea that they were going to hang their prisoner, and thus the fight took place. In all this the blame belongs to the Americans first, though their offense is somewhat palliated by the want of efficiency on the part of the authorities. It is quite probable that further difficulties will occur between our California adventurers and the people of New Grenada. The two races do not get on well together, especially where the former has among its representatives a considerable proportion of unscrupulous, quarrelsome and ruffianly characters.

CUBAN AFFAIRS.—From all the information which we have received from Havana, by various sources of intelligence—via New Orleans, Charleston, Washington, and by steamer direct—we have no longer any doubt that the Cuba invasion, insurrection, &c., is all settled; and so effectually, that there is no probability of any further attempts at invasion for the next ten years. The only issue now existing between this Government and that of Cuba, is in reference to those prisoners taken by the Cubans at Woman's Island, a portion of Mexican Yucatan, and, as lately reported, in vessels on the high sea. These prisoners are now confined on board a Spanish ship of war, in the harbor of Havana, and are undergoing a trial by Spanish law. Long ere this, the Captain General of Cuba has received the ultimatum of Mr. Clayton, and we may feel assured he will not be guilty of so suicidal a policy towards Spain, as to harm a hair of the head of these prisoners. The whole matter will probably be amicably settled in a few weeks, and these men will return to their homes. [Herald.

NEWS FROM THE FAR WEST.—Recent advices from Council Bluffs state that the California Emigrants at St. Joseph, Kanesville, and other points, had, with few exceptions, left for the plains. The first Mormon train, consisting of 100 wagons and between 600 and 800 persons, would leave Kanesville for Salt Lake about the 1st inst. Alarming reports relative to Small Pox and Cholera, almost daily reached the frontier and the small towns from the emigrants on the plains. These reports were mostly brought in by emigrants who were returning discouraged, and were not generally believed. A party of six emigrants, recently returned, report that Sullivan's Company, from Brunswick, with the exception of three, has fallen victims to the Cholera. The California Caravan extended between 200 and 250 miles, and always in sight of each other. Grass and water were quite abundant.

FROM SANTA FE.—A telegraphic dispatch to the N. Y. Tribune, dated Washington, June 3, says that Governor Washington, of New Mexico, arrived on Saturday night, bringing important news from Santa Fé. I learn that not long before he left, a public meeting was held, to consider the boundary question and the claim of Texas, when a hot dispute arose between a number of citizens and Texans. The meeting resulted in a fearful riot, which was about to end in a general fight, when the officer commanding the garrison ordered the troops to interfere and prevent bloodshed, which was done, though not without difficulty. A great excitement prevails in the city, the people of which declare that they will oppose to the utmost, the attempt to force upon them the authority and laws of Texas.

FROM CALIFORNIA.—Ten days later news from California has come to hand since our last. The Legislature adjourned, after a session of about one hundred days, during which time they passed 143 acts, nearly all of which were distinctly necessary to the thorough organization of the State Government. The accounts from the mines continue as cheering as ever. Trinity City attracts a constant flow of emigration northward, and additional harbors have been discovered on the Coast. The people are as patient as could be expected under the circumstances, and while their attachment to the Union remains unchanged, they are not to be swerved from the just and dignified stand they have taken in favor of their Free Soil and Free Constitution.

SUMMARY.

We learn from the Montreal Herald, that during a heavy gale on Lake St. Peter, a number of rafts were broken up, and some twelve or fifteen persons lost their lives. The steamer America went to the assistance of the raftsmen, and succeeded in rescuing thirty of them. Lake St. Peter is between Montreal and Quebec, and is considered the most dangerous part of the St. Lawrence during a heavy gale.

In a suit brought against the City Bank of Montreal, on a two dollar note, of which payment had been refused on the ground that it had been cut and mutilated by some party, with a view of making, by a certain combination of pieces, a larger number of notes than was originally issued, Judge Bruneau of the Circuit Court, after a day's deliberation, gave judgment in favor of the Bank.

A silk factory is about to be established in Chelsea, Mass., by Mr. Vogel, a Swiss silk manufacturer. He has purchased six acres of land for the erection of the buildings. Ribbons, vestings, and figured silks, or raised work, only, are to be manufactured. They are designed to be equal in quality and richness to imported goods. The States pay every year upwards of twenty millions of dollars for silk goods.

It is said that five United States soldiers were branded on the hip with the letter D., and flogged, a few days since, at the Newport barracks. Russia has thrown away its knout, and Turkey its bastinado, and do we still cling to our searing irons?

MISSIONARIES FOR CALIFORNIA.—Among the passengers for California on board the Crescent City, which sailed on the 1st inst., were three Baptist clergymen and a femal teacher. Two of the clergymen are accompanied by their wives. They go out under the patronage of the American Baptist Home Mission Society.

Mr. Clay had an attack of illness in church on the 9th, a chill and cholera morbus, so severe that he had to be carried out of church. He was so far recovered on the 10th as to be able to be in his seat a short time. The announcement of Mr. Clay's illness has been received with very deep regret by the community at large.

The steamship Philadelphia, from Chagres arrived at New York on the 30th May, with $520,750 in gold dust. She brought news of the capture of a slaver near Kingston, Jamaica, with two hundred Africans on board, by Her Majesty's schooner Bermuda.

A burglary was prevented at MauchChunk recently by a Mrs. Twining, wife of an agent of the Beaver Meadow Company, who seeing the rascal at the window, seized a pistol with which she drove him down, and then summoned a domestic who arrested and punished him.

Several peach growers have told the editor of the Elkton (Md.) Democrat that there is a prospect of an extraordinary yield this season. They will be under the necessity of thinning them out, to save their trees from giving way under the pressure of their crops.

From the best sources of information in the possession of the city officers, it is estimted that the winter population of Boston is 140,000. The official records give the average, sixteen births, five marriages, and ten deaths daily.

The New Orleans Bulletin of Friday, May 31, says that a large body of men who were collected there, intended for the invasion of Cuba, disbanded on the 28th, on hearing of the flight of Gen. Lopez.

The votes of tax-payers in Toronto, Canada, have been taken on the proposal for the corporation to invest $400,000 in the Toronto and Lake Huron Railroad. The proposition was rejected by a large majority—668 against, and 196 for it.

It is rumored that the Governor of South Carolina has tendered the appointment of U. S. Senator, in the place of the late Hon. Franklin H. Elmore, to Hon. Robert S. Barnwell.

The Secretary of the U. S. Treasury has received ten eagles from some repentant Galphinizer, whose conscience now stimulates him to restitution.

MARRIED.

In Whitestown, N. Y., June 5th, by Eld. Geo. B. Utter, Mr. GURDON EVANS to Miss ADELAIDE C. WILCOX.

In Genesee, N. Y., on the 25th ult., by Eld. James Bailey, Mr. BENJAMIN F. GREEN to Miss FRANCES ROGERS.

At Darien, N. Y., May 20th, 1850, by Lyman Kidder Esq., Mr. WHITING CHAPPEL, of Allegany Co., N. Y. to Miss PHIDELIA CLARK, of the former place.

DIED.

At Charlestown, R. I., on the 3d inst., JOSEPH TAYLOR, Esq., in the 72d year of his age. The deceased leaves behind a widow and five children to mourn the loss of a kind husband and indulgent father. "A father to the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation." Ps. 68: 5.

At her residence, in Hopkinton, R. I., April 16th, Widow WAITY LANGWORTHY, in the 73d year of her age. She was a member of the 2d Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton. Her last sickness was characterized by Christian patience and resignation to the Divine will, and she departed in strong hope of a blessed immortality and eternal life. She has left a large circle of relatives to mourn her departure; not, however, as those that mourn without hope. J. G.

In Wirt N. Y., on the 31st ult., EDWIN LANGWORTHY, aged 28 years, son of Asa Langworthy, of Genesee. Some years since he united with the Church in Genesee, but afterwards became skeptical. In his last sickness he recovered from his skepticism, and his friends believe that he died in peace. He has left a wife and one child.

Christian Psalmody—Pocket Edition.

IN compliance with requests from various quarters, the publisher of the New Hymn Book—Christian Psalmody—has issued a second edition, on lighter paper and with smaller margins, by which the bulk and weight of the books are reduced about one-third, rendering them much more convenient for carrying in the pocket. The price is also reduced 12½ cents per copy. Those wishing books, of either edition, can now be supplied. Price of the larger edition from 75 cents to $1 50, according to the style of binding. Price of the smaller dition from 62½ cents to $1 00. Orders should be addressed to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

New York and Albany Steamboats.

THE steamers OREGON, Capt. A. P. St. John, and ISAAC NEWTON, Capt. W. H. Peck, form a daily line between New York and Albany—through without landing—from pier foot of Cortland street.

The Oregon leaves New York every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, at 6 o'clock P. M.

The Isaac Newton leaves New York every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, at 6 o'clock P. M.

New York and Erie Railroad.

THE Trains on the Erie Railroad run as follows, (Sundays excepted):—Morning Train for Elmira, Corning, and intermediate places, leaves the pier foot of Duane-st. daily at 7 A. M., arriving the same evening. Evening Train for Elmira, Corning, Jefferson, Geneva, Rochester, Buffalo, and the intermediate places, leaves at 4 P. M, arriving at Buffalo the next evening. Fare to Geneva, $6 50; to Rochester, $8 15; to Buffalo, $10 35. Passengers for Ithaca and Cayuga Lake take the cars of the Cayuga and Susquehannah R. R. at Owego. Passengers for Tioga and Lycoming counties, Pa., take the cars of the Corning and Blossburg R. R. at Corning. A Way Train leaves Port Jervis for New York, at 6 A. M. and returns at 4 P. M.

JAMES P. KIRKWOOD, Superintendent.

Central Railroad of New Jersey.

Summer Arrangement, commencing April 1, 1850.

PASSENGER TRAIN UP.—Passengers will leave New York by steamboat from pier 1 North River, or by the New Jersey Railroad, foot of Cortland-st., at 9 A. M. and 5 P. M.; leave Elizabethtown at 10 A. M. and 6 P. M.

PASSENGER TRAIN DOWN.—Leave White House at 5.45 A. M. and 1.45 P. M.; North Branch at 5.55 A. M. and 1.55 P. M.; Somerville at 6.10 A. M. and 2.10 P. M.; Bound Brook at 6.20 A. M. and 2.20 P. M.; Plainfield at 6.40 A. M. and 2.40 P. M.; Westfield at 6.55 A. M. and 3 P. M.; Elizabethtown at 7.15 and 10.30 A. M. and 3.20 P. M.

The freight train (with passenger cars attached) will leave White House at 3.30 A. M., Somerville at 4.30, Plainfield at 5.15, and Elizabethport, by steamboat, at 7.30 A. M. Returning, leave New York, by steamboat Red Jacket, from pier 1 North River, at 1 P. M.

Eclectic Magazine for the Year 1850.

THE Eclectic Magazine of Foreign Literature, Science, and Art, aims to present to its readers a complete survey of the whole field of British Periodical Literature, comprising the selections of all the articles of the most able and celebrated Reveiws, Magazines, and Journals, which have any interest or value to American readers. It not only contains the articles which are desirable in those periodicals reprinted in this country, but in the far greater variety of able and popular Reveiws, Magazines, &c., which form so splendid an element of the literature of the day, and which are inaccessible to the mass of American readers, except by some such medium as the Eclectic Magazine. By omitting what is merely local in interest or feeble in character, the ample size of the Eclectic Magazine enables the editor to embody all that is really desirable in the whole range of journalism. As only the best articles of each periodical are selected, it is evident that the contents of the Eclectic Magazine must be superior to those of any one, however great or celebrated; and, taken together, must constitute a more desirable and able body of periodical literature than can be found elsewhere in the same compass.

Each number is embellished with a suberb steel engraving, from the well-known burin of Mr. Sartain, of subjects of elevated character and general interest, including portraits of distinguished living authors and celebrities, making twelve rich and elegant prints in a year.

TERMS.

The Eclectic Magazine is issued on the first of every month, in numbers of 144 large 8vo. pages each, on fine paper, making three volumes a year, with title-pages and indexes. Price $5 per year, if paid strictly in advance—otherwise invariably $6.

Miscellaneous.

STATISTICS OF SLAVERY AND FREEDOM.

Among the able speeches made in the House of Representatives upon the Slavery Question, that of Hon. Charles E. Clarke, of this State, is one of the best. It is a calm, forcible and vivid exposition of the law and policy of the matter. We extract from it the following striking and conclusive statistics:—

The area of Virginia is 61,352 square miles. The area of New York is 46,000. If the States of Vermont and Massachusetts were added to New York, their joint area would be 72 square miles less than that of Virginia alone. The soil of Virginia is naturally as fertile as that of New York, her resources of the forest as great, her mineral resources at least equal, her fisheries vastly more valuable, her hydraulic power as great, her position for commerce and her natural channels of commerce better, her climate is immeasurably superior.

In 1790, the population of Virginia was 748,308, of which 203,427 were slaves. The population of New York 340,120 of which 21,324 were slaves. Virginia had 226,085 more white inhabitants than New York, and 182,103 more slaves. In short Virginia, in 1790, had 408,188 more inhabitants than New York.

In New York the number of slaves gradually diminished till 1820, when slavery became extinct.

In Virginia, slaves rapidly increased, till in 1840 they numbered 448, 987, and her white population numbered 790,510. In all, bond and free, 1,239,797; while the free white population of New York had increased to 2,428,921—a difference in the increase of the whole number of 1,596,312, and a difference in the increase of free white inhabitants of 1,864,191 in fifty years.

In that period Virginia has made 381 miles of railroad; New York about 1,000. Virginia has made about 182 miles of canal; New York about 850 miles.

The school fund in New York is	$6,491,803
That of Virginia	1,488,261
The productive public property of N. Y. is	39,136,992
The productive public property of Va. is	6,107,364
The domestic produce exported by N. Y. in 1848 amounted to	38,771,209
The domestic produce exported by Virginia the same year amounted to	3,679,948
New York exported of foreign produce	14,579,948
Virginia exported of foreign produce	1,554

Virginia, the mother of the Presidents, the Old Dominion, larger and of greater natural capacity than New York, Vermont and Massachusetts combined, exported, in the year of grace, 1848, to the amazing amount of $1,554—about in the ratio of 100 to 1,000,000.

The registered and enrolled tonnage of Virgina, in 1848, was 128,364 tons; that of New York, 845,742 tons—717,378 tons difference. The State of New York paid to this Government for postage in the year ending June 30, 1849, $694,532 81. The State of Virginia paid in the same year for postage $109,301 93. The transportation of the mail in New York cost the Government in the same year $238,530; in Virginia, $166,130. New York pays in postage $456,002 more than it costs to transport the mail in that State. Virginia pays in postage $56,833 less than it costs to transport the mail in Virginia—a difference between these two States of $512,835 in one year. Virginia does not pay for the transportation of the mail within $56,832. There are but three slave States—Delaware, Missouri, and Louisiana—that do pay their own postage. It costs this Government to transport the mail in the slave States $519,438 15 more than those States pay in postage. There are twelve States in the Union from which bounty lands have been distributed for the service in the Mexican war—Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Alabama, Iowa, Mississippi, Louisiana, Michigan, Arkansas, Wisconsin and Florida. Six of these States are free, six slaveholding. The area of the six slaveholding States is 323,146, that of the six free States is 290,259 square miles—32,887 square miles more in the six slave than in the six free States. These six slave States have a better climate, and better located, are as fertile, and have greater natural advantages than the six free States.

There have been located in those States for military services in the Mexican war up to March 28, 1850, 41,780 land warrants, of which 34,434 have been located in the six free, and only 7,346 in the slave States—about six to one. The soldier who locates his land with a view of being a freeholder, and having a farm and a home, the speculator, who buys to sell again, rush, full gallop to the free State—they flee from the slave State as they would from the cholera.

AN ACCOMPLISHED JAIL BREAKER.

Estelle, the convict, who escaped from the Jeffersonville Penitentiary a few days since, says the Louisville Courier, has been recaptured.

The feats of the renowned Baron Trenck, Dick Turpin, and Jack Sheppard are all thrown in the shade by the extraordinary achievements of Estelle in making his escape. The obstacles that were to be surmounted, to to an ordinary mind, would appear perfectly unsurmountable. Nothing but the most consummate ingenuity, coupled with the most untiring peseverance, could have overcome these.

The cell from which Estelle made his escape is one of the large sizes of cells, which are formed of small openings into a wall of solid masonry, guarded by iron doors, within the main walls of the prison building.

The door of each cell opens into a gallery of the prison, which is kept constantly lighted, and is guarded during the night by two watchmen. A few feet from the end of the gallery a pair of massive folding doors open into the prison yard. These doors are closed and barred by powerful iron levers, which pass through the front wall into the keeper's room, so that they may be opened or shut at his pleasure.

Estelle, to reach these levers, after passing from his cell by means of a key which he had forged for the occasion, was compelled to brave the argus eyes of the watchmen in the gallery, and work, with some ingenious tools which he had constructed, at the heavy iron and massive oak doors which barred the only opening from the main prison into the keeper's room. These he succeeded in opening with such consummate skill that he did not awaken either of the two additional guardians, who were sleeping in the outer hall on each side of the very doors on which he had been working! With extraordinary intrepidity he worked the levers to open the outer doors of the main building, and after stealing the clothes and watch of one of his unconscious guardians, from under his head, he passed back into the main prison and escaped to the prison yard!

But here was another formidable obstacle to surmount. He still had to scale the high walls of the prison yard. But he was prepared for this emergency. He had a large iron hook, wrapped with twine to deaden the sound, which was attached to a long rope. This he threw over the top of the wall, and after climbing up on the inner side, let himself down on the outer side.

It is impossible to tell where or when he found an oppurtunity to conceal the materials out of which he manufactured his keys, rope, and other implements, or how he could have wrought upon them without detection.

DISCOVERY OF THE SOURCES OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

The St. Paul (Minnesota) Chronicle and Register, in quite an elaborate and very interesting article on the Mississippi River, embracing a mention of the discovery of its mouth, and an account of subsequent explorations upon its shores, details with some particularity the final ascertainment of its main source, Lake Itasca, by Mr. Schoolcraft in the year 1832. This was more than 300 years after the period in which its outlet into the Gulf of Mexico was first discovered by the Spaniards.

Mr. Schoolcraft had been a zealous and active member of the expedition in search of the sources of the Father of Waters, under Gen. Cass in 1820, and well understood the work he had to perform, when he started out with his company to resume the exploration. The Chronicle and Register says:

"He began at the precise point where Pike in 1806, and Cass in 1820 had dropt it. He reached the large island in upper Red Cedar or Cassina Lake, early in July of that year, where he encamped his escort of soldiers, extra men, and heavy baggage, and taking five small hunting canoes with Indian guides and steersmen, he traced the Mississippi, through all its involutions and expanding lakes and rapids, by its longest branch to its most remote source in Itasca Lake. About 45 miles above the Red Cedar, he reached the summit of the Crosswater or Lac Traverse—a large and beautiful lake, surrounded with maples and other hard wood. He found the river to fall, by a series of small rapids, 46 feet aggregate in this distance. The north end or head of this lake, was ascertained to be the most northerly point of the main channel of the Mississippi. It is in latitude 47° 28′ 36″. The traveler or voyager, above this point, ascends exclusively south or west to its source.

"In the course of four or five miles above Lac Traverse, the Pamidjeguma, or Crosswater of the Chippewa, the Mississippi has its primary forks. Schoolcraft took the shortest or left hand fork, leading through Lake Plantagenet, to its source in Assawa or Perch Lake—a route by which he avoided many rapids. From this lake he crossed the highlands of the Hauteur des Terres, the men carrying his five small two-fathom canoes and baggage on their backs. The utmost altitude of this above the ocean is 1680 feet. In this route, in which every one carried something, he was accompanied by the late Dr. Houghton and Col. Allen, (then Lieut. Allen,) of the Army, two gentlemen who subsequently distinguished themselves in their several departments, and by Mr. Bentwell, a clergyman from New Hampshire, and Mr. John Stone, of Michigan; with Ozawindib, or Yellow Head, a Chippewa chief, as the principal guide. After passing about six miles over fallen timber and bog, now passing through close thickets, and then ascending lofty sand hills, covered with dwarf funeral looking pine (the Pinus bansiamus) he reached Itasca Lake, the actual source of the longest and main fork of the Mississippi, (the Lac la Biche of the French) on the 12th of July 1832, being just 305 years after the Spanish had first, incidentally, descried its mouth. This beautiful lake, which is some five to seven miles in length, reposes amidst hills of marine sand of the drift epoch, and consists of pure springs of water, gushing out in copious rills, within a visible basin. The Indian term of Totoscha, (written Itasca in the narrative) and denoting a characteristic property of the female breast, imparts a vivid idea in which these infant sources of the father of rivers gush from their sandy elevations. Its distance from the Gulf of Mexico he estimated at 3,160 miles—the distance from Cass lake at 125 miles, in which space it has one considerable fall, the Ka-bi-ca—and many rapids, during which there is a total descent of 119 feet. The whole journey, out and back, was 290 miles. The entire altitude of the lake above the ocean, as determined by Mr. Nicollett, 1836, is 1565 feet—which is 105 feet below the summit of the environing hills, and its altitude at Schoolcraft's Island, the only island in it, at 47° 13′ 35″ which is 25′ 11″ south of the summit of Lac Traverse. From this time the source of the Mississippi has remained a fixed fact in our geography.

"Schoolcraft hoisted a United States flag, on a firm staff, which was saluted by the Chippewas as it went up, and which he left flying, when he took his departure down the main fork of the stream—the fork to which the Indians constantly apply the name of the Mississippi."

A Novel Clearance.—The bark Florence, belonging to London, is expected to clear very soon, for that port with a cargo of wine. She lies at the U. S. Bonded Warehouses at the Atlantic Dock, where she arrived some three weeks since from Oporto, with about 300 pipes, destined for England. It seems that as a retaliatory measure, England imposes a heavy duty upon wines imported from Portugal, which the shrewd merchant subject has in large measures evaded, by taking out a clearance for the United States, where he was enabled, by the warehousing system, to put his cargo in bond, and again take it out with a clearance for her original destination. It was only necessary to transfer a sufficient portion of the cargo to the dock to afford the customs officer an unobstructed view of the lower tier of pipes, and then restore it to its former place. By this operation, Johnny Bull was "done" out of something like $4,500.

ADVENTURE IN AN AFRICAN RIVER.

BY CAPT. MARRYATT.

I manned my boats and went on shore for the ivory that was left. I found that it would take the whole day to embark, as we had to go two miles further up the river than the depth of the water would permit the vessel to do, for the ivory was in a hut close to the King's house. I had sent off four boat loads, and it being then noon I went off with the fifth myself, that I might get my dinner, leaving the second mate to attend on shore, and taking the first mate with me, who messed in the cabin. As we were in the middle of the stream, the boat struck against the trunk of a tree, as we supposed, and knocked so large a hole in the bows that she began to fill. I immediately ordered the men to pull for the nearest point, which was on the opposite side of the river, that we might ground the boat to prevent her sinking.

The first mate, who was a very active man, finding that the elephants' teeth prevented his reaching the bow of the boat, and stuffing into it some oakum which he had found in the stern sheets, sounded with the boat hook, and finding that there was not more than three feet of water, where we were pulling, jumped over the bows to put the oakum into the hole; but the poor fellow had not been a few seconds in the water when he gave a shriek, and we perceived that a shark had snapped him in two. This was a sad mishap, and the men, terrified, pulled as hard as they could, while two of them bailed out the boat to gain the shore, for we knew what fate awaited us if we sunk in the river. With great exertion we succeeded, running her up among the canes, which grow on that side of the river so thick that it was difficult to force our way through them.

We landed, up to our knees in mud, and throwing out the ivory, we found that a whole plank was rent out, and it was impossible to repair our boat; and we were hidden by the canes from those who could have assisted us had they known that we had no possible means of communication. At last I thought, that if I could force my way through the canes to the point down the river, I could hail and make signals for assistance; and desiring the men to remain by the boat, I set off upon my expedition. At first I got on pretty well, as there were little paths through the canes, made, as I imagined, by the natives; and although I was up to my knees in thick, black mud, I continued to get on pretty fast, but at last the canes grew so thick, that I could hardly force my way through them, and it was the work of excessive labor. Still I persevered, expecting each second that I should arrive at the banks of the river and be rewarded for my fatigue; but the more I labored the worse it appeared for me, and at last I became worn out and bewildered. Then I tried to find my way back, and was equally unsuccessful, and I sat down with anything but pleasant thoughts in my mind. I calculated that I had been two hours in making the attempt, and was now quite puzzled to know how to proceed. I bitterly lamented my rashness, now that it was too late.

Having reposed a little, I resumed my toil, and after an hour's exertion, was compelled from fatigue to sit down in the deep black mud. Another respite from toil, and another of more exertion, and I gave myself up for lost. The day was evidently closing in, the light overhead was not near so bright as it had been, and I knew that a night passed in the miasma of the cane was death. At last it became darker and darker. There could not be an hour of daylight remaining. I determined upon one more struggle, and reeking as I was with perspiration, and faint with fatigue, I rose again, and was forcing my way through the thickest of the canes, when I heard a deep growl, and perceived a large panther not twenty yards from me. It was on the move as well as I, attempting to force its way through the thickest of the canes, so as to come to me, I retreated from him as fast as I could, but he gained slowly on me, and my strength was fast exhausting. I thought that I heard sounds at a distance, and they became more and more distinct, but what they were my fears and struggles probably prevented me from making out. My eyes were fixed on the fierce animal who was in pursuit of me, and I now thanked God that the canes were so impassable. Still the animal evidently gained ground until it was not more than five yards from me, dashing and springing at the canes and tearing them aside with his teeth.

The sounds were now nearer, and I made them out to be the howlings of other animals. A moment's pause, and I thought it was the baying of dogs, and that I must have arrived close to where the schooner laid, and that I heard the baying of the bloodhounds. At last I could do no more, and I dropped, exhausted and almost senseless in the mud. I recollect hearing the crashing of the canes, and then the savage roar, and then yells, and growls, and struggles, and fierce contention, but I had fainted.

I must now inform the reader, that, about an hour after I had left the boat, the captain of the slaver was pulling up the river and was hailed by our men in the long boat. Perceiving them on shore on that side of the river, and that they were in distress, he pulled towards them, and they told him what had happened, and that an hour previous I had left the boat to force my way through the canes, and that they had heard nothing of me since.

"Madness!" cried he. "He is a lost man. Stay until I come back from the schooner."

He went back to the schooner, and taking two of his crew, who were negroes, and his two bloodhounds into the boat, he returned immediately, and, as soon as he landed, he put the bloodhounds on my track, and sent the negroes on with them. They had followed me in all my windings, for it appeared that I had traveled in every direction, and they had come up with me just as I had sank with exhaustion, and the panther was close upon me. The bloodhounds had attacked the panther, and this was the noise that was sounded in my ears as I lay stupefied at the mercy of the wild beast. The panther was not easily, though eventually overcome, and the black men coming up had found me, and borne me in a state of insensibility on board of the Sparrow Hawk. The fever had come on me, and it was not till three weeks afterwards that I recovered my senses, when I learned what I have told the reader.

A Giant of the Olden Time.—A human skeleton of unusal size was discovered the other day at Harsimus, New Jersey, by a Mr. Bliven, who was grading near the house of Judge Garretson. The Jersey City Telegraph says:—

"It was found about nine feet under ground, imbedded in several bushels of exceedingly large oyster shells, much larger than any to be found in our waters at the present day. They are doubtless the remains of an Indian of immense stature, as, from the appearance of the skeleton, he must have been over eight feet high. The skull measures fifteen inches from the root of the nose, over the top, to the base of the occipital bone, and is two feet in circumference; it contains a full set of excellent teeth, (except one,) very even, sound and white. Mr. Bliven informs us that he has found a great number of skeletons in that vicinity, similarly buried, (in a sitting posture,) but none as large as this.

"This mode of burial is conclusive evidence that they are remains of Indians, but when they were interred is a question for antiquarians to answer. This section of New Jersey was settled by the whites in 1624, and the 'red men,' it is not probable, remained here very long after that event."

PERIODICITY IN DISEASE.

We have been furnished, says the N. Y. Tribune, with the following extract of a letter from a lady at the West, of great practical experience in the treatment of the sick, upon the periodic changes in all diseases, announced by Dr. Dickson, of London:—

"I am pleased with Dr. D.'s views of the pathology of disease. I can testify to the chill and heat attendant on all derangements of the system. Speaking of fever, I will tell you a singular circumstance which befell a child of mine, a little boy, about four years old. He had a little dog, of which he was excessively fond. One day as he sat by the door playing with the dog, a neighbor who sometimes acts without feeling or reflection, shot the animal within a yard of the child, wounding its head in a horrible manner. The creature ran shrieking to the child, and the man was obliged to dispatch it with an axe. The agony of the child was intense; beyond anything I ever witnessed. I expected to see him die at once. Presently he commenced shaking with a violent chill, which was followed by burning fever, and a state of deep sleep, or coma. For several days his life seemed in great peril; and when he was so far recovered as to be able to resume his play, during the forenoon as soon as the time of day arrived at which his favorite was murdered, he would commence screaming, and the chill, fever and deep sleep followed. And this came upon him every day for several weeks, although I endeavored by many means to divert his mind, especially at that particular time of day. The poor fellow has never recovered the shock he thus received; and the memory will no doubt be a pain to him as long as he lives. For years the sight of any dead animal threw him into a fever."

ASYLUM FOR INEBRIATES.

Dr. Warren, of Boston, has addressed a letter to Amasa Walker, Esq., a member of the Legislature of Massachusetts, expressing his approbation of the plan for establishing an asylum for inebriates. In the course of his letter he says:—

"I attended three wealthy and respectable families, in the same vicinity, in Boston, in each of which was an only son, who became, at the age of eighteen or twenty, a decided drunkard. Each of them when conversed with admitted the horror of the situation into which habit had plunged him, but expressed a total inability to restrain himself, when exposed to temptation. Each of them agreed to submit to a confinement sufficient to break the habit. But there was no place where they could be confined, and this failing, every other effort was employed in vain. Before the age of twenty-three, one died of disease, brought on by his habits, the other by delirium tremens, and the third by convulsions. These, and a vast number of fine young men, the principal hope of their families, might have been saved by a proper confinement."

Tunneling the Alps.—Projects for boring the Alps at Mount Cenis, so as to carry through it the railroad to connect Turin with Savoy, have been often reported. This great tunnel is now likely to be undertaken. Last month, the Sardinian Minister of Public Works gave information on the subject to the Chamber of Deputies. Plans were studied, and surveys begun, as early as 1845. They have been diligently prosecuted under the direction of the able engineer who superintends the whole system of railroads. He was aided by an eminent geologist, and others versed in geognosy. The necessary machinery has been devised and approved by a suitable Committee, of which the Minister is president. The length of the tunnel will be 12,290 yards; its estimated cost 13,800,000 livres, The gulf of Genoa will be thus linked, by railroad through Turin and Savoy, with the French frontier. Orders have been given by the government for the construction in Belgium of one of the required machines. An appropriation has been asked for the construction of the other in Piedmont. [Journal of Commerce.

A Crevasse.—The St. Louis Courier of May 18th, says that the Bonne Carre Crevasse is stated to be two miles wide, eight feet deep and thirty miles long. Since the opening of the crevasse the waters of Lake Pontchartrain have remained eighteen or twenty inches above the former level, and the entire body of water has been discolored. From its debauche a current sets to the east, acquiring considerable force within a few miles of the Rigolets—three or four miles an hour. The water at the mouth of the crevasse rushes with great force from the Mississippi—sucking in floating timber, rafts, boats, &c.

It is thought that the incessant rains of the month of May, must try severely Canals, Railroads, Mill Dams, &c. The Tribune estimates the loss of property throughout the country by the floods of the month to exceed $5,000,000.

Steam at 212 degrees, fills about 1700 times the space it did as water.

Origin of a Governor.—Judge Johnston, the Whig candidate for Governor in Ohio, has a history not unlike that of Ewing and Corwin. He was kept hard at work clearing up a new farm and splitting rails until his 21st year. After that he took his place as a pupil in a common school, attended a session of the county court as a witness, became enamored of the law, obtained a situation in a law office, entered upon his professional career with gloomy prospects, soon acquired distinction by his eloquence, and lately a seat on the Supreme Court Bench for his learning. Having been nominated for Governor, he has resigned his judgship, and will electrify the people from the stump from this time on to October.

FOREIGN ITEMS.

Galguani says that a new description of robbery has lately been executed on a grand scale in Paris: A fashionably dressed young man has visited artists who make portraits by the daguerreotype, and caused his portrait to be taken, for which he duly paid; he afterward asked for a frame or for some other article which required the artist to leave the room, and during his absence he took out of the daguerreotype instrument the glass called the verre objectif, the value of which varies from 50f to 80f.

The President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford, have voted the sum of 100 guineas towards defraying the Bishop of Exeter's expenses in his process with Mr. Gorham. His Grace has accepted the vote. The Bishop is a member of Magdalen College. This is said to be the only offer of pecuniary assistance which the Bishop has accepted from the numerous friends who have proffered their aid on this occasion.

The Birmingham Journal says that a tailor living at West Broomwich has just completed a piece of fancy needle-work, consisting of upward of 4,000 pieces of cloth, sewed together with different colored silk. There are 300 figures, formed by pieces of cloth, and among them are scenes illustrative of Paradise, the death of Abel, the crucifixion, &c; beside animals, flowers, ships, bridges and fortresses.

The Worcester Journal records an anecdote of some practical jokers, who, suspecting the source of a dairyman's milk, roused him at midnight with a hurried intimation that his best cow was choking. In the morning, after milking, he visited the pump, for what purpose is not mentioned, and then the mystery was disclosed; the spout of "his best cow" was choked up with a turnip.

Mr. Ferrand said, at the close of an oration at York, on Saturday: "As I am a living man, if I were the captain of a merchant ship, and the authorities of Charleston came on board my vessel and tore one of my crew away, I would thrust a red hot iron into a barrel of gunpowder, and blow them to the devil and myself to glory."

Rev. Edward Dodd, vicar of St. Peter's, Cambridge, has been suspended for three months, and adjudged to pay the costs, for refusing to bury the corpse of one of his parishioners, on the ground that he died in a state of intoxication, of which there was no proof.

Sir Frederick Thesiger tells a very good story of Mr. George Hudson, M. P. A cidevant friend of the monarch cut him the other day in the lobby of the House of Commons, upon which his Iron Majesty, turning round exclaimed, "Hallo, you Sir, what do you mean? What do you cut me for? I 've £200,000 left!"

Letters from Dalmatia, received via Triese, announce that the City of Stagno had been utterly destroyed by frequent earthquakes and a sudden irruption of sulphurous springs. No lives were lost, as all the inhabitants left the city before it was finally destroyed.

The Scotch papers report that the jail of Rothsay has not now a single lodger. In the entire county, with a population of 17,000, there is not a single individual shut up in "durance vile;" and the Penitentiary at Perth contains only one solitary individual who was sentenced in Rothsay.

There are now in the jail of Ennis 518 prisoners, three times the number for which it was built. The great majority of the unhappy prisoners are charged with stealing turnips, potatoes, and other articles of food; about a moiety of the remainder with the crime of beggary.

The principal Jewish houses in Bavaria are about to emigrate and withdraw from the kingdom, civil and religious liberty being denied them. A large depression of the Government funds has ensued from the abstraction of their capital.

Punch says that a young thief who was charged the other day with picking pockets, demurred to the indictment, "for that, whereas he had never picked pockets but had always taken them just as they came."

During a fox hunt near Perth, the prey shot into a rocky recess, followed by the pack; and the latter being unable to extricate themselves, a shepherd crept in. Some rock fell upon him, and he was crushed to death.

A Paris letter says: A new lottery of £24,000, in favor of distressed literary men and artists, has just been officially organized under the sanction of the Government. The first prize is worth £2,000, the second £800, and so on.

During Madame Grisi's late visit to the city of St. Petersburg, a diadem of the value of 10,000 rubies was presented to her in the name of the people, and in the presence of the Emperor.

Upward of 14,000 crows have been recently destroyed by the farmers in the plantations in the vicinity of Suglismaldie, with the view to stop their terrible ravages of the young crops.

"The important crisis," said a Yankee stump orator, beginning his speech, "which were about to have arriven have arroven."

Many hundreds of agriculturul emigrants are leaving Scotland via the Clyde, for New York.

A quantity of dried and salted horseflesh has been imported into Hamburg from London.

An iron bridge, 700 feet in length, is about to be thrown across the Shannon at Athlone.

Littell's Living Age.

PROSPECTUS.—This work is conducted in the spirit of Littell's Museum of Foreign Literature, (which was favorably received by the public for twenty years,) but as it is twice as large, and appears so often, we not only give spirit and freshness to it by many things which were excluded by a month's delay, but while thus extending our scope, and gathering a greater and more attractive variety, are able so to increase the solid and substantial part of our literary, historical, and political harvest, as fully to satisfy the wants of the American reader.

The elaborate and stately Essays of the Edinburgh, Quarterly, and other Reviews; and Blackwood's noble criticisms on Poetry, his keen political Commentaries, highly wrought Tales, and vivid descriptions of rural and mountain Scenery; and the contribution to Literature, History, and Common Life, by the sagacious Spectator, the sparkling Examiner, the judicious Athenæum, the busy and industrious Literary Gazette, the sensible and comprehensive Britannia, the sober and respectable Christian Observer; these are intermixed with the Military and Naval reminiscences of the United Service, and with the best articles of the Dublin University, New Monthly, Fraser's, Tait's, Ainsworth's, Hood's, and Sporting Magazines, and of Chambers' admirable Journal. We do not consider it beneath our dignity to borrow wit and wisdom from Punch; and, when we think it good enough, make use of the thunder of The Times. We shall increase our variety by importations from the continent of Europe, and from the new growth of the British colonies.

The steamship has brought Europe, Asia, and Africa into our neighborhood; and will greatly multiply our connections, as merchants, travelers, and politicians, with all parts of the world; so that much more than ever it now becomes every intelligent American to be informed of the condition and changes of foreign countries. And this not only because of their nearer connection with ourselves, but because the nations seem to be hastening, through a rapid process of change, to some new state of things, which the merely political prophet cannot compute or foresee.

Geographical Discoveries, the progress of Colonization, (which is extending over the whole world,) and Voyages and Travels, will be favorite matter for our selections; and, in general, we shall systematically and very fully acquaint our readers with the great department of Foreign affairs, without entirely neglecting our own.

While we aspire to make the Living Age desirable to all who wish to keep themselves informed of the rapid progress of the movement—to Statesmen, Divines, Lawyers, and Physicians—to men of business and men of leisure—it is still a stronger object to make it attractive to their wives and children. We believe that we can thus do some good in our day and generation; and hope to make the work indispensable in every well-informed family. We say indispensable, because in this day of cheap literature it is not possible to guard against the influx of what is bad in taste and vicious in morals, in any other way than by furnishing a sufficient supply of a healthy character. The mental and moral appetite must be gratified.

We hope that by "winnowing the wheat from the chaff," by providing abundantly for the imagination, and by a large collection of Biography, Voyages and Travels, History, and more solid matter, we may produce a work which shall be popular, while at the same time it will aspire to raise the standard of public taste.

Terms.—The Living Age is published every Saturday; price 12½ cents a number, or six dollars a year in advance. Remittances for any period will be thankfully received and promptly attended to.

☞ To insure regularity in mailing the work, orders should be addressed to the office of publication.

Clubs, paying a year in advance, will be supplied as follows:

Four copies for	$20 00
Nine " "	40 00
Twelve " "	50 00

Complete sets, in 24 volumes, to the end of March, 1850, handsomely bound, packed in neat boxes, and delivered in all the principal cities free of expense of freight, are for sale at forty-eight dollars.

Any volume may be had separately at two dollars, bound, or a dollar and a half in numbers.

Any number may be had for 12½ cents; and it may be worth while for subscribers or purchasers to complete any broken volumes they may have, and thus greatly enhance their value.

Judge Story—Chancellor Kent—President Adams.

I have read the prospectus of "The Living Age" with great pleasure, and entirely approve the plan. If it can only obtain the public patronage long enough, and large enough, and securely enough to attain its true ends, it will contribute in an eminent degree to give a healthy tone, not only to our literature, but to public opinion. It will enable us to possess, in a moderate compass, a select library of the best productions of the age. It will do more; it will redeem our periodical literature from the reproach of being devoted to light and superficial reading, to transitory speculations, to sickly and ephemeral sentimentalities, and false and extravagant sketches of life and character. Joseph Story.

Cambridge, April 24, 1844.

I approve very much of the plan of your work, and if it be conducted with the intelligence, spirit, and taste that the prospectus indicates, (of which I have no reason to doubt,) it will be one of the most instructive and popular periodicals of the day. James Kent.

New York, May 7, 1844.

Of all the periodical journals devoted to literature and science which abound in Europe and in this country, this has appeared to me to be the most useful. It contains indeed the exposition only of the current literature of the English language, but this, by its immense extent and comprehension, includes a portraiture of the human mind in the utmost expansion of the present age.
